(2) By stepping up the contributions to a total of 6 percent of wages within 12 years enormous reserves will be built up much more rapidly than necessary and will be frozen for a generation. The committee estimates that under this bill there will be a reserve fund of over $10,000,000,000 by 1948 and the reserve will amount to over $32,000,000,000 by 1970.

(3) The unnecessary removal of so much purchasing power at this time may hamper recovery and cause great social harm. It is extremely questionable whether our economic system can stand the withdrawal of this much-needed purchasing power.

(4) The bill places a back-breaking burden upon the present generation. The present generation, as taxpayers, will not only have to pay the cost of the noncontributory-pension system for the present aged, but will be forced to provide fully for its own old age.

(5) The avowed aim of the committee to have these reserves used as a means of ultimately abolishing the evil of tax-exempt bonds is a distortion of the entire principle of social insurance. To force upon the bulk of the wage earners a compulsory system of savings which is beyond their means in order to deal with the evil of tax-exempt securities is the height of folly and must be thoroughly condemned.

(6) The revised bill provides that an insured person's contributions will be returned to his estate if he dies before he has received by way of benefits the entire amount to which he was entitled. This is contrary to all principles of social insurance in practice abroad. It is not only socially unnecessary but adds to the cost. This provision would be justified only if the payments were limited to dependent survivors.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The revised bill is much superior to the original bill in its provision that State unemployment-insurance funds, in order to be approved by the Federal Social Security Board, must provide that the contributions shall be "mingled and undivided" and that "no separate account is maintained with respect to any person." This makes possible true social insurance and will not affect adversely the growth of the labor movement. The bill is seriously defective, however, for many other reasons:

(1) The revised bill, as the original bill, still offers no real incentives to States to enact unemployment-insurance laws. Its bait is still largely directed to employers instead of to the public at large. At best employers will have to pay three-tenths of 1 percent more in taxes by the enactment of State laws requiring an employers' tax of 3 percent.

(2) Instead of helping State funds by Federal appropriations, as is done in all workable unemployment-insurance funds abroad, the Federal Government actually contemplates making a profit on its unemployment-insurance tax. The committee estimates that after 1938 the total yearly receipts from the excise tax will amount to about $800,000,000 or more. Since the Federal Government will give credit only up to 90 percent of the Federal tax, it means that the Federal Treasury will at the most lose by such credits only about $720,000,000. The administrative appropriation allowed to the State under this bill is set at $49,000,000, beginning with 1937. This will mean that the Federal Government will make a profit of from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 every year from its unemployment-insurance tax. Moreover, the Federal tax is payable with respect to wages paid to all employees, regardless of the amount of the wages earned. Since most State laws will probably exempt employees earning $3,000 a year or more, the credit which can be claimed by employers will be diminished and the Federal Government will make additional profit from its excise tax.

(3) Like the original bill, the revised draft sets up no definite standards for the State systems. This will unquestionably result in a variety of benefit standards which will create confusion and bad feeling on the part of the unemployed and disparity as among the States.

(4) The revised bill continues to require the turning over of State unemployment insurance funds to the Federal Treasury. This will constitute a handicap to the development of State legislation. There is no justification whatsoever for the prevailing fear that large reserves will be built up under the contemplated plan of unemployment insurance. Even if larger contribution rates were set up it is doubtful whether the plan will ever be more than on a pay-as-you-go basis.

(5) The provision in the bill that no State unemployment-insurance fund shall begin payment of benefits for at least 2 years "after the first day of the first period with respect to which contributions are required" may be advisable now, but must not be continued after 1938 when the full 3-percent contributions go into effect. This handicap will tend to discourage the immediate adoption of State laws.

(6) The revised bill as the original bill continues to set up two duplicating systems of taxation which are thoroughly uncalled for, i. e., the Federal tax and the State tax for which credit is to be given. The plan recommended to the Committee on Economic Security by the advisory council for a Federal subsidy to States enacting laws under proper standards, and financed by a single, uniform Federal tax, provides a far superior and less costly method.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE X—GENERAL PROVISIONS

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1001. (a) When used in this act—

(1) The term "State" (except when used in section 531) includes Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

(2) The term "United States", when used in a geographical sense, means the States, Alaska, Hawaii, and the District of Columbia.

(3) The term "person" means an individual, a trust or estate, a partnership, or a corporation.

(4) The term "corporation" includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies.

(5) The term "shareholder" includes a member in an association, joint-stock company, or insurance company.

(6) The term "employee" includes an officer of a corporation.

(b) The terms "includes" and "including", when used in a definition contained in this act, shall not be deemed to exclude other things otherwise within the meaning of the term defined.

(c) Whenever under this act, or any act of Congress or under the law of any State, an employer is required or permitted to deduct any amount from the remuneration of an employee and to pay the amount deducted to the United States, a State, or any political subdivision thereof, then, for the purposes of this act, the amount so deducted shall be considered to have been paid to the employee at the time of such deduction.

(d) Nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing any Federal official, agent, or representative, in carrying out any of the provisions of this act, to take charge of any child over the objection of either of the parents of such child, or of the person standing in loco parentis to such child, in violation of the law of a State.

RULES AND REGULATIONS

SEC. 1002. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, and the Social Security Board, respectively, shall make and publish such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with this act, as may be necessary to the efficient administration of the functions with which each is charged under this act.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 1003. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

RESERVATION OF POWER

SEC. 1004. The right to alter, amend, or repeal any provision of this act is hereby reserved to the Congress.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 1005. This act may be cited as the "Social Security Act."

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FERGUSON: Page 59, line 20, after section 1002, add a new section to read:

"No provisions or sections of this act shall become effective until two-thirds of the States have been certified as having a State plan for old-age assistance which has been approved by the board."

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, since this comes under the heading of general provisions, I think it should be germane to the bill.

We have heard voiced here today and during the entire discussion of this bill objections from States that are qualified, as so ably stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and objections from States that are not qualified, as stated by numerous Members. Since this legislation is so far-reaching and affects so many people and so many classes of people, I think the States should have an opportunity to pass on the acceptability of this measure and not have it become effective until two-thirds of the States have put their houses in order and are in position to accept the benefits of this law, and not put the States that cannot participate in the position of being taxed because their constitution prohibits them from accepting the benefits of this act for a period of some 2 years.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. It is entirely possible, is it not, that even under the gentleman's amendment, if adopted, the States he has in mind would be unprotected?

Mr. FERGUSON. But the majority of the States, or two-thirds of them, would be in position to accept and not just a few of the States would be able to participate under this bill.

Mr. SAMUEL B. HILL. There are probably not over 6 or 8 States that have constitutional inhibitions against such participation.

Mr. FERGUSON. And there are probably not over half a dozen States that can participate under this act as it is now drawn.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I would rather not yield until I have finished my statement.

Since the pay-roll tax does not take effect until July 1937, if the States want such a provision, my amendment could have no possible effect on the way that portion of the bill functions. If such an amendment were adopted by the House today it is possible that a provision that would actually pay the aged on the relief rolls would be adopted at this session of the Congress and give these people who are expecting a pension in the various States and who are entitled to a pension, something from this session of the Congress, which is something they will not get out of this bill.

I have been assured by leading Members of the House that until provisions of this act go into effect the aged and those in distress will be cared for by relief rolls. It is my contention that the old people who are in need would receive greater benefit from a monthly pension than from being subjected to the scrutiny of a social-service worker and the degradation caused by the acceptance of a Federal dole. Mrs. GREENWAY, who has fought hard for a pension that would actually be paid and for a reasonable pension, has assured me that she intends to introduce a resolution that will provide for the payment of a reasonable pension to those over 60 years of age who are on relief rolls in this country. This would be an actual pension—not a fictitious one such as is contained in this bill—and would provide a stopgap until the States could meet the requirements necessary for them to receive the grants and aid outlined in this legislation.

I think this legislation has many meritorious features, such as the care of crippled and dependent children, and maternal and child-welfare aid, and public-health provisions. I do believe that the provisions of sections 2 and 8 will have to be modified to take the entire burden of employment insurance off the shoulders of the wage earners.

However, I believe the States should have an opportunity to pass on whether they want to accept it or not. You cannot force social legislation down the throats of this country. We tried this when we passed the Prohibition Act, and if you want to educate the States to accept this and try to cooperate, if you adopt my amendment it will give them a period of time for the necessary two-thirds to accept this bill and whole-heartedly cooperate with it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of a point of order and ask for a vote on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 58, line 7, after the word "Hawaii", insert "Puerto Rico."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Puerto Rico.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, we are nearing the close of consideration of this bill, one of the most important that has ever been considered by an American Congress.

This measure has received more attention during its consideration by the committee, and by the Committee of the Whole, than any bill considered by the Congress in many years. There has been more time used in general debate; more liberal opportunity given for amendment than in any bill heretofore considered. I believe that every Member who so desired has expressed his views and opinions.

It has been carried in the press of the country that the leadership of our great President was impaired and that the bill would be ripped to pieces by amendments.

I am proud to say that notwithstanding the bill has been attacked from every angle, in criticizing the measure not a single amendment has been made to the bill, except two perfecting amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I want to pay a slight tribute to a man whom I consider one of the great Members of this House, a man whose friendship I prize highly, a man who has the courage of his convictions, a great American, a man never afraid to take the floor and state his position, a man who has unconsciously paid a great tribute to himself today when he said that not an amendment had been made to this bill. That this is true is due to the distinguished and fearless leadership of this man, beloved by the Membership of this House, the great Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, BOB DOUGHTON, of North Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank my kind friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. Chairman, those on the minority side who so bitterly attacked the bill have given the impression that they are opposed to the bill, but when the roll is called, I predict most of them will give it their support, thereby showing their good judgment and consideration for the welfare of the country.

I predict that the vote on the passage of this bill will show to the country that the Congress of the United States is behind our great President, that his leadership is still militant, that the American people as well as the American Congress, have confidence in him, in his courage, and in his wisdom, and that before this Congress closes, his entire new-deal program will be consummated. When this is done the country will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCREYNOLDS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7260, and, pursuant to House Resolution 197, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is ordered under the rule. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TREADWAY moves to recommit the bill H. R. 7260 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendments:

Page 2, line 10, strike out "$49,750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$69,750,000"; page 4, line 25, strike out "$30" and insert "$40"; beginning on page 7, line 18, strike out all of title II down to and including line 9, on page 15; beginning on page 40, line 10, strike out all of title VIII down to and including line 19, on page 47.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149; nays 253, answered "present" 1, not voting 29, as follows:

Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Kerr.
Mr. Steagall with Mr. Lesinski.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MEEKS, is absent today due to illness. If present, he would vote "no."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen from New York, Mr. SIROVICH, Mr. DICKSTEIN, and Mr. CELLER, are unavoidably absent. Were they present, they would vote "no" on this motion to recommit.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. RANKIN, is unavoidably detained on account of illness. Therefore, he has not voted on this roll call.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 372, nays 33, answered "present" 2, not voting 25, as follows:

Dies

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BYRNS, and he answered "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Withrow (for) with Mr. Rich (against).
Mr. Dies (for) with Mr. Knutson (against).

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Rankin with Mr. Culkin.
Mr. Bankhead with Mr. Higgins of Connecticut.
Mr. DeRouen with Mr. Fish.
Mr. Claiborne with Mr. Doutrich.
Mr. Smith of West Virginia with Mr. Thomas.
Mr. Utterback with Mr. Halleck.
Mr. Steagall with Mr. Gambrill.
Mr. Lamneck with Mr. West.
Mr. Kerr with Mr. Lesinski.

Mr. KRAMER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. WITHROW, of Wisconsin, desired to absent himself from Washington on important business. He requested me to pair with him. My Colleague, Mr. WITHROW, if present, would vote "aye." I, however, reserved the right with my colleague to support the old-age-pension feature, as presented in title I, which I would do if the other titles to the bill were eliminated, especially titles II and VIII, which I am sure are unconstitutional, and as I have taken a solemn oath to support the Constitution, I must necessarily vote "no."

Therefore, because of my pair with the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. WITHROW, I withdraw my vote "no", and vote "present."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, without making a speech, I desire to announce that I had a pair with the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES, who is in favor of this bill. I am opposed to it, but in view of my pair, I desire to vote "present" on both the motion to recommit and on the passage of the bill.

I also desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. FISH, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would have voted "aye" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DOUTRICH, the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. HIGGINS, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HALLECK, are unavoidably absent. If present, they would have voted "aye."

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York, Mr. SIROVICH, the gentleman from New York, Mr. DICKSTEIN, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. CELLER, are unavoidably detained. If present, they would have voted in the affirmative on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. UTTERBACK, is absent on account of a death in his family. He asked me to say that if present, he would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion by Mr. DOUGHTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SOCIAL SECURITY BILL

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I am in full accord with the purpose and spirit of the proposed social-security legislation now under consideration by this House. It is highly commendable in that it seeks to promote the general welfare by establishing a system of Federal old-age benefits, and by enabling the several States to make more adequate provision for aged persons, dependent and crippled children, maternal and child welfare, public health and unemployment compensation. My favorable attitude toward this type of legislation has been expressed on numerous and varied occasions, and I am gratified to see the possibility of enactment of such at this session of Congress.

I regret, however, in some particulars, the proposed legislation—H. R. 7260—falls short of what may be considered adequate relief. Furthermore, it does not serve all who should properly be considered within the scope of such an act. Some amendments have been offered which, if adopted, would greatly improve its effectiveness. However, although I am not entirely satisfied with all of its provisions, yet, I shall vote in favor of its adoption because I consider it a step in the right direction. It recognizes the principle that, "We are our brother's keeper." The mere recognition of this great fundamental principle is in itself an outstanding victory. The writing of that principle of human brotherhood into the statute law of our Nation indicates an awakened conscience. It evidences a forward movement now in progress the final result of which will be to enhance and improve living conditions, and relieve the distressed and underprivileged who struggle under handicaps both economic and physical.

The need for legislation of this kind is everywhere apparent at this time. Human suffering, distress, and fear are breaking down the morale and courage of the past. The Nation has responded generously in the effort to relieve distress and provide work by the inauguration of public-works projects. But all such means are temporary and designed only as relieve against the ravages of our present economic condition. Our full duty extends beyond providing relief from existing distress. It must find expression in the enactment of legislation to provide a system that will guard against destitution and dependency in the future.

This bill seeks to lay the foundation for future social security. It recognizes that dependency and destitution in most cases arise from old age with its consequent inability to procure gainful employment; and unemployment of workers in industrial pursuits resulting in loss of earnings creating a condition of distress that affects not only the individual and his family life, but which also seriously disturbs the whole economic and industrial structure.

It further recognizes the well-established fact that children are tragic victims of the distress that arises when those upon whom they are dependent are unable to provide for them either because of unemployment, death, physical or social handicaps. It is generally acknowledged that the best provision that can be made for families of this description is public aid for such dependent children in their own homes. Already many States provide such aid, but with the financial break-down of State and local governments, the task of caring for these dependents has become increasingly difficult and in some cases suspended.

Closely connected with this type of aid provision is also made for maternity and infancy welfare, particularly in rural areas, and in localities suffering from severe economic distress. The need for such services has increased with the depression.

Federal aid is also provided under the terms of this bill to develop local child-care service. These services are concerned with 300,000 dependent and neglected children. Each year approximately 200,000 of these come before the courts as delinquents, and another 70,000 are illegitimate children born each year. These groups are in many respects the most unfortunate of all children, as their lives have already been impaired.

It is the purpose of this bill not only to aid and encourage child-care institutions and services which seek to repair these damaged lives and keep them from becoming a permanent burden to society, but also to provide hospitalization and care for that vast army of handicapped and crippled children, estimated between three hundred thousand and five hundred thousand; and also to provide aid to our States for vocational rehabilitation. This concerns adults rather than children, but has a similar purpose in helping the blind and those otherwise prysically handicapped, to become self-supporting rather than a charge upon the public. Recognizing that preservation of health is a prime necessity for economic independence, sickness being one of the major causes of dependency, Federal aid is likewise extended to enable an expansion in public-health services.

The purpose and intent of this legislation is of a character to create within me a sense of privilege in having a part in its enactment, not because I consider it a complete measure of economic security, but because it is a recognition of a great humanitarian principle. It lays a foundation. It is a start toward a more complete acknowledgment of our duty to our fellow man. We must, however, be alert and willing to supplement or correct whenever and in whatever way experience gained in the days to come shall indicate to be either necessary or advisable. An awakened national conscience toward those to whom we owe this duty demands the favorable consideration of this measure.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy in the realization that finally our Government is about to introduce a system of old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, and maternal and child benefits. I pointed out to my colleagues in the last Congress the deplorable fact that the United States had to share with China and India what I then termed "the national ignominy and disgrace of providing no system of pensions or insurance for its aged indigent citizens." It is a cause for national rejoicing that we are now at least making a start toward putting into effect these great social reforms. Of course, the provisions and benefits are not as liberal as we would like them to be, nor are the amounts or age specifications satisfactory. However, it must be borne in mind that we are extending this assistance to our citizens at a time when the Nation's finances are at their lowest ebb, and that as conditions improve, we will increase the amount of the payments and also lower the age limit.

THE AGED IN SOUTHWEST WASHINGTON

I have received from Hon. W. L. Austin, Director Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., a statement showing the number of citizens 65 years of age and over in the nine counties of the Third Congressional District of the State of Washington. The official figures are as follows:

County	Age 65–74	Age 75 and over
Clark	2,108	793
Cowlitz	947	325
Grays Harbor	1,928	649
Lewis	1,869	707
Mason	413	136
Pacific	598	231
Skamania	152	58
Thurston	1,511	608
Wahkiakum	151	56
Total	9,677	3,563

There are thus approximately 13,240 citizens in southwest Washington who will be eligible to participate, and if they receive $30 per month, of which $15 will be provided by the Federal Government, they will receive the total monthly sum of $397,200, and the total annual payments will amount to the sum of $4,766,400 in the nine counties, which will be a blessing to the aged and should also contribute to improving general business conditions.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The unemployment-insurance feature of the bill also marks a forward stride in progressive legislation. It is intended to confer manifold benefits upon employee and employer alike as a result of the lessons learned from actual operation of the plan, salutary changes for its improvement will undoubtedly suggest themselves and be the subject of legislation by future Congresses.

MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH

The humanitarian object of this title in the act is stated in the text to be to provide funds "to enable the Federal Government to cooperate with the State agencies of health in extending and strengthening services for the health of mothers and children, especially in rural areas, and in areas suffering from severe economic distress", and one section applies specially to the "care of crippled children", which expresses a new, noble, and glorious conception of the duties of government.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which embodies the Townsend plan, should be substituted for title I of this measure, dealing with the subject of old-age pensions.

I have studied the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan for over a year and feel that I know something about it. In the last Congress I placed in the RECORD a statement of the objects and purposes of the plan, the first public and official notice which it received in the Congress of the United States. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 4, 1934, pp. 6039–6040.)

Last December when I came to the Capital a month before Congress convened, I was one of a small group of Congressmen who met with Dr. Townsend and issued the call for the meeting in the House caucus room at which he made his first public explanation of his plan in the Nation's Capital, and I attended the session. Later I joined with Dr. Townsend, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY], and several other colleagues in drafting the first bill, H. R. 3977; and I also collaborated with them in revising that bill and formulating H. R. 7154, the present McGroarty bill.

I voted against changing the discharge rule to require 218 instead of 145 signatures. I was the eighteenth Member to sign the petition on the Clerk's desk to discharge the committee and bring the first McGroarty bill before the House for consideration and vote, and the other day I was one of 103 Members who voted against the previous question in order to insure that the revised McGroarty bill would be submitted as a substitute for title I of the committee bill, but we were defeated in our effort. I am pleased, however, that the question of germaneness was resolved in favor of such procedure, and was one of the 56 Members who voted in favor of the bill.

The revised McGroarty bill is essentially in principle the same as the first bill, excepting that we have broadened the tax base to impose an increased 10-percent tax on incomes and to add an extra 2-percent tax on inheritances and gifts over $500. We also provide that the "annuity", which term we employ instead of "pension", because it is more accurately descriptive, shall not be paid to anyone having an annual income of over $2,400, and that the present income of the annuitant shall be debited against the annuity, and that the annuity shall be "in such amount not exceeding $200 per month as may properly be paid from the funds accumulated." In other words, the amount of annuity to be paid shall be measured and determined, as it would necessarily have to be in any event, by the tax revenues yielded and derived from the collection of the 2-percent business transactions tax and the other taxes just referred to. This improved bill makes no material departure from the original bill, and this view is shared by Dr. Townsend himself, by Mr. MCGROARTY, and by all of us who have taken the deepest interest and most active part in urging the Townsend plan. This modified bill is more explicit, practical, and workable, and is, in my judgment, far superior to title I of the act which we are considering during this debate. According to the studies of the actuaries and statisticians, the tax receipts would be sufficient to pay to each annuitant $50 the first month, with a steady increase of 20 to 25 percent each month until at the end of 1 year the full maximum of $200 could be paid. This is the testimony of Dr. Robert D. Doane, one of the leading economists in the Nation.

QUALIFICATIONS—DR. ROBERT D. DOANE

Education—public schools, Wesleyan University, Georgetown University, Columbia University, New York University. Has been professor and lecturer in schools of economics. Has also served as consultant for the United States Department of Commerce and the United States Department of Labor, in addition to 15 other outstanding national organizations. Author of 10 leading works on economics, some of which are used as textbooks in our educational institutions.

In his opening remarks before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, Dr. Doane stated that he was not advocating any particular economic-security measure, but was appearing as an economist and statistician to testify as to the revenue which could be derived from the imposition of a 2-percent turnover or transaction tax.

Dr. Doane filed several statistical tables with the Ways and Means Committee, including those referred to below.

Table IV covers physical goods transactions for a limited list consisting of only farm products, forest products, fisheries, mines, and quarries, and table I gives a classification of consumer expenditures for this limited list of items.

TABLE V.—Maximum theoretical possibilities under 2-percent turnover tax

	Selected items as given in table 1 (millions)	All producer and consumer expenditures (millions)	All expenditures including Government and institutions (millions)	All gross transactions and transfers (millions)
Estimated annual 1935 collections	$4,000	$6,000	$6,300	$9,600
Estimated annual collections on a 1929 basis	$7,500	$12,000	$12,600	$18,700
Estimated expected increase in prices (percent)	[1]12	[1]18	[1]20	[1]24
Annual volume of transactions, 1935	----------	$224,000	$242,000	$481,000
1929	----------	$358,000	$376,000	$935,000

[1] Note the small percentage expected increase in price levels due to imposition of 2-percent tax.

Table V (above) shows that income from the proposed tax will be four billion dollars the first year on the selected items only when based on 1935 levels of business and prices. The income for the first year on all transactions would be nine billion six hundred million. On 1929 levels the income the first year would be, on limited list only, seven billion five hundred million, and on all transactions eighteen billion seven hundred million.

Dr. Doane stated before the Ways and Means Committee that a monthly increase of 20 to 25 percent in volume of trade and a consequent increase in tax revenue might be expected monthly until immediate wants are supplied (p. 1054).

This monthly increase, if realized, would evidently provide ample funds to pay pensions as fast as pensioners could qualify and register—we quote as pensioners could qualify and register. Since this testimony was given Dr. Doane has stated that under this 2-percent transaction tax-revolving method, the anticipated monthly increase in income would be as follows:

"First month, three hundred and thirty-six million; second, four hundred and twenty million; third, five hundred and twenty-five million; fourth, six hundred and fifty-six million; fifth, eight hundred and twenty million; sixth, one thousand and twenty-five million; seventh, twelve hundred and eighty-one million; and eighth, sixteen hundred and one million."

This rate of business increase which is expected from the introduction of the Townsend plan is substantiated by the annual Federal Reserve report of 1933, which shows a monthly increase of 20 percent occasioned by the introduction of the N. R. A.

The forced spending feature of the Townsend plan should cause a much greater business increase than that occasioned by the N. R. A.

The following table I is a combination of Doane's tables II and III, which were filed with the Ways and Means Committee.

TABLE I.—Total estimated monthly consumer expenditures and average monthly per capita consumer expenditure, by income groups, 1935 basis

Income classes (thousands)	Income recipients (actual)	Monthly spending (thousands)	Per capita present prices [1]	Expected total revenue (000 omitted)	Estimated tax 2 percent per income recipient	Estimated tax per capita per total population

$1 to $2	16,281,430	1,449,047	95	30,934	1.90	.50
$1 and under	15,091,109	875,284	63	19,014	1.26	.33
Total	37,550,000	3,907,289	----------	83,781	----------	----------

[1] These totals include the anticipated mark-up of 12 percent occasioned by the imposition of the 2-percent tax.

A study of table I, compiled by Dr. Doane, reveals that the tax imposed on income recipients would range from $133.40 for those in the higher brackets down to $1.26 monthly per individual recipient. And per capita tax would range from $35.10 down to $0.33 per individual, monthly. These figures include mark-up or increase in retail selling price due to the imposition of the 2-percent tax.

In further confirmation of the volume of business transacted we quote E. A. Goldenweiser, Director of Division of Research and Statistics of Federal Reserve Board, testifying before the Ways and Means Committee at the Seventy-second Congress, May 2, 1932, who said: "The total volume of transactions in this country in 1929 was about $1,200,000,000,000."

Dow-Jones News, December 5, 1934, reports $1,165,000,000,000 of business in 1929.

Federal Reserve bank debits as reported in 1929 were $982,531,000,000.

Dr. Doane appeared before the Senate Finance Committee February 20, 1935, and made an opening statement, which we condense as follows:

"It is my primary purpose to present a brief statistical visualization of certain inherent current revenue possibilities now available to the Government under a 2-percent general sales tax. I wish you to understand that I appear as an independent statistician to show the revenue possibilities of a 2-percent sales tax or turn-over tax calculated on a very broad base * * *."

"I have caused to be prepared a series of preliminary tabulations * * *, in order that some clear insight may be gained into the revenue possibilities under the 2-percent sales tax at present levels.

"It will be also understood that I do not profess that these tabulations are to be accepted as final."

Particularly attention is called to that part of Dr. Doane's closing statement before the Senate Finance Committee to the effect that, "This form of taxation, if uniformly employed could easily through possible substitution decrease the tax liability now imposed on real property with the consequent material increase in capital value."

The income derived from tax on transactions as referred to by Dr. Doane in table no. 5, filed with the Ways and Means Committee, reproduced herein, based on 1929 transactions would provide ample means the first year to pay $200 per month pension to 7,500,000 pensioners.

Dr. Doane is authority for the following statements:

"The cumulative effect of a uniform Nation-wide turn-over tax at the low rate of 2 percent on limited transactions could easily put a stop to further Budget deficit and finance such a social-security program as envisaged by the Townsend plan.

"Certainly sufficient funds could be raised by this turn-over tax to more than care for the social-security program now before the country.

"The turn-over method of taxation is an equitable and fair way to provide means to pay as you go the service charge of Government that will bring revenue and a blessing to all business and social enterprises once it is put into action.

CLOSING STATEMENT OF DR. ROBERT R. DOANE BEFORE THE UNITED STATES SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE FEBRUARY 20, 1935

Briefly summing up the returns from a 2-percent tax, as set forth in detail in table I, which includes the tax on raw materials, manufacturing, wholesaling, and retailing on total monthly transactions of some eight and three-fourths million dollars, while the estimated increase in the cost of goods due to the tax has been placed at approximately 10 percent. That will be found in column 4, table I. The total estimated revenue from the tax on this limited list approximates $4,000,000,000 yearly, at present levels, without giving consideration to any accelerated movement of trade; while an identical tax on all transactions would return nine to nine and three-fourths billions of dollars per year at present levels of production.

The estimated increase in retail price of goods, based on experience of other nations, would be 10 percent; while the volume of trade expectancy could increase 25 percent monthly for the first few months, after which the increase would be at a decrescent rate. A continuation of this stimulated volume of trade could be expected under normal conditions until the revenue derived from the tax could mount to $26,000,000,000 per year, but that would be in the future.

This form of taxation, if uniformly applied, could easily, through possible substitution, decrease the tax liability now imposed on real property, with a consequent material increase in capital value.

The social security envisaged in the Townsend plan is undeniably a challenge to our modern economy. It seems that if we accept as a sound business principle a 2½-percent annual depreciation charge against our capital equipment of brick, mortar, steel, and so forth, it is natural that mankind should accept a like charge annually against our human resources.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Doane makes it clear that he is not advocating any old-age-pension plan and that his sole purpose is to show what money could be raised by a 2-percent turnover or transaction tax. His estimate is $336,000,000 for the first month, increasing 25 percent monthly until the eighth month the income is estimated at $1,601,000,000, nearly enough to pay $200 per month to 7,500,000 citizens, which is the maximum annuity, and this was before we broadened the tax base, which will provide additional revenue.

Dr. Doane's table no. 1 disproves the unfounded statement sometimes made that the burden of raising the money would fall on the poor. He shows by income groups for the year 1935 that incomes of $1,000,000 and over each would pay $143.30 per month. These payments range down through the different incomes until they reach those with incomes of $1,000 and under, which is the much larger percentage of the population, where the estimated burden of the tax would be $1.26 per income monthly, while the per capita tax would range from $35.10 per month for those in the highest brackets to 33 cents per month in the lower brackets. What a small contribution this would be to bring about the recovery of business and improved conditions for all our people.

Dr. Doane further states that—

> This form of taxation, if uniformly employed, could easily * * * decrease the tax * * * on real property, with a consequent material increase in capital value.

What greater benefit could accrue to the overburdened taxpayers and owners of real estate, homes, and farms than to have their tax burdens lightened, with a resultant increase in the capital value of real property? Dr. Doane's statement places the Townsend plan on the basis of a practical business method of recovery.

It requires no argument to establish that increased purchasing power, a stimulus to business, industry, and agriculture, reemployment and a greater volume of general prosperity, would be certain to result from the enforced spending of the annuity funds. I quote from the statement of Dr. Francis E. Townsend:

> Briefly, the Townsend plan of old-age revolving pensions has as its objective three salient features.
> Primarily, to effect and maintain complete recovery in the United States and to sustain this prosperity by a constant and sufficient supply of purchasing power, evenly distributed in accordance with the population throughout the entire Nation by means of employing citizens past 60 to make the distribution.
> Secondarily, to create a condition of employment assurance by replacing those over the age of 60 now employed with younger workers and by creating other employment through the expenditure of the pension money in the marts of trade.
> Dr. Doane asserts that at present levels the annual expenditure in retail trade of $1,730 will create continuous employment for one man.
> And, lastly, but by no means the least desirable feature of the Townsend plan, is the creation of an adequate retirement fund for each individual who can and does qualify upon reaching age 60. It is a very significant fact that over a period of years each individual creates his own retirement fund. In effect, the Townsend plan is a collective involuntary purchase of retirement annuities, using the Federal Government as the agency of collection and distribution.

Mr. Speaker, let us not be biased against the adoption of this plan because of the apparent large sum involved. We spent $33,500,000,000 in the world war, and nearly everyone recognizes the fact we are now engaged in a war more serious and fatal to our own people—a war against unemployment, against poverty, against starvation, against sickness, against suicide, against broken lives, against revolution.

What has this present war against the depression cost us to date in loss of national income?

According to authentic sources, the figures are as follows:

National income

	Amount of income	Loss compared to 1929	Authority
1929	$83,000,000,000+		S. Doc. 124, 73d Cong.
1930	70,000,000,000+	$13,000,000,000	Do.
1931	54,000,000,000+	29,000,000,000	Do.
1932	39,000,000,000+	44,000,000,000	Do.
1933	40,000,000,000—	43,000,000,000	Associated Press reports.
1934 (approximate)	45,000,000,000	38,000,000,000	Do.
Total		167,000,000,000

The investors of our country lost at least $50,000,000,000 in the stock-market crash of 1929–30.

A FEW FINAL QUESTIONS

Would it be dangerous to cause, as Dr. Doane estimates would be the effect, an increase in the price level of retail goods of 10 percent, when we have in the past permitted the private bankers of the country to inflate credit and debt checks in circulation in the sum of approximately $50,000,000,000?

A retail sales tax has been urged by big business and the most conservative Members of the House and Senate for years as a just and equitable form of taxation. Will someone point out why a tax imposed upon all business transactions would be any more unsafe, unsound, or unjust than a retail sales tax, and wherein lies the difference which should cause us to adopt the one and reject the other? Is not the only real difference that the transaction tax would fall most heavily upon those who do the most business and are therefore the most able to pay the tax?

Is it worth while to pay 2 cents on each $1 of business transactions in order to end a condition which has cost us a loss of $167,000,000,000 in the past 5 years, not to mention the billions appropriated by Congress and spent by the Federal Government for relief, the cost of charities and poor farms and homes for the aged running into many more billions, and the cost of crime caused by poverty amounting to billions of dollars, which would be substantially reduced?

A transaction tax of 2 percent on every business and money transaction would be the most just and equitable form of taxation which could be devised, and there is not a single, valid, sound objection against it. If it is not enacted into law in this Congress, it will be in the Seventy-fifth Congress.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, the administration social-security bill contains the most liberal provisions and provides for the most liberal old-age-security payments in any law of any nation anywhere on earth.

President Roosevelt's message to the Congress of June 8, 1934, has been accepted, and we uphold his leadership in supporting this beneficent measure.

President Roosevelt in his great message to the Congress said:

> Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first. * * * People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguards against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated. * * *

The enactment into law of the Social Security Act of 1935 will mark a happy event in American life. We have builded well a strong foundation upon which will be erected economic and social security and contentment for our people and for those who will come after the time we are gone and forgotten.

This bill provides for unemployment insurance under State authority. It grants aid to States for financial aid to dependent children, for maternal and child welfare, for public-health service, for care of crippled children, and for vocational rehabilitation. Generations as yet unborn will rejoice because a Democratic Congress in the year of 1935 undertook this, the noblest experiment in constructive social service ever undertaken by any government.

Four hundred fourteen thousand and eight hundred individuals whom I, as Congressman at large, represent are at the present time eligible for old-age-security payments under the beneficent provisions of this bill. I am happy to say to these 414,800 citizens of Ohio, "You have lived for 65 years or longer and served and helped build our Nation and State. Your Government now holds out and gives to you for the balance of your lives $15 per month. All it asks is that the State government contribute $15 per month or more."

I voted for the amendment that would have increased the old-age pensions for each elderly individual to $40 per month instead of $30. I had hoped that these old-age-security payments would commence at 60 instead of 65. Wise legislation is, however, usually the result of compromise, and we mark an epoch in the passage of this great legislative measure. Future Congresses will carry this work forward, I hope, and amend and liberalize the provisions of this measure.

It was cruel and uncalled for that so many of my fine constituents were deceived by high-pressure advocates of the first Townsend plan. This plan was embodied in H. R. 3977, Mr. McGROARTY introduced last January. It was abandoned by its author and repudiated by its sponsors.

The $200-per-month payment feature has been eliminated, although all of this time leaders of the Townsend plan, so called, have been asserting to high heaven that there was and would be no compromise. Many thousands of my constituents have been and are being misled and deceived. A great fraud has been perpetrated by those who have claimed that the original Townsend plan for $200 to every individual of 60 or older has only been "slightly revised" by the provisions of H. R. 7154, Mr. MCGROARTY introduced on April 1, 1935. The facts are that the original Townsend plan has been utterly abandoned. H. R. 7154, which sets forth the Townsend plan as of April 1, 1935, embodies fundamental changes. The former measure was not "slightly revised." An entirely new proposal was offered. The sham and fraud is evidenced by the admission openly made by proponents, in the course of this debate, that the Townsend plan as of April 1, 1935, will pay not to exceed $50 per month to elderly individuals. That figure is their guess. My estimate, carefully made, is that elderly individuals, were this measure enacted into law, would receive about half that amount, or possibly $28 per month.

The Ways and Means Committee, according to information given me, intended to make a report in regard to H. R. 3977, but when this measure was abandoned and repudiated by its author, it became unnecessary for committee members to give it further consideration.

The Townsend plan as of April 1, 1935, embodied in H. R. 7154, provided that the monthly stipend may range anywhere from nothing to $200, dependent upon the amount of revenue obtained and the expense of administration. I object to this as not providing real old-age security. Some definite minimum should be established in the law.

Furthermore, it provided for only a small inheritance tax. I favor greatly increased inheritance taxes against large fortunes.

Threats have been made that unless I vote for the original Townsend plan, abandoned on the doorstep of Congress, there would be another Congressman at large from Ohio in my place. Mr. Speaker, the office of Congressman at large belongs to the sovereign citizens of Ohio. It is not mine. They have honored me, and I appreciate the confidence shown me in 1932 and 1934. I intend to again go before the electorate of Ohio in 1936, but at all times I do intend to work at this job and consider my solemn oath and the welfare of our country. A threat that I must vote for an unsound proposal to assure my own reelection is an insult to my integrity as a public official. Threats do not bother me. I do not scare. I will work at this job and do my duty. The elections will take care of themselves. Furthermore, even though threats procured through the machinations of those who are making a racket of a "plan" since abandoned as unsound were to be carried out—were these unscrupulous agitators to bring about my defeat—I have an abiding faith that our country would struggle along somehow without my services in the Congress. A Divine Providence would, I am confident, come to the rescue of our beloved country and fill the vacant chair.

Mr. Speaker, I have consistently voted against gag rules. Certainly I would have voted against any gag rule in connection with old-age security and unemployment insurance. We have had prolonged debate of a high character and full opportunity to offer and consider amendments of every kind, including the Townsend plan, so called. No one can claim that any gag rule was offered or adopted in connection with this social-security bill. The facts are that H. R. 7154 has been considerably amended and changed. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] states that some of these amendments are of considerable importance and he in his remarks on April 17 offered the latest revised version of the Townsend plan. Therefore, we may properly consider that the Townsend-plan leaders have again changed their proposal as of April 17, 1935. No reference, directly or indirectly, is made in this latest revised version as to $200 per month or $2,400 per year. That is definitely out. Is it not reasonable to expect another Townsend plan to be offered so that the agitation may continue and the quarters may keep pouring in?

Mr. Speaker, I made speeches in Ohio in favor of old-age security long before Dr. Townsend announced his first plan. As a member of the Ohio Commission on Unemployment Insurance in 1930 and 1931 I studied this great problem and I signed the majority report recommending unemployment insurance. The citizens of Ohio whom I represent know that they can depend upon me to support the most liberal social-security program that is practical. [Applause.]

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, old age ought to be made secure. Men and women who have done their part in the duties of life should not end their days in penury and want. It is a proved fact that less than 10 percent of all people who have reached the age of 60 years have been able to lay by a competence for their closing days. Of the other 90 percent, some struggle on to the end to earn what they require. Others end their days dependent upon the bounty of children or other kin, while still others have no reliance but upon the meager provisions of public agencies.

President Roosevelt in a message to Congress, June 8, 1934, said in relation to the uncompleted part of his program:

> Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of our Nation first.

Upon that I stand with our great President. One of the things he had in mind was the old-age pension. That is the subject that I wish to discuss briefly with you.

Think as we may, say what we will, there is none among us all who can hold, even to himself, that old age should either be heavily burdened with labor or deprived of the plain comforts of life. It is all very well to say, as some do, that industry, thrift, and prudence must be our security against an old age of dependence, penury, and want. But we know, all of us, that the vast majority of human beings everywhere enter the period of declining years in just that condition. It always has been so; and because it has, some there are who believe it always must be so. From any such conclusion I dissent with all positiveness. I no more agree that the aged poor should be deprived and made to suffer than I would share the monstrous doctrine once held that crippled children had no right to live.

We find our subject to fall naturally into three parts—the old-age pension as an economic recourse; the old-age pension as a factor of social justice; the old-age pension as an example of practical altruism.

It has been something of a fashion among opponents of the old-age pension to declare against it as "economically unsound." That has become trite, but it never can become true. There is nothing economically sound in helpless poverty. I never could, nor do I believe any of you ever can, see anything economically sound in a poorhouse. Quite certainly you will agree that there is nothing that socially is sound in the cold tolerance of suffering that need not be. When we permit the aged poor to be helplessly burdened with poverty, we submit ourselves to a condition which has a variety of bad reactions, all costly and some of them demoralizing. To provide the aged poor with resources necessary to decent living and comfortable existence means to keep them in the class which consumes normally. That in turn means something to industry of most sorts, to trade of many kinds. The benefits are distributed, and all of us, including even the rich, stand to gain by it.

It is recognized that in all times there has been and that most probably in all future times there will be a great difference in human beings. Some are capable, more or not; some are aggressive, more are submissive; some are acquisitive, more are indifferent to wealth; some are thrifty, and many are imprudent. In this wealthiest land the world has ever known, where less than 10 percent of the people own more than 90 percent of the wealth, these human differences seem to be more sharply accented than in any other land. Yet these very differences make possible the doing of the work that must be done. There is much toil that is harsh and uninviting. Yet for those who perform it the recompenses are lowest in the scale. It is impossible that those so engaged can in many instances acquire good homes and lay by a competence against the time when age and infirmity forbid effort. What is to become of these? Are they to be starved, or turned into the streets to beg, or kenneled in almshouses? That does not, somehow, seem to fit with the scheme of an enlightened and wealthy civilization. It does not comport with the ideas most of us hold concerning social justice. If all the wealth of the Nation were to be equally distributed at this time, there would be something less than $3,000 per head, or not to exceed $10,000 for each family. No unencumbered man could live on his $3,000, no family could subsist on its $10,000. But there is and there will be no such distribution of wealth. A few will be very rich, a great number will be moderately circumstanced and some millions of people will have nothing save the wages of labor from day to day. It follows that millions will enter upon the period of old age with nothing upon which to live. Because they did the menial tasks, performed the poorly requited labor that is indispensable to progress, to economic development and balance, and to domestic comfort, have they no desert beyond the mean wage they were paid and the precarious life of old age without substance to which they have come? There is such a thing as social justice. We are coming more and more to recognize it and to institute its principles in our civil establishment and in our society.

In no other country of any age has practical altruism had such splendor of example as in the United States. Public benefactions have gone literally and stupendously into the billions. With few exceptions these lavish gifts have been bestowed upon education. That is worthy and will be endlessly useful to all mankind. Yet the largess given to religious causes has been itself an immensity of benevolence that will bear fruit everywhere to the end of time. Health, social research, child welfare, and civic advancement all have shared bounteously in the lavish giving that has so burnished this era with a splendor of benevolence. Yet in it all there has seemed to be less thought for the poverty and helplessness of old age than for any other condition which can appeal to the spirit of philanthropy. The poorhouse and the community chest remain in this age of rich and enlightened benevolence the chief reliance for the warding of the aged poor from the misery of penniless existence. The old-age pension is a practical altruism, but it is not charity. It recognizes that in the very nature of our economic system and social fabric there must be great numbers who cannot take hostage for the comfort of their old age.

Now, let us not give ourselves the jitters over this question of old-age pensions. It is not an untried but threatened experiment in some field of socialism. Half of the States of the Union have established systems of old-age pension in some form and in some degree. Others will make similar provisions during legislative sessions the coming winter. President Roosevelt has caused practical researches to be made for the enlightenment and guidance of himself and Congress in the consideration of a Federal system of old-age pensions. He proposes that it shall be a system jointly maintained and administered by the National Government and the States. That is as it should be. Just what the plan is precisely to be I am unable to say. Nor am I at this time able to say just what should be the plan I most would favor. But all that will be worked out. Time will be required to wisely develop and thoroughly establish any efficient and economical plan. In general, I should say the plan ought to provide that those who are likely to be its beneficiaries should be required during their earning years to contribute to the resources from which they are to benefit. Not everything we can desire an old-age-pension system to be can have immediate development. But it can be given an early beginning and built up as time permits and improved as experience shall dictate.

In this thing we can do better than the poorhouse, better than public or private charity, better than we ever can possibly do with either. We can treat our old folks who have done their part, have acquitted themselves well and have contributed their best years and most fruitful toil to our progress and well-being, as the veterans of our wars are treated when they are broken in the fray or have bended under the burden of their years. The Government of the Nation and of some of the States have established civil pensions for those long in public service. Those who are citizens of Fort Wayne are quite familiar with their own pension system for retired members of the fire and police departments. It is in the useful pursuits of peace as it is in fiery strife of war an honorable discharge from service. Have not those others whose toil is necessary, whose lives have been useful and whose recompense never has been such as would permit them, however diligent, thrifty, and prudent, to lay up a competence, also a just claim upon the generosity of Government and society? Are they not entitled to receive the means of comfort and decent living upon a ground and in a manner that will neither brand them paupers nor wound their self-respect? I think so.

And as for ourselves everywhere, who have had our lives cast and our paths drawn in more generous fields, have we no duty of respectful regard for those who have wrought for the common good as sturdily though less fortunately? We shall not escape the reproaches of our conscience nor the condemnation of heaven if we shall fail to see and stubbornly go on to flout this obligation which rests upon us all.

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, the principles of aid to the aged and of unemployment compensation as embraced in the social-security bill must be utilized if we are to correct some of the obvious and distressing hardships of what we call the "private-profit system." There are those who look upon these social measures as destructive of our present system of production and distribution, and they shrink sincerely from their adoption into our scheme of things; and yet in my humble belief those who espouse these measures of reform are the true friends of the profit system and will be so looked upon by future historians. To me, it seems certain that if our present system does not afford an income to the average man, preferably, of course, through employment, then it will be supplanted. Every advanced country in the world, under stress of conditions such as we now face, has found it necessary to resort to old-age pensions and the creation of unemployment reserves, and it seems logical to deduct from their experience that this country—especially since the free lands of the West, where formerly our surplus population could migrate, have disappeared—must follow suit.

This measure has been characterized as revolutionary, and I think it is properly so designated, for it introduces the theory that the Federal Government owes a duty to the unemployed, not only in times of emergency such as we have been passing through but during normal times. Some sincere advocates of the principles of the bill are aggrieved and greatly disappointed that the relief afforded is not larger in amount. Since not all of their ideas are accepted, they proceed in misguided fashion to assail the whole measure and discredit it in the eyes of the public. By so doing they join hands with the ultraconservatives, who are opposed to the bill, lock, stock, and barrel. This combination of extremists appears constantly in the legislative conflicts on this floor. Between the extremes, happily, march a set of moderate-minded men who realize that the world cannot be reformed overnight and who are willing to make progress slowly rather than none at all. In England there are two noteworthy social thinkers, Sidney and Beatrice Webb, who have long striven in the field of social reform, and they have coined a phrase which they use frequently in their discussions of social progress, to wit, "the inevitability of graduality." In other words, progress comes slowly, unless you wish to adopt methods of violence.

May I now speak briefly about the two main phases of this bill, addressing myself first to old-age pensions?

The plight of the aged is directly traceable to what we are pleased to call the "machine age." Before the advent of labor-saving machinery, an artisan was compelled to spend years in the perfection of his trade. It usually required precision and the sort of skill that only laborious efforts over many years could achieve. The employer could not easily supplant this trained man. He could not go out into the street and pick up a substitute. As a result, the man of age was looked upon as a desirable employee, and I have known many instances of men in my home community who have worked steadily at a bench up to the age of 75 years. They were looked upon as fixtures in their plant and as irreplaceable. The transfer of this human skill to automatic machinery has changed the situation entirely. Our workmen have largely become merely machine tenders, and the requirements for successful performance of this type of work are youth and vigor. Almost universally, therefore, the factory door is now closed at least to new employees who are over 45 years of age. I might add that workmen's compensation for accidents has also militated against the older man because of the fear that he will recover less quickly, and possibly not at all, from a shop accident.

It seems to me, therefore, that the payment of old-age pensions is the diversion of part of the profits of labor-saving machinery to the care of the human victims of this improvement. It is a much more enlightened way of treating the problem than was used in France and England when the installation of automatic machinery stimulated riots among the workmen and in many instances resulted in the physical destruction of the machinery itself. Happily, we have not indulged in this age in any sort of blind destruction such as this. Notwithstanding the displacement of aged men, we realize that the machine has been a benefactor in that it has increased the sum total of things for distribution among our people. It has been a creator of wealth and is in a large part responsible for the improved living standards of our age. Yet, I am one of those who believes that we cannot accept these improvements without taking steps to alleviate in some way or other the suffering that comes with their inauguration. Primarily, the machine is intended to cut down costs of production and at the same time reduce the selling price of the articles manufactured. The cost of old-age pensions, as well as unemployment compensation, will result in less advantages from machine production, so far as dollars and cents are concerned, to the consumer as well as to the industrial owner; but these two classes must not share all the benefits of progress, and permit the aged and the unemployed to go to the scrap pile as the human debris of progress.

My observations on old-age pensions would not be complete unless I called attention to the fact that the pioneer work in the popularization of the old-age-pension idea was undertaken not by either of the major political parties, nor by the Townsendites or the Popeites, who recently have come onto the scene, but by the Fraternal Order of Eagles. The members of that organization did the real battling for this cause at a time when by advocacy of it you invited ridicule and abuse from a large element of the population. But the education of the people as to the needs of old-age pensions was pursued by the Eagle lodges all over the country with such vigor and intelligence that we now see few who dissent to the principle, and the only disagreement is as to methods and amounts. The record of this debate ought to contain this recognition of the efforts of this organization.

May I now make several observations about my hopes with reference to unemployment compensation?

Much emphasis in the past has been placed on the rate of wages paid workmen. What counts now, as President Roosevelt recently observed, is the number of hours of employment that a man obtains during a year. This raises the question of the regularization of employment, and it is a question of supreme importance. A recent survey of the automobile industry shows that the average annual earnings in four plants was $1,050 in 1934. This is typical of what has happened in wage income in many industries. Steady employment the year around has become almost unknown for the average man. The truth is that most of our industries have become seasonal in their output. Purchasers of automobiles desire to be supplied in the springtime and this means that there is a peak load of production in automobile plants during the three spring months, March, April, and May. It cannot be blamed on the manager of industry that the demands of the people are such that all of his orders pile in on him within a brief period of time.

And yet what happens because of this heavy output confined to a particular period of the year is that automobile, as well as other employees, bring into their factories a great many extra workers drawn from the country, use them for a brief period, and when the rush is over they are returned to the labor market. During the rest of the year, instead of returning to their homes, oftentimes these workers remain in the industrial cities subjects of charity. If regularization of production could be attained, there would be a more or less steady employment for the regular force of men and there would not be this importation at seasonal periods of additional men who are taken from the farms and who thereafter consider themselves as industrial labor. I am happy to say that the automobile industry is now trying to flatten out its production in the hope of giving men more steady work and removing the need of recruiting workers from other districts when orders rise to high peaks.

It is my hope that the unemployment-compensation premiums payable by the managers of industry will act as a spur in promoting regularization of employment. Industry will naturally attempt to keep down the assessments for unemployment compensation, and in order to accomplish this end industrial concerns will seek means of stabilizing their output. In this connection it is essential in my mind that the State insurance systems to be set up shall eventually offer a reduction of premium or assessment to those employers who succeed in regularizing their employment.

It does not seem altogether fair that the industry which does not create irregularity in employment should bear the same burden of expense as does that industry which has a record of persistent unemployment. I might add that there is another fruitful field for experiment in regularizing employment by a specific industry adding to its product some article which can be manufactured during those times of the year when its chief product is not in demand, thus keeping its men at work in slack seasons. Whether the penalty of unemployment-compensation premiums will serve to promote effort for regularization of employment remains to be seen. To all legislative acts the words of Theodore Roosevelt are applicable:

> Their success or failure is to be determined not on a prior reasoning but by actually testing how they work under varying conditions.

I notice that there is exhibited by representatives of rural States in this debate an attitude of indifference toward unemployment compensation, and yet such a system will be indirectly of great benefit to their people. When the period of unemployment comes the compensation payments will serve to cushion the fall of business, and the moneys collected in lieu of pay-envelop money will be spent for the food which comes from the country and for clothing, the raw material for which is furnished by agricultural States. In other words, the customers of the agricultural States will, despite unemployment, be able, in a measure at least, to continue buying and consuming the products of agriculture, and to this extent the American farmer will benefit.

In conclusion may I say that we cannot foresee whether the social-security measure will be a success in all its phases as now proposed. The experts know the experience of European countries, and they have builded for the United States on the basis of that experience, modifying old plans in accordance with peculiar domestic conditions. Only actual experience will demonstrate wherein they have erred.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I spoke three times against title 1 of the social-security bill. This is the title carrying straight old-age pensions. I also tried to amend it so that the Federal Government would have to pay for 2 years whether the State plans conform to the Federal plan or not, giving the States that length of time to pass laws conforming to the Federal plan. The amendment was voted down, as were all other amendments.

Now that the bill has passed the House and gone to the Senate, I feel that it is only fair, to myself, to the House and to the bill, to say something on the other side of the question.

The vote by which the social-security bill passed the House of Representatives was one of the most impressive votes which has been cast during the life of the Roosevelt administration. There are 435 Members in the House of Representatives. Only 33 votes were cast against the bill on the final roll call—13 Democrats, 18 Republicans, and 2 Farmer-Laborites. For it were 271.

Among the Republicans who voted for the bill were the party leaders in Congress who sat side by side at the minority table and voted "aye" when the roll was called.

There is food for thought in this vote. For 10 days the bill had been under steady debate, the longest House debate in the life of this administration. Various features of the bill had been severely criticized, just as I criticized title I. Others criticized the contributory old-age-pension title, a plan of building up old-age pensions for which the railroad men of the United States have been fighting for many years, which was finally passed by the last Congress and which is now pending before the Supreme Court of the United States, with railway employees organizations of the country lined up for it. Others attacked it because of the unemployment-insurance feature, although the United States is the only civilized country in the world which has no unemployment-insurance law.

But there was so much of good in the bill as a whole that when the roll was called its critics joined its supporters and rolled up one of the most impressive majorities for it that has been given any administration measure since Roosevelt was inaugurated.

My criticism was directed wholly against title I, the straight old-age-pension plan. It was my position that the Government contribution was too small and that many States would get nothing for a considerable period of time while getting their old-age-pension laws in shape to conform to the Federal requirements. I wish now to look for a moment at the other side of the picture.

There are nine titles in this bill, some of which, for the benefit of dependent mothers and children, for crippled children, for maternity aid, for the Public Health Service, for vocational rehabilitation, were without any opposition whatever.

More than 100 national leaders, men and women in the various activities and walks of life, and all of them students of social security, working as 9 subcommittees for a period of 6 months, produced this bill.

The committees of the two Houses gave it hearings which fill 2,000 pages of testimony and the House committee considered it for 3 months. It was framed by skillful builders, who had at their command the knowledge and experience of the civilized world. As a whole, it is a rounded program of social security furnishing a firm foundation upon which the future may build. It is an enduring structure.

Title I lays the foundation and provides the plan for as liberal a system of old-age pensions as the taxpayers are willing to finance. It is not a question of how big a pension I am for, but how big a tax and where the tax will be laid. I will not repeat here my views expressed in other speeches on the bill that a greater share of the tax than has yet been proposed should be laid on those best able to bear it.

It was urged a number of times during the course of the debate that the people of the United States are pension-minded. If this is true, the only thing that remains to be done is to make them tax-minded.

Mr. Speaker, I would be less than fair if I did not admit that the social-security bill is a great forward step for the care of those unable to care for themselves, whether old or young, or the unemployed of working age, and on a national scale. I look for the Senate to improve this bill. Future Congresses will improve it. England, the most advanced country in social security in the world, finds it necessary to change its system from year to year. We will repeat this experience.

I have looked forward to the initiation of such a program for many years. I must not let temporary disappointment over one feature of the program blind me to the great benefits of the program as a whole. I pledged myself to fight for the most liberal plan of old-age pension we could finance. I have done so. I am proud to have had some small part in the beginning of a great national plan purely for the benefit of humanity. I can close these remarks in no more fitting way then to repeat here the opening statement of my first speech on the security bill:

> Every living man and woman ought to be interested in the question of old-age security. The specter of a destitute old-age shadows every life. The removal of this fear would be the supreme achievement of our civilization.

Mr. ANDREW of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am thoroughly sympathetic with the humane purposes of this bill, but I think it a crucial mistake to have lumped together in one omnibus bill so many different subjects of vast importance as old-age pensions, old-age insurance, unemployment compensation, aid to dependent children, aid to mothers, child welfare, vocational rehabilitation, public health, and the others that are therein included. It is utterly impossible for Congress in a few days to give to so many varied problems the careful and deliberate consideration that their vital importance and their sweeping consequences deserve. I consider it one of the great errors of our present administration that it insists upon attempting everything at once. Even though there are many ills to be cured, it is not a safe method to prescribe a great variety of medicines simultaneously, especially when some of the medicines are untested experiments and the patient is in a frail and very unstable condition of health.

One of the subjects included in this bill which is clearly desirable and for which I should very much like to have voted is old-age insurance, but this is inextricably tied up with a multitude of other questions. Moreover, the provisions of the bill dealing with this desirable subject are needlessly confused and complex, involving two different kinds of Federal old-age assistance superimposed upon State systems already existing in a majority of the States. The first, which is simple, understandable, and commendable in method, proposes to grant supplementary aid to the State systems and to encourage their establishment where they do not exist. The second proposes an additional Federal system which apparently overlaps the first and which is highly discriminatory in its application. It does not apply to aged farmers or farm laborers. It does not apply to aged fishermen and sailors. It does not apply to aged domestic servants or casual laborers. It does not apply to teachers or to employees of the Federal, State, or local Governments. Nevertheless it involves the accumulation of a gigantic reserve by the Federal Government which it is estimated will reach a total of $32,000,000,000, a sum greater than the whole national debt at the present time. The need for this second system, with its discriminatory exclusions and its monstrous reserve, seems to me dubious, to say the least.

Likewise with unemployment insurance, a problem for which most of us would like to see some reasonable solution. The part of the bill dealing with this subject is highly discriminatory. It does not provide insurance against unemployment in general as many may suppose, but only compensation to certain classes of people who are unemployed. Its provisions do not apply to farmers and farm hands, to fishermen and sailors, to domestic servants, to employees of Federal, State or local Governments, or to teachers. Furthermore, they do not cover employees of factories or shops or stores who work for persons or firms employing less than 10 people. These omissions, including more than half of the population, are bound to cause wide-spread disappointment and resentment.

The subject of unemployment insurance is an entirely new field for legislation; and we ought to be particularly sure that we know what we are doing before launching the Federal Government on a permanent policy in this untried field. Unemployment compensation, known as "the dole", has been tried in England for several years, but with doubtful success. It has never been tried or experimented with by any one of our 48 States, except Wisconsin, and there for less than a year. I cannot feel that there is need for such haste as to justify the enactment of a vast measure on a national scale which has never been really tried out in any of our States and which is so little thought out as to contain, for example, the discriminatory provisions just mentioned.

It has often been remarked that there are three more or less distinct goals for legislation in the United States today—first, relief; second, recovery; and third, reform. I think the order of their urgency is the order in which they are named. The millions of people out of work and without means of livelihood at the present time in this country need relief, and they need it now. On that account we voted the other day nearly $5,000,000,000 to furnish work and relief for those who are in need and without means of livelihood. We have provided abundantly, therefore, for immediate relief for the victims of the depression, assuming, of course, that the vast appropriation which we have placed in the hands of the President is fairly and wisely administered.

The recovery of normal conditions is our next most urgent goal, and in order to achieve that goal every effort of government should now be directed. The so-called "security bill" is not designed to contribute either to immediate relief or to recovery. In fact, it might very well serve to retard recovery if enacted at a time when business is feebly staggering to its feet. The 9-percent tax upon pay rolls, for which it calls, might easily cause apprehension if adopted in these disturbed times. The proposed building up of a gigantic reserve fund of $32,000,000,000, whose ultimate effects no one can foresee, raises other questions that might well give us pause. I feel that we should move very cautiously about such experiments that are only half thought out, that involve vast new burdens, and whose ultimate implications and consequences are but vaguely discerned. I cannot evade the conclusion that the commendable purposes of this bill could be far better provided for if more time for study and consideration were allowed, and if this bill were not precipitated through Congress, as have been so many other costly and futile experiments during the past two years.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which throws the protecting arm of a Nation's affection around our worthy old folks, is the acme of humane legislation.

Looking backward to the beginning of our history I see three great human achievements standing out like majestic mountains above the surface of lesser and trivial things. These are:

1776—A declaration that all men are born equal and the establishment on that principle of a great Nation dedicated to liberty.

1863—A proclamation that banished human slavery forever from American soil.

1935—The enactment of legislation to make life serene as the shadows lengthen and to emancipate our worthy aged from the slavery of want and poverty.

Three times since the birth of a Nation—in 1776, in 1863, and in 1935—humanity, disregarding the tides of selfishness that ceaselessly ebb and flow, has taken the pen of history in its hand and has written epochal chapters of progress that shine with the love that gleams from the Beatitudes.

It is our fortune today to be living participants on one of these great occasions. It is our fortune to be instruments of a guiding Providence in writing humanity's latest epoch-making decree into the statutes of the land. It is our fortune to have this opportunity to show our devotion for and adherence to that command so strongly emphasized in the Book of Books: "Honor thy father and thy mother."

By our action in passing this bill today we are saying that the man of advanced years who has worked hard and has tried to be a good citizen all his life and the faithful helpmate who has shared with him, in sunshine and in rain, the bitter and the sweet through all the years, shall not be compelled to drain the dregs of poverty and sorrow when their hair turns to silver and age slows their movements and dims their faculties. In effect we are saying to them:

You have nobly done your duty to society and now society owes to you the duty of seeing that you do not suffer and that the evening years of your lives shall be filled with comfort and cheer and happiness.

We are saying to the aged man who has worthily toiled and served that never again need he feel sick at heart when he reads the hateful sign "Old men not wanted", because we are going to take care of him for what he already has done.

Mr. Speaker, this is humanity's hour. Love is about to register a major victory. I am enthused with a happiness I never have felt on any other occasion—the happiness that comes from being a Member of Congress today with the privilege of casting a vote for this historic measure, which for the first time recognizes in a legislative enactment the Nation's sacred obligation to care for the worthy aged.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, the depression which has gripped the world for the past 4 years forcing millions upon millions out of employment, among them many who, by reason of advanced age, will not again be able to find suitable employment, has bluntly brought this great Nation of ours to realize that the time has come when we must face the problem of caring for our aged and unemployed.

With the humanitarian principles enunciated in this bill I am fully and heartily in accord and for that reason I am going to vote for it, even though I am not in agreement with all of its provisions and believe that there is room for improvement.

Title I of the bill provides for old-age pensions. I am a believer in the principle of old-age pensions. I would prefer that this bill carried a larger grant to the States in order that larger pensions might be paid by the States. For that reason I will support an amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], to make the maximum Federal contribution equal to $20 per month per person. With such a contribution from the Federal Government it would be possible for many of the States to pay as high as $40 or $50 per month.

I am whole-heartedly in favor of titles IV, V, and VI, which provide Federal grants to States for dependent children, maternal, and child welfare, and for the development of public-health services. I am especially interested in title V, which provides for vocational rehabilitation and the care of crippled children.

Titles III and IX provide for what is commonly known as "unemployment insurance." I am in favor of unemployment insurance, and I am sure that both employers and employees are for it, although, because of our present economic conditions, it may not result in national benefit at this time. However, it is a protection to both the employer and the employee and must be accepted by industry sooner or later.

Title II provides for "old-age annuities" and title VIII provides the method by which to raise the revenue necessary to meet the expenses. There seems to be considerable doubt as to the constitutionality of this section of the bill. Personally, I am not wholly in favor of the provisions of this section principally because, as it is written, it will destroy old-age-retirement systems set up by private industries. There are many such systems now in effect which are far more liberal in their benefits than are the benefits carried in this bill. In my opinion, the bill should be so written as to permit these private systems to remain in force. Perhaps it would have been better to have left the question of old-age annuities out of this bill to be taken up for consideration as a separate proposition at some future time. The adoption of this legislation will add an additional burden upon industry and labor and might retard rather than advance economic recovery under present conditions.

The whole bill is one of experimental legislation. That which we seek to accomplish is all new to us and we will have to learn by experience what is good and what is bad in it and amend it accordingly. I am hopeful that when the bill comes back to the House from the Senate it will be considerably improved and those things which we find objectionable now may be so adjusted in conference that the final result will be a much better and smoother piece of legislation.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words regarding this proposed bill. I do not believe this Congress ought to send out any message to the depressed people in America that they are getting an old-age-pension bill that will be of any service to them, at least for the coming year or the fiscal year beginning July 1.

This bill figures, on the assumption that every person estimated to be of the age mentioned in the bill is eligible, $6.63 per person for the year ending June 30, 1936. In my State of Oklahoma I estimate there are 150,000 people over the age limit of this bill. This means that we will get probably $1,000,000 out of the $49,750,000 provided, and, of course, the people in my State, if they all qualify—and they cannot all qualify—will receive the princely sum of $6.63 for the first year of the operation of this bill.

We ought to be frank about it. We ought not to try to deceive these people. The distinguished Chairman of the Rules Committee got up here yesterday and made the statement that there were a lot of decent destitute, but deluded people in America—those who favor the Townsend plan. I do not think the chairman ought to have made that statement. He does not know the people in my country. They are not deluded. I will tell you what he might have said. He might have said that they are denuded, because they have not anything to eat or anything to wear, and you can see how Dr. Townsend can get the immense following throughout the Nation that he has aroused in support of his pension plan.

A great deal of derision has been cast upon Dr. Townsend, and I think it should not have been done. He has aroused the public conscience of America and he has brought more forcefully to this Congress than anybody else that I know the articulate demands of the poor people of this country, and I will say this to you: I voted for the modified Townsend plan, or the McGroarty plan, and I did it intentionally, and I did it for the purpose of trying to provide something for the people who are now hungry, without clothes, and in distress throughout this Nation.

I do say this about the pending bill: I think in all probability, after this coming year, there may be some relief for these people, but we ought not to deceive them.

No, the people in western Oklahoma are not deluded. This bill presumes upon their ignorance, but they will not be deceived by the title.

I admit the ring of humanitarianism is heard in the title, and immediately it challenges the attention and demands the most serious consideration not only of Members of the Congress but of the entire citizenship of the Republic.

The committee report accompanying the bill is also appealing, and it eloquently keeps to the fore that beautiful concept of a perfect national life which forgets avarice and other forms of selfishness and renders real service to the unfortunate.

Solicitude for new-born babies, proper medical care for mothers in maternity, assistance to crippled children, relief to the aged, abolition of poorhouses, putting our own on a plane of decent living, routing unemployment, and attaining social security.

What a program!

No Member of this Congress but who favors the program of the title and the report. They are charmingly fascinating, and they run the gamut of human life. They bridge it completely from the cradle to the grave. If the provisions of the bill carry out the blandishment of the title and report, no one could object.

We should not count too much on preambles. The place to look is in the body of the bill. All of us know that many valueless books have been sold because of a beautiful prospectus. The lithographer's art has taken billions of dollars from people for worthless stocks and bonds. This is because people are prone to rely too much upon words and pictures.

The bill does not live up to its title, and it is nothing short of tragedy to denominate it an old-age-pension bill. In fact, title I is denominated "Grants to States for old-age assistance."

What are the grants the States will get? Forty-nine million, seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars for the year ending June 30, 1936. There are said to be not less than 7,500,000 people in the United States who are 65 years of age or older. If all these age eligibles ask for the assistance, there will be $6.63 for each one from now until June 30, 1936. All those of the qualifying age will not get their part during the first year of the operation, because many will not apply for it, some are excluded by the terms of the bill, and none can get it until the State in which they live has passed a law conforming to the requirements made of the States in this bill before their citizens can receive anything under the bill.

Oklahoma will have to have its legislature enact a statute of compliance before any person in the State can get a dollar under this law. I do not have access to the Oklahoma constitution, but I am thinking the constitution will have to be amended in order to give authority to the legislature to make a levy for old-age pensions. In other words, unless the State can and does make provision for paying as much as $15 per month to the aged, then the Federal Government will not pay them $15. If Oklahoma pays her old people $5 per month, then the Government will pay an additional $5 per month, making the total pension to be received $10 per month, and in no event will the Government contribute an amount exceeding $15 per month for the benefit of any aged person.

If Oklahoma and all the other States now had qualifying statutes, there would be no more than the $49,750,000 with which to pay old-age pensions between now and June 30, 1936.

Nobody can know how many are going to apply for this assistance. If all the estimated age eligibles should apply, it will require $1,350,000,000 for the Government to pay them $15 each per month for the coming fiscal year. Upon the assumption that not more than one-half would apply, I offered an amendment to raise the appropriation from $49,750,000 to $500,000,000 so the Government would have enough money to actually pay $15 per month. This amendment was voted down.

Just prior to the offering of my amendment, I cast my vote to substitute the McGroarty bill for the present bill. I did this because the McGroarty bill carried provisions which would enable the Government to pay about $50 per month to our old people. This bill was a modification of the former McGroarty bill, which was the Townsend plan.

I do not think $50 is adequate for an old-age pension, but I certainly prefer that to $15, which the old may never get.

I hope the President will find a way to supplement this $49,750,000 with money from the $4,880,000,000 public-works bill, so our old people will really get substantial aid in the coming fiscal year.

This Congress has lavished money by the billions on banks, railroads, building-and-loan associations, and the like, and yet there is only a possible $6.63 for each old person during the next year.

Sometimes I feel that God has something to do with Dr. Townsend and his movement. Dr. Townsend may have dipped too heavily in the bright colors in painting his rainbow of hope to our miserable old people. If so, his mistake was on the side of humanity. Harriet Beecher Stowe chose the most despicable characters of which the mind could conceive to portray hatred of human slavery. Uncle Tom's Cabin precipitated the bloodiest war in history. Harriet Beecher Stowe won.

I should not be surprised to see America shake off her apparent lethargy toward old-age pensions as a direct result of the efforts of Dr. Townsend.

I am going to give my support to this present bill because it is all that will be offered to our old. Beginning with June 30, 1936, there is a possibility of their receiving a maximum of $15 per month from the Federal Government. I trust that in the second session of this Congress or in some future Congress the richest and most powerful Government of the world will meet its full duty and responsibility to our aged people by so amending this bill that gloom and despair will be banished from the closing chapters of millions of well-meant and well-spent lives.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, the social-security program which has been presented to this legislative body for enactment into law has received more attention from our citizenry than any other legislation presented to this Congress, mainly because it "reaches home" to almost every wage earner. Its passage will stamp this Democratic Congress as one of the most important historically in the period of our existence as a sovereign entity.

During the extensive hearings on this legislation and the liberal time granted for debate on the floor of the House every opportunity has been given for the presentation of social-security plans, ideas, and even palliatives. Very little can be said regarding this legislation which has not already been stated, discussed, studied, and debated. If it were not for the fact that I have given much time to the study of pensions and industrial insurance during the past 15 years, and have definite views on the subject, I would hesitate to subscribe anything to the voluminous testimony already presented.

OLD-AGE PENSION

I intend to discuss in particular the old-age-pension features, because I feel that this title in the bill marks a great forward step which will correct the evils existing in many of the pension systems now operating in business and industry.

A few years ago I made an extensive study of 54 pension systems in effect in business and industry throughout the United States. All three types of systems were found among these concerns: (1) Solely contributory, (2) noncontributory, and (3) partly contributory, most of the plans being noncontributory. In many cases I found that no security whatsoever was given to the prospective pensioner because the pension plan was not on an actuarial basis and sufficient reserves (or funds) were not set up to assure the payment of a definite pension when due. In most of the plans the employees had no voice in the administration of the pension; the system was controlled solely by the management; and both the amount of the pension and pensionable age were left to the discretion of the employer. Because of the unsound basis, sufficient funds were not set up to take care of the increasing number of pensioners who were added to the lists as time went on. After employees had spent the best years of their productive life in an industry they were at the mercy of the employer for protection in old age. The sad history of such pension plans shows that there was very little security in old age for the employee.

Especially in times of depression, pension allotments were cut, many were discontinued entirely, and in a vast number of cases old pensioners were brought back into plants from pension rolls to give what little they could in a productive way to the industry during their aged life. Many employees who were of pension age were continued in employment, being carried on the pay roll as "hidden pensioners" because no definite funds were available for direct pensions.

The fear of old age has taken its toll among American workmen. Years have been taken from their productive life by worries of the future when they would be no longer able to produce. Faced with the problem of onrushing old age they became less productive and even suffered accidents because of the nervous strain under which they were working.

This legislation, in its liberal provisions, is a forward step which will guarantee to the worker, through Government and State grants, that security in old age which has been denied him in the past. It is sound in principle and liberal in its provisions. While I personally would like to see the Government's contribution increased above the maximum provided in the bill, yet I realize that this legislation is laying the foundation for a system of guaranteed pensions which can be built upon as we profit from our experiences with this new venture on our journey to the ultimate security of the individual.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The unemployment-insurance features of the bill are, in my opinion, experiments in social legislation which must be tested by experience before their ultimate value can be determined. Apparently sound in principle, it recognizes that the security of business through sustained buying power, the security of the individual through an assured income during periods of unemployment, and even the security of Government through the elimination of the hazards of depression must be secured through the cooperation and contributions of all interested parties for the common welfare of all.

While I look on the pay-roll tax with some concern, particularly when I realize that the average worker is now taxed from his weekly wage for health and accident insurance, and other forms of group insurance, including death benefits, and for fraternal insurance benefits of various types, I, nevertheless, will support this legislation, because I know that it is a serious attempt to recognize the security of the worker as a governmental responsibility.

There are two important factors which we must recognize in passing upon this legislation: First, the price level must be sustained and increased in order to make it possible for business to stand the additional burden; and second, the wage level must be kept at a high standard so that the worker can afford the tax. We must realize that 30 cents per week tax means more to the man who makes $10 per week, for all his income is needed for sustenance, than $1.50 per week means to the man making $50 per week, for only part of his income is needed for the necessities of life.

With so many burdens upon them the worker in the low-wage brackets can well repeat the old Army saying, "All we do is sign the pay roll." To my mind, the best insurance for the American worker is the assurance of sustained employment—the security of a job.

SOCIAL-SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mr. Speaker, this is a great day for America. Federal recognition of old-age security as a governmental responsibility, the insurance of the worker against the hazards of unemployment, Federal assistance through grants to States for dependent children, child welfare, and public-health service—"the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first", as we were admonished by our great leader, President Roosevelt—these objectives are about to become realities.

In supporting this legislation we are discharging an obligation to those millions of our people who, after looking for so many years at the dark clouds of fear and uncertainty, can now see the bright sunshine beaming upon the future, which will give them the security to which they are justly entitled.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, we have been discussing and considering this social-security bill for more than a week here on the floor of this House. The Ways and Means Committee have held hearings on the bill H. R. 7260, originally known as the "Wagner-Lewis measure", for several weeks.

Yet with all this deliberation and consideration I do not believe that this administration measure will prove very satisfactory. In respect to old-age pensions I would prefer the new Townsend plan introduced by Congressman McGROARTY. In respect to old-age pensions and also unemployment, social-insurance, and other social benefits I think the Lundeen bill is far more adequate than the administration bill. When offered for a vote here I voted for both of these bills, first the Townsend bill and later the Lundeen measure, both of which were turned down by the majority of this House. Although the administration measure is not at all liberal enough and adequate in its provisions, I am, nevertheless, voting for it because it does offer something to those in need, and whatever help and assistance is received is better than what the Federal Government heretofore has provided, which has been nothing.

And the passage of this social legislation is a great step forward toward eventual social security, and a definite advance to bring about a Nation-wide program of benefits for the noble aged people of our Nation, dependent or crippled children, the unemployed, and to provide for infant and maternal welfare, vocational rehabilitation, and public-health services.

The act covers nine different subjects:

First, old-age pensions.

Second, old-age insurance.

Third, unemployment insurance.

Fourth, dependent children.

Fifth, infant and maternal welfare.

Sixth, welfare services for children.

Seventh, vocational rehabilitation.

Eighth, care of crippled children.

Ninth, Federal public-health services.

It makes 9 appropriations and sets up 3 different taxation systems: 1 on employees and 2 on employers.

The appropriations are made to three different agencies:

First. To the Federal Social Security Board: (a) For subsidies to State old-age-pension systems; (b) for subsidies to State plans for dependent children; (c) for aid in the administration of State unemployment-insurance systems; (d) for administrative expenses of the board.

Second. To the United States Department of Labor: (a) For promotion of the health of mothers and children, especially in rural areas; (b) for services to crippled children and the provision of medical, surgical, and corrective care for them; (c) for establishment, extension, and strengthening of public-welfare services in rural areas for children; (d) for extending and strengthening programs for vocational rehabilitation.

Third. To the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service: (a) For the establishment and maintenance of public-health services.

BENEFITS SHOULD START AT ONCE

I object to the provision that old-age payments and other payments by the Federal Government and the insurance features are not effective at once.

This old-age benefit to the worthy pioneers of our land should be paid to them starting now. Not a year or more from now after many of them have died. These elders are in need of food, clothing, medical and dental care, and other necessities of life. If the pension payments were started now, in more liberal and adequate amounts however, the wheels of industry would start turning and the income to the farmer would increase and somewhat better times would return.

Of course, other fundamental changes are necessary before permanent social and economic justice comes to the American people.

First of all we have to shake loose of the "money crowd" of Wall Street and international bankers. The money and credit problems must be solved and remedied and not for the interests of the big bankers but for the great mass of common people of the Nation and for our own Federal Government. The evils of usury, high interest rates, must be abolished.

We must have money and credit justice for the American farmer. Legislation such as the Frazier-Lemke bill is necessary. Why should not our Government loan money to the farmers on their farms, the foundation of our country, at low rates of interest and amortization payment? Is not their security, the land, as good as the so-called "gold bonds" of foreign nations to whom we loaned millions at virtually no rate of interest and even then were forced to cancel a good portion of the loan and still not receive payments except from sturdy little Finland?

We need cost of production plus a fair margin of profit for the farmers of the United States. Any other business stops production if there are no profits but the farmers cannot stop producing because if they did there would be a famine. I often wonder when the factory owners and the industrial people will realize that when the farmer prospers then they will prosper.

The Patman bonus bill payment would help the veterans and others as well. They should be paid their adjusted-service certificates. They have earned this money, it is theirs, why should it not be paid to them now when they need it the most for themselves and their families.

These measures would help greatly. A prosperous people have more courage and power to promote economic and social justice than a nation of impoverished people, who dare not protest when food and shelter for their wife and children are at stake.

Virtually all other major countries of the world have adopted social-security legislation years ago. Our country has been one of the last to recognize our obligations to the aged people, the pioneers, the builders, and the people who have created the wealth of our Nation. They, through no fault of theirs, but because of the vicious monopolistic money and credit system, have lost most if not all of their life savings and their property values.

PURPOSE AND SCOPE

The need for legislation on the subject of social security has been apparent to the liberal progressive thinkers and leaders of the country for a long time. On every hand the lack of such security is evidenced by human suffering, weakened morale, increased crime, and increased public expenditures.

This situation necessitates two complementary courses of action: We must relieve the existing distress and should devise measures to reduce destitution and dependency in the future.

Thus far in the depression we have merely attempted to relieve existing distress, but the time has come for a more comprehensive and constructive attack on insecurity. Liberal progressives have attempted to waken the old parties to the need for such a program. Some principles of such a program are laid in the present bill.

Work for the employables on relief is contemplated in the work relief bill; a second vital part of the program for security is presented in this bill. The bill is designed to aid the States in taking care of the dependent members of their populations, and to make a beginning in the development of measures which will reduce dependency in the future. It deals with four major subjects: Old-age security, unemployment compensation, security for children, and public health. These subjects are all closely related, all being concerned with major causes of dependency. Together they constitute an important step in what I hope eventually will lead to a well-rounded, unified, long-range program for social security. And that is why I am voting for this bill.

This bill will have to be greatly improved and liberalized in the course of time, as has been the history of all other major new legislation. But it makes a beginning toward economic security which has been long overdue.

This beginning is made along lines which are in accord with our Christian life and charitable traditions. It is not class legislation, but a measure which will benefit the entire public.

From the governmental point of view this bill contemplates a united attack upon economic insecurity by the Federal and State Governments. It does not vest dictatorial powers in any Federal officials.

NUMEROUS OBJECTIONS

Having stated my support of this measure I also wish to outline some of my objections which I hope in the future will be corrected.

First. The bill is wholly inadequate and will not bring the full results sought to be obtained.

Second. Many of its provisions cannot be made effective for several years, too long a time to wait for those expecting relief and aid now. And this will be a sad and bitter disappointment to those who have been looking hopefully for aid and relief from the administration.

Third. The Federal payments of $15 are not nearly sufficient.

Fourth. The age limit of 65 years is too high; it should be not above 60 years.

Fifth. The administration of the law would be discriminatory to people living in States that are bankrupt or nearly so since they would receive no aid or but very little, since Federal payments are based on the cooperation and payment of the States. Therefore, I believe that the Federal Government should stand a much larger portion of the pension payments.

Sixth. The bill is too complicated; would require very large administrative expenditures and would be hampered by too much red tape in its administration.

Seventh. Provision for benefits to crippled children, for public health, maternal and child welfare, dependent children, and vocational rehabilitation are wholly inadequate and more liberal provisions should be made.

SUPPORTS TOWNSEND PLAN

To remedy the objections to the old-age sections of this measure I would urge the enactment of the Townsend plan, which I think is worthy of a trial. I have yet to find truthful objections to the plan. It is admitted that it would increase business and industry. The Townsend plan would put out money in the pockets of the people who would spend it. While the administration bill, which demands a 2- to 6-percent tax on all pay rolls for the old-age-insurance and unemployment-insurance features of the measure, will take out of circulation for many years both the share assessed the employee and the employer. This cuts down their purchasing power, reduces demand, and, of course, reduces production. The people have the use and need for the output of factories and the farms, but they have not the money to buy. The Townsend-plan benefits would bring considerable prosperity back to the farmers, laborers, and all the people, because there would be an increased demand for everything.

The Townsend plan provides a decent pension to the people over 60 years of age. The cost of the plan would not be a burden on the Government. There would only be comparatively small appropriations for the simple administration of the act. The new modified Townsend plan provides for a 2-percent tax on inheritances and gifts and a one-tenth increase in all present income taxes in addition to a 2-percent transaction tax. Although this latter tax would cost the employed persons less than what he will be required to pay under the old-age insurance features of the social-security bill, he would receive a much larger pension at 60 years than he would at 65 years under the social-security bill.

TAX ON ABILITY TO PAY

However, I would personally wish to see the entire elimination of the transaction tax or, at least, reduced to 1 percent, with food exempted. It would be better to double or more, if necessary, the present income-tax rates on all incomes of more than $10,000 a year. And is not this fair? Should not taxes be based on the ability to pay? And should not money needed for the people as a whole be received from those who have the greatest portion of it?

I also would greatly raise the rates of tax on gifts and inheritances. Statistics and surveys made by the Government departments and by private research indicate that a large enough sum could be raised by these taxes to pay from $60 to $100 or more per month to each person over 60 years old who is not now receiving an adequate income to live according to our accepted American standard.

With the adoption of liberal-adequate social-security program I believe many of us will be able to enjoy a more abundant life, have more time for personal spiritual enrichment, more time for reading and travel, more time for recreation and rest; more time for sociability and comradeship; more time for cultural development, all of which our old people, our fathers and mothers, so much deserve.

It is a pity that this House has not more liberal progressive Members who are more sympathetic to the needs of the great group of our people who would benefit by a more liberal and adequate "social-security act." Perhaps in a later Congress such liberal progressive Congressmen will be here to pass legislation which will create a more abundant life for our great Nation.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, ever since the beginning of recorded history nations have strived to obtain social and economic security.

In studying the history of such nations as the Syrian Empire, the Babylonian Empire, the Roman Empire, the Spanish Empire, and others, we find they were ever and constantly trying to adjust the social and economic fabric so as to have social and economic security.

Of course, everyone knows that they failed. These nations came upon the stage of time and occupied the spotlight for a space of years, played their part, and then collapsed and broke down, and other nations took the stage as time went on, until now, we, the United States, occupy a large space on the stage.

Just how long we will occupy the stage depends entirely on how well we play our part. If we play our part well and wisely, we may be privileged to stay on the stage in the spotlight a long time, as compared with the time that the other nations stayed on the stage and in the spotlight. It is interesting to know that all the nations that appeared on the stage at some time or another and are now entirely off or else playing a minor role, failed for the same reasons. It is also interesting because the reasons were these very, very simple reasons.

I hear you say, "Why did these nations come and go like the winter's snow?"

Mr. Speaker, they came and went because the individuals who ruled, or attempted to rule them, were fused and dominated with one or more of the elements that always bring chaos or destruction, namely, greed, deceit, jealousy, and dishonesty. For instance, Spain, with her Armada, thought she could get social and economic security through certain practices, including robbery of other nations, looting of resources and funds that did not belong to her, lying and intriguing her fellow men, and other material gestures. The Roman Emperor put to practice the same tactics that Spain used, only shrouded with a greater degree of shrewdness, deceit, and a more clever manipulation of affairs. So it was with others that I might mention.

Mr. Speaker, we all know the sad, sad results of the practices of these nations. Spain, with her Armada, was swept aside like a feather in a summer breeze, and the Roman Empire, with her mighty armies, had sprung up within her own borders, institutions that destroyed her.

My fellow citizens, we need not fear any foe from without our borders. If this great Nation of ours, the United States of America, is ever to suffer a set-back, it will be because of the institutions that spring up within our own borders. Already institutions have sprung up within our borders that have in them the elements of destruction, the elements or germs that if they are not killed will bring about a chaotic condition in our Nation that we will hand down to our children and our children's children.

Mr. Speaker, we can have social security and economic security only when we put heart and soul in our institutions, in our home life, in our school life, and in our church life.

We can meet here year after year and appropriate billions and billions of dollars to set into action our industrial wheels of the Nation and satisfy temporarily the hunger of the millions, but to stabilize our social and economic fabric we must create a set-up whereby all men will have an opportunity to go out into the fields, the mills, the factories, and the mines and earn an honest livelihood. We can never accomplish this until we fully realize and put into practice a procedure that will prevent a few from hoarding the billions of dollars so that the millions do not have enough to hold their bodies and souls together. We cannot have this set-up for social and economic security as long as great utilities and great banking interests step in and take that which does not morally and socially belong to them. We cannot have social and economic security until old men and old women, who have spent the producing period of their lives in hard work, are actually cared for with a proper pension and a comfortable place to live.

Mr. Speaker, a nation that has a large percent of its people on the dole is always a nation that is going in the hole. The longer the nation is on the dole, the deeper the nation goes in the hole. The finer things that are in the make-up of men, those finer elements that you find in the very tingling of the blood and in the very heartbeat, are destroyed when men are put on dole and kept there. We as a Nation must put these men and women back to work in useful and constructive avenues.

Mr. Speaker, every dollar that we spend today in putting men and women back to work, will save our children's children $2 when they take over the reins of Government that will be handed them. People that are constantly idle are people that are constantly decaying, socially, intellectually, morally, physically, and spiritually. I have been supporting this social-security bill and I am going to vote for it, but it is only the beginning. There is not enough backbone in the bill. There is no place in the bill where I find that the man who is found physically fit by at least two doctors must work if he wants help. That is, he would not be on dole relief if he is physically fit and has a place to work.

Mr. Speaker, until we take a definite stand along this line, we will have all kinds of trouble in keeping our social and economic fabric adjusted. What are you going to do with the men between the ages of 55 and 65 years of age? The mills, the factories, the mines, and the farms will not employ them. The insurance companies will not carry them, and the fraternal societies will not carry them. The set-up has been fixed, nobody knows how, but we know that not 1 man out of 10 between the ages of 55 and 65 can get work any place these days. I would like to find something in this bill that would care for these men between the ages of 55 and 65 who show by records that they are worthy of care.

This bill, as I say, is not all I would like to see—in taking care of children, mothers, and honest men who cannot get work. But thank God, it is a start in the right direction, and it will go down to our glory that this Congress had the sand to create such a measure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, in passing the Social Security Act, the House has approved a tremendously significant and progressive piece of pioneer legislation. No more important bill has been acted upon by this Congress. Since my Membership in this body I have never cast an affirmative vote with more personal satisfaction.

This bill should cause every Member, and especially the Democratic membership, to rejoice, because:

First. It writes into Federal law, and, I believe we can say, for the first time, the principle of economic security.

Second. It is consistent and logical, and not a hopeful leap into the dark, as has been much of our emergency legislation since March 1933. It is a logical step under our economic circumstances.

Third. It is founded on definite Jeffersonian principles and philosophy.

This bill is only a beginning. It is a first recognition by law of the big outstanding fact in our present situation—a definite determination by the American people that from now on there shall be more economic security mixed into this competitive profit system of ours.

The bill is logical because, in my opinion, it places where it should be placed the responsibility for economic security. Government, under the American economic system, cannot be responsible for the support of all its citizens. In an enlightened age, such as we now lay claim to, Government should be responsible for the support of its unemployables—people who cannot work. Taxpayers can be justly required to support these people. But Government has no right to demand taxes for the support of employables—people who are able to work. The economic system must be made to support them. That distinction and responsibility is recognized in this legislation.

I believe this bill has very serious faults. It is an omnibus bill. As usual, the "brain trusters" are attempting to "bite off more than they can chew." I think it would have been far better not to include all of the dealt-with subjects in one piece of legislation. I believe the combined titles III and IX to be unconstitutional. Parts of this bill have a strong Fascist flavor. But time will take care of all that.

The big accomplishment, for which we should get down on our knees and give thanks, is that at least a beginning has been made toward national recognition by law of the problem of economic security for all of our citizens. In spite of criticism and lamentation, it would seem that America is still making progress toward a firmer and broader security for her people.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, the House has given consideration to H. R. 7260, the so-called "social-security bill", for over a week. Much has been said during the discussion of the bill, both as to its merits and demerits. Much has been made of proposals for various phases of the measure which were believed to better accomplish the desired results than those indicated in the bill, and criticism has been directed to certain portions of the bill which were not believed necessary or desirable at this time. Many excellent presentations have been made. Yet after careful consideration of all that has been said there remain grave doubts as to the desirability of enactment of the legislation in its entirety, with all its implications and ramifications at this time. The multiplicity of subjects, dealt with under separate titles, and the vast expense involved makes the measure the more difficult of comprehension and interpretation, not only for the Members of the House but the members of the Ways and Means Committee themselves, who have worked so diligently on the measure since Congress convened and who by no means seemed to be in agreement in all the various phases of social security proposed.

The Democratic chairman of the committee presenting the bill has admitted the measure is far from perfection, and will need changing from time to time. The bill attempts to represent the views of many interested in various phases of our social life. The bill deals with many subjects coming under the general definition of social security. It is to be greatly regretted that a measure of so much importance and one that will so greatly affect our national life combines so many subjects, all admittedly related to social security but all differing greatly in their application and consequence.

The purpose of old-age pensions which is dealt with under title I, few can question. The basic principle that the primary responsibility for this type of assistance to the aged rests with the States as outlined in the bill is correct, and the desirability of Federal assistance in these times is recognized. However, the qualifications for aid are much lower in the proposed measure than those called for in my own State's (Ohio) old-age-pension law, one of the most modern in the country. Ohio's requirement permits only those to qualify for old-age pensions who have resided continuously for 15 years in the State prior to reaching the age of 65 years. Under the proposed measure, 5 years during the 9 years immediately preceding application for old-age assistance is the limit of condition of eligibility, and any State plan which imposes a greater requirement shall not be considered as eligible for Federal assistance. It will, therefore, be necessary for Ohio to materially reduce its resident requirement before it can qualify for Federal assistance and such reduction would mean a distinct lowering of its high standards.

Similarly, there can be no quarrel with the purposes outlined in the bill under titles IV, V, and VI of assistance to States in services related to dependent children, maternity, and child welfare, crippled children, and vocational rehabilitation, as well as the investigatory work of the Public Health Service. The various proposals in the bill are offered as incentives to the States to practice these worthy activities.

Unemployment relief is another but newer phase of social security, but believed desirable, where possible, to meet the fear and despair of unemployment on the part of those to whom, through no fault of their own, opportunity to work is denied in times of economic depression. Again this form of relief is primarily the function of the citizens of the States as is intended in the proposed bill. Here, however, under title III we find no suggestion as to employer and employee sharing the burden of this relief, as is customary in other nations of the world, and as would appear fair on the part of those primarily to be benefited. The entire tax is placed upon the employer.

In the section of the bill, however, dealing with old-age annuities, payable wholly without regard to need, we find a proposal of the Federal Government to enter a field of social security heretofore dealt with exclusively by private initiative and through voluntary action. Under the proposed measure this form of security is compulsory. It is really compulsory thrift, and while the method proposed is suggested to eventually offset or supersede the burden of old-age pensions, its efficacy at this time and the manner in which it is to be accomplished are gravely questioned.

A study of unemployment insurance in its application in other countries leads to the conclusion that it is impossible to measure on an actuarial basis the net amount of relief afforded, as between taxes levied and benefits granted, in any plan of so broad a nature as that proposed.

The result is, as proposed in the bill, the levying of two new and additional types of Federal taxes, two pay-roll taxes on employers—which, as it relates to unemployment insurance, is referred to in the committee report as a tax imposed on each employer for the privilege of having individuals in his employ—and an income tax on certain classes of employees of low incomes.

These taxes are for the purpose of financing the social security provisions of the bill, particularly those dealing with old-age annuities and unemployment insurance, and must be supplemented by other taxes sufficient to take care of the deficits in the annuity fund under title II from the date these annuities become effective until 1970, when it is estimated the fund will for the first time become self-supporting on the basis of taxes on employers and employees and the contributions of the Government at the outset. They are in addition to the increase in taxes which may be expected to meet our rapidly increasing cost of Government as practiced today.

These taxes are very much akin to sales taxes, or taxes on production, subject to pyramiding. Take, for instance, the many parts of an automobile made of steel, the products of one of our basic industries. Taxes as proposed will be levied on both employer and employee operating ore mines, coal mines, coke plants, stone quarries, vessels used in transportation, blast furnaces, steel plants, rolling mills, machine shops, and the various processes from which the finished parts are the result, and will be applicable to each of these various processes. These various pay-roll taxes must all enter into the cost of the finished products in addition to existing cost of materials and labor and the various elements that go to make up the whole.

The result must inevitably follow of increased prices in all industrial products. The question naturally arises, whether the consumer can accept these higher costs and whether industry in its present uncertain state can meet this additional burden, particularly in competition with foreign trade, both at home and abroad.

The bill permits industry to offset a State tax levied for unemployment insurance against the tax due the Federal Government to the extent of 90 percent. Not so with old-age benefits, where no credit is allowed for contributions into voluntary company-employee benefit funds. The natural result will be the discontinuance of voluntary funds because of the double expense involved, and much confusion and hardship may result from this, particularly where benefits paid under these voluntary agreements are greater than those proposed. These voluntary contributions to benefit funds, conducted under regulations satisfactory to the proposed Security Board should be permitted to be credited against Federal tax, the same as is proposed in the case of compulsory benefits, and permitted to be continued.

Attention has been directed to the fact that although the rural population of our country is estimated at 40 percent, neither benefits nor taxes are imposed upon our agricultural population. Yet it must be conceded that the taxes as proposed will eventually be paid by the consumers of this country through increased prices, and from this we can deduct the fact that our rural population will be paying 40 percent of the taxes without the opportunity of direct benefits.

This brief synopsis of the proposals of the bill will indicate the magnitude of the measure which is suggested in times of economic distress, and when ways and means to meet our unemployment problems are paramount. The question naturally arises whether the proposed benefits to be received from the enactment of this legislation and the successful operation of this measure in the years to come are not too drastic at this time. The tremendous burden placed upon both employer and employee through the tremendous taxes necessary are estimated, according to the report of the committee, at approximately $228,000,000, effective January 1, 1936; $1,059,000,000, effective January 1, 1937; and increasing to $2,784,000,000 as of January 1, 1950.

The administration has through its advisory committees given time and study to this whole program and, it is understood, has recommended the complete adoption of it, together with the tremendous tax program involved. From this it may be assumed the imposition of this tremendous tax burden levied against industry and those of low incomes, who are today struggling against the depression, is with the sanction of the administration for the purpose of establishing a system from which will come benefits only in years in the future.

Yet there are two features of the bill affecting the very fundamentals of our Government and our Nation's future which seem to transcend the benefits of the proposed legislation, and which should be eliminated at this time or else properly corrected before enactment into law.

The Constitution reserves to the States or the people all powers not specifically delegated to the Federal Government. The Constitution gives Congress power to levy and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. The purposes of taxation therefore are general, and the right of the Federal Government to tax a specified group of citizens for the purpose of establishing an old-age-annuity fund for a specified and qualified group, is seriously questioned.

The measure before the House is primarily one dealing with social security and providing for the general welfare by establishing various systems of benefits, but is not revenue-raising legislation. Included in it we find provisions attempting to use revenue for the purpose of old-age-annuity benefits to be conferred upon certain groups of citizens and under a compulsory method.

The power to tax a certain class of wage earners but not all, and the proposal to grant benefits on the basis of this tax for a specified group—the same as the specified class of wage earners to be taxed—and payable wholly regardless of the need of the recipient, does not appear to be in accordance with the powers conferred upon the Federal Government. Surely such a proposal does not seem to be in conformity with the intent of the basic law in this country, and just as surely Congress should not enact a measure or in this case part of a measure, which has been stated to be the very heart of the old-age-assistance portion of the bill, without being very certain of its effectiveness as well as its legality.

The measures proposed are not depression or emergency measures but are to be permanent. They are to be effective in times of economic prosperity as well as in times of depression. The purpose of setting up an old-age-annuity reserve through the taxation method proposed in title VIII of the bill is to prevent that group so taxed from eventually requiring old-age pensions as a national necessity. The courts, however, have drawn the line at helping the afflicted class merely because that class was in danger of becoming public charges. In the case of St. Paul Trust & Savings Bank v. American Clearing Co. (291 Fed. 212 (1923)), the Court said:

> Always the fundamental principle has been recognized that the power of taxation can only be used in aid of a public object, that is, an object which is within the purpose for which governments are established; and such power cannot be exercised in aid of enterprises strictly private, for the benefit of individuals, though in some remote or incidental or collateral way the local public may be benefited thereby.

Further, the Ohio statute authorizing taxation to pay blind persons a certain sum per year was held invalid because not confined to blind persons in need of assistance and so a private purpose. The Court stated:

> If the power of the legislature to confer an annuity upon any class of needy citizens is admitted upon the ground that its tendency will be to prevent them from becoming a public charge, then innumerable classes may clamor for similar bounties, and, if not upon equally meritorious ground, still on ground that is valid in point of law; and it is doubted that any line could be drawn short of an equal distribution of property.

Auditor of Lucas County v. State of Ohio (75 O. S. 114 (1906)).

State governments whose powers are unlimited except for the specific limitations in their constitutions have always taken upon themselves the care of their own poor and indigent peoples. Under our theory of constitutional government it is conceivable that this duty should be exclusively that of the State governments. Unless we are to become a nationalized government rather than a union of States, it must always be within the province of the States primarily to take care of individuals. If we are to remain a union of independent sovereignties we must follow the constitutional theory of taxation set up by John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, when he said in Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat. R. 1, 199):

This—

does not interfere with the power of the States to tax for the support of their own governments; nor is the exercise of that power by the States an exercise of any portion of the power that is granted to the United States. In imposing taxes for State purposes, they are not doing what Congress is empowered to do. Congress is not empowered to tax for those purposes which are within the exclusive province of the States.

Another serious objection to the proposed measure is the stamp of approval given to continuing a Federal debt of at least $33,000,000,000 to meet the amount estimated as necessary in the compulsory annuity reserve fund, as called for under title II. The bill provides that this fund must be invested in Government-guaranteed obligations, yielding at least 3 percent, which places a burden of about $1,000,000,000 per annum on the Federal Treasury in interest charges. Such a requirement has a definite harmful effect on the credit of our Nation.

This proposal would bring about a new method of financing future Government obligations—not through the citizens of the country as heretofore but through a constantly increasing fund which the Government holds as trustee for a certain group of its citizens. To have the Government, in its capacity as trustee of funds belonging to a specified group of its citizens, invest those funds in its own obligations is a practice contrary to sound fiduciaryship, a practice detrimental to the credit of the country, and manifestly improper from the standpoint of those citizens who contribute to the fund.

Today our immediate and greatest problem is to reestablish opportunity for employment whereby the many millions out of work may have a chance of gainful occupation. Corollary to that is the need of caring for those unfortunates who have neither the means of support nor the physical requirement of employment.

Would it not be wiser to accept so much of the proposed program as will help meet our present problem and adopt the balance from time to time as the economic improvement throughout the country permits and as it can be developed upon a sound basis, the result of more than comparatively hasty consideration? Through such a policy, confidence in our future and in our Government, among employee and employer alike, might be restored and the solution of our unemployment problems hastened.

Although much in sympathy with many portions of the bill providing assistance for the aged and the unemployed, as well as aid for dependent children, maternal and child-health services, and general public-health activities, the bill as at present proposed has defects which appear more than sufficient to offset the benefits desired. It is to be hoped the questionable features of the measure will be corrected or eliminated in its consideration in the Senate. It is believed most unwise to have the measure as now proposed enacted into law, since in a subject of such serious import it is highly desirable that such defects as are possible be corrected before adoption rather than subsequent attempts to remedy a measure of such magnitude.

Some social-insurance plan national in scope is desirable for our country. The bill under consideration attempts a start. But in its enactment full thought must be given to all its implications; every effort should be made to make it workable; the experience of past practices, both at home and abroad, should be carefully weighed; and the weak points of the present proposal strengthened and corrected as revealed. Criticism should be welcomed as an effort to strengthen rather than an attempt to destroy.

In my judgment, we cannot afford to forget the future in legislating on the problems of the day. That would only bring a recurrence of our present ills in a greater degree. If this country is to survive and prosper, in working out the solution of our problems we must build on solid ground for the future.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, we have presented to this House the first complete program for social insurance ever introduced in the House of Representatives. H. R. 7598, in the Seventy-third Congress, introduced February 2, 1934, and H. R. 2827, introduced January 3, 1935, are based on fundamental principles which will endure. These principles must be incorporated into our statute books if we are to have permanent, adequate, successful social security.

In this crisis it is of supreme importance to take care of our millions of unemployed now—today; not in the dim, distant future. In this crisis we must take care of our aged at once, now, and not some day in the future, when most of them are dead and gone.

The Lundeen workers' bill, H. R. 2827, provides immediate unemployment insurance and old-age compensation, whereas the administration bill does absolutely nothing for the 15,000,000 now unemployed, and proposes in vague terms to do something, sometime, perhaps, for those now employed when they become unemployed, if and when certain rules and regulations are passed by other political subdivisions, such as the States, and everyone in this House knows that most of the State legislatures have already adjourned and will remain adjourned for 2 years unless called in special session.

ADMINISTRATION BILL MAY BE DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

We know that there can be no question of constitutionality involved in the Lundeen bill, H. R. 2827, because funds are derived from the National Treasury and expended for the general welfare, and such expenditure cannot be successfully attacked in the courts.

The administration bill will be attacked in courts because it provides for a levy upon pay rolls and interferes in individual, corporate, and State affairs. The compulsion and pressure involved make the constitutionality of the bill difficult to uphold. This bill reminds me of the old party political platforms drawn up merely for election purposes, and to be forgotten as soon as the party is in power—full of glittering generalities and rainbow promises, never to be fulfilled.

THE POWER OF LABOR

I am not here to say that a national labor party would be a perfect party, and I do not contend that their leaders would be perfect leaders, but I do maintain that the parties in power have grown old and corrupt and that we need a new political alinement in this country based upon labor organizations and upon farm organizations, and organizations affiliated with them, and furnishing a refuge for the little bankrupt business man and professional man, shop and desk worker. These elements have common interests with the great farm element and the great labor element, and their combined voting power constitutes more than 90 percent of all of the people in these United States. Some day, and in the not distant future, this mighty power that we call "labor" will arise and take power at the polls in a legal, orderly fashion and elect its Congress, House and Senate, and place in the White House a man loyal to the labor program, backed by labor, farm, and affiliated organizations, so powerful that no Congress or President will dare to sidestep or evade the platform once they are elected. That has been the history of other nations, and that will be the history of our Nation. It is only a matter of time.

FALSE LEADERS

The same false leaders who forced America, through propaganda and ill-considered action, into this terrible crisis and panic are now arising here and there to cure the ills they caused. These self-constituted prophets will never cure our ills. These European-minded individuals, these propaganda-controlled, so-called "statesmen", are unequal to the task that confronts America today.

PROBLEMS WILL BE SOLVED BY UNITED FARMER-LABOR ACTION

No great social problem was ever solved except in the home, at the fireside, on the farm, and in the factory by the workers, the farmers, the toilers themselves. They have solved every great problem in this country and sent forth from their own ranks men who put into performance the ideas that emanated from their hearts and minds. And so it will be today. The collective thoughts of labor and farmers, thoroughly revised and unified and agreed upon in conference and convention, must be written into the statute books of this country in order that this may be truly a Government of, by, and for the people.

We are told that this is a democracy. What is a democracy? It is a government by the majority, and the majority of the people are farmers and workingmen—the workers, the toilers. When they have suffered long enough and have endured to the breaking point, they will set up their own party, and great labor organizations will be glad to join in this movement. Great farm organizations will step into line with the desires of these millions who no longer can endure the misery heaped upon them by old parties—the terror, privations, and poverty of panics and war miseries.

RECORD OF BROKEN PROMISES

Time and time again the old parties promised us farm relief, promised us various farm measures. Year after year, in convention, they solemnly wrote in these various planks with a smug smile, and after election, when victory was theirs, they pretended not to know anything about these promises. They were astonished if anyone mentioned these promises, and seemed somewhat put out if we troubled them in recollection of pledges made.

Plank after plank was carefully drawn, revised, revamped, rewritten to meet the united demand of farmers and labor voiced upon the platforms of great convention halls, blared from the radio, and headlined in the press, and that was the last we ever heard of them. That Tuesday in November was the burial of all these promises and golden hopes.

Now, then, how can we have platforms written and planks written that will be enacted into law that will keep faith with the people? This can only be done by backing up these planks and platforms and candidates elected by powerful organizations with millions of members, powerful and invincible, to watch over the Congress of the United States. Not an invisible government such as we have seen through so much of our history, with an invisible hand at the helm of the Ship of State; but a strong, powerful, visible government from the mass of the people and the rank and file of the people. From now on we must have government from the grass roots up, and not from the gilded turrets downward. We are neglecting the foundations of the structure of government and gilding our turrets, while our foundation stones crumble.

A NATIONAL LABOR PARTY IN 1936

We must become thoroughly committed to a labor government in these United States. We must build a great labor party in America. We must write a platform agreed upon after fair debate by representatives of the majority of the people. We must carry out those party pledges and promises; 1936 is not too soon to put a national ticket in the field; and I hope that labor will put a ticket in the field in every State in the Union in 1936, local, State, and national. I hope that labor will see the futility of flirting with the old parties and gain sincere cooperation with all affiliated elements to the end that we may shake off the terrors of this crisis and liberate our people from the pall of misery, poverty, and destitution. Then we can survey and plan intelligently—national planning—to bring about production for use of the great resources of this country which are abundant enough to bring happiness to every home and fireside in this great land of ours.

NO HOPE IN OLD PARTIES

The performance I have seen here on this floor renews my conviction that there is no hope in the old parties. We see men who debate in two-fisted fashion against these frauds upon our people, now being passed by this House, finally succumb to the wiles of the opposition. They join the chariots of the emperors in control. They march off with the Caesars of today, enthralled and enslaved and hopeful for reelection.

We need, above all things, today courageous, red-blooded fighting men who are unafraid to take a forward step. There must be a united front of all farm and labor elements, irrespective of parties, and a joining of all parties who have similar views upon a common platform upon which all can agree, and there must be an end to all the wrangling and jealousy and quarrels between numerous new organizations which have sprung up in America in the last decade or two.

Common sense must rule this labor party. It must have its feet on earth and not float off into the clouds of unrealities and impossible theories. It must be sound to the core. It must be an American party. It must place American interests first. It must write its platform thoroughly and convincingly, and it must be written in terms that are understood by the man who walks behind the plow and toils in industry.

MILLIONS OF VETERANS OF ALL WARS ARE WITH US

In this new party, I vision the marching columns of millions of veterans of all wars who are being thrust aside and betrayed in our legislative halls. First it is this bill and then it is that, compromises and trades are made, and bills are shuffled back and forth from House to Senate and Senate to House, and awaiting possible vetoes; and meanwhile the legislative mill grinds on to its adjournment without beneficial action taken for the veterans of our country.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR VETERANS

Vision these Spanish-American War veterans thrown out of hospitals, cut off from their pensions, left in old age to contend with poverty and misery and the poorhouse, and yet they gained for these United States more than $10,000,000,000 in land values which have earned more than $20,000,000,000 since their acquisition, and the Spanish-American War cost the Government but a trifle over $1,000,000,000. Through their efforts, Uncle Sam now has $30 to $1 on his investment, but the valiant men of '98—the finest volunteer army that ever marched—are left to starve on the streets and on the roadways of this abundant land.

I have introduced a bill, H. R. 1404, to place the Spanish War men on an equal basis with the men of the Civil War. That valiant army has almost disappeared over the horizon, and the men of the Spanish-American War are rapidly disappearing into the same distant land.

MEN OF THE WORLD WAR

Then the Economy Act slashed into the men of the World War who were told that they saved not only America, not only the land of Washington and Lincoln, but were told that they saved the world, and yet these men who saved the world are denied jobs, denied their pensions and compensations, cut off the rolls, and told that they deserve no more consideration than the men who remained at home safe and sound at the fireside drawing huge salaries during the war.

Vision these men of all wars joining with a great labor party, uniting their power and strength in political action with the ranks of labor and the lengthening columns of farmers in this great national labor party whose united front would include all elements who think along labor lines.

ADMINISTRATION BILL A CAMOUFLAGE

There is nothing in the administration security bill but an empty shell, a vision, hope, a mirage and camouflage, and that is all. I ask you what benefit will you get in 1935 and what benefit will you receive in 1936 from this bill? You have no guaranty that in 1937–38 the meager, pitiably and utterly inadequate provisions of this bill will be carried out since a new Congress will be in power, and many leaders of another political party announce that they are against any such program and are opposed to any provisions, so that even the pitiably and utterly inadequate provisions may be stricken in 1937–38.

REMEDY IS A NATIONAL LABOR PARTY

What is the remedy then? The remedy is a national labor party which will write upon the statute books of this country genuine and adequate social insurance, unemployment, old-age, maternity, and other social insurance, and put that insurance into effect now and not later on, in the dim, distant future; a labor party which has the courage to levy upon the great fortunes, individual and corporate, gifts and inheritances, the rates levied upon the great fortunes of the British Empire. Many of our so-called "leading citizens" have urged us to follow the British Empire in the years gone by, but now that the British Empire takes a forward step in taxation, they are horrified when gentlemen from the ranks of labor suggest that we follow Britain's lead in income- and inheritance-tax rates.

COMES THE MOMENT TO DECIDE

Ladies and gentlemen of this House, you will have to make your decision, and in the not distant future, whether you will stand with labor or stand against labor; whether you will stand with the farmer or whether you will fight his interests; whether you will fight to protect the bankrupt little business, professional, shop and store worker, or whether you will side with and further heap up profits for great banking institutions and international bankers. You will have to make that decision, and in the not distant future; and those who cannot and will not decide, may soon find that a day has come upon us when it is too late to make decision, for the columns have swept by, and the army has marched on to fields of victory in government and social security for all its people.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, the rapid advance and use of labor-saving machinery, the depression, and the onward march of humanitarianism have rendered old-age pensions not only inevitable but immediately mandatory.

In the past century there has been more material progress than in all the preceding centuries of the annals of mankind. Along with this unexampled progress has come the almost miraculous development of labor-saving machinery. A century ago one man might make 400 brick in a day. Today one man with a machine can make 400,000 brick in a day. A century ago men reaped their wheat with what was known as a "cradle." If all the wheat raised in the United States last year had been harvested in this manner, it would have required 6,000,000 men to do the job. Four thousand men with combines could have reaped and threshed all our production of wheat in any crop year in 10 days.

The energy of our machines is paralyzing. Four huge turbines possess the energy to do the task of 36,000,000 workers in the United States. A half pound of soft coal can do the work that it takes one man 8 hours to accomplish. One man and a machine can produce or rather process 30,000 barrels of flour in a day. A century ago he could grind out 1 barrel in a day. If we were in 1929 at the peak of production, with present machines, there would still be 5,000,000 idle. Out of this startling situation has been born the imperative necessity of old-age pensions and security against unemployment.

While there are very many things in this bill that do not please me nor meet my idea of an adequate law, I, like a large minority of the House, feel that, weak and inadequate as it is, it at least serves as a start in the right direction and that it may be amended from time to time as experience must surely vindicate those of us who sought to increase the allowance for old-age pensions. It is entirely too much like a pauper's dole. But experiences may teach us wisdom so that this paltry and uncertain allowance can be rendered both certain and adequate.

There was, I believe, a mistake made in trying to combine in one bill too many different objectives. All were very worthy aspirations but in combining such a multitude of subjects all were weakened and probably none will be a success. We have tried to build Rome in a day, and the result is apt to be disappointment to the real friends of old-age pensions as well as to the adherents of the other worthy undertakings embraced in this bill.

I wish that I might give this measure my whole-hearted approval for I have always favored such pensions since the menace of unemployment and age prevented many who had spent a lifetime at hard work from gaining a decent competence. I voted for the increases provided in amendments to that effect but they were defeated by the policy of the administration to limit the amount to be provided by the United States Government to $15 per month, which is pitifully inadequate at this time particularly. But since it was a futile effort I give it my vote rather than to deny the aged some hope at least.

It is my idea that just at this time when the country is submerged in the depths of the depression, with the unemployed continuously increasing in spite of all the prodigality of spending, we should in this unprecedented spending use some of it for the aged who are the most acute sufferers in this tragedy of poverty in which the aged and indigent now find themselves.

But since the ruling majority has beaten down all amendments which would make this a real measure of relief at this most critical time, I am willing to let them take the responsibility for its inadequacy, and accept even this pitiful makeshift rather than deny all assistance to the aged.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 7054. An Act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

WEST VIRGINIANS GO BACK TO THE FARM

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I have just studied the figures sent me by my good friend, John R. Fortney, who recently completed his fine work as supervisor of the Federal farm census in the First and Second Congressional Districts of West Virginia.

Fifteen of the twenty-two counties in this territory are in the Second Congressional District which I have the pleasure and responsibility to serve in the House of Representatives.

INCREASE ALMOST 6,000 FARMS

It is highly gratifying to me to know from the report that there has been an increase of 5,918 farms in the district in question over the figure in 1930. This back-to-the-land movement in that section of my State, I am sure, holds true in other areas.

America will go forward on a stable and sane basis of prosperity when more and more of our people return to the farm. Those who live close to the soil are the backbone of our prosperity and well-being. Living close to the fundamental factors of life they develop those qualities of hardihood and self-reliance which make them the balance wheel for our complex industrial system. They become producers of real national wealth, and stand at the sources from which spring the streams of real values.

The doctor heals, the lawyer pleads,
The miner follows precious leads—
But this or that, what ere befall,
The farmer must feed them all.

REAL SERVICE RENDERED

Under Mr. Fortney and his able assistants and enumerators a real service has been rendered to the Government, and I hope that throughout the Nation the ratio of "back to the farm" keeps pace with the increase in my district and State.

The number of farms in the 22 counties enumerated totals 31,690, as compared with 25,772 in 1930. My home county of Randolph County gained 234 farms during the 5 years, the total increasing from 1,755 to 1,989.

"There is no need to point out that such figures represent a definite back-to-the-land movement", said Mr. Fortney. Lack of employment in the cities is the primary reason given for the increase.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY SOLICITORS USED

One hundred and ninety solicitors made the census in the 22 counties. These loyal men and women encountered many difficulties, chiefly those due to bad weather, but they enjoyed the work, said Mr. Fortney.

They found the heaviest increase in farms near the larger cities, due, for the most part, to the decrease in employment in the cities.

A decrease in farms in the permanent crop and grazing districts is explained by the fact that many persons handling stock have acquired more land, it was stated.

HORSES LACKING ON FARMS

Generally speaking, the larger farm owners were found to be reasonably prosperous and the smaller farmers much less so. In instances where there was a sufficient supply of stock and working animals, conditions usually were good. There is a definite lack of horses, it was discovered.

Farmers cooperated whole-hearedly with the solicitors for the most part, it was stated. Mr. Fortney expressed his appreciation for this cooperation.

The office of Mr. Fortney was opened December 15 and the census taking began January 2.

RELIEF RACKETEERS

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, among the many problems confronting this Nation today, none are more deserving of attention, both from present and future considerations, than is relief. We have, at the present time, approximately one-sixth of our population on relief, the largest percent of whom are there because they cannot find employment. By cooperation of Government and industry it is hoped that we will be able to reemploy the greater part of them. Meanwhile, relief is costing the taxpayers of our Nation $60 every second and is running us into debt at the rate of more than $2,000,000,000 a year. This debt is a mortgage against the future of our Nation. Two facts should be quite obvious to anyone. First, we cannot permit our unemployed to starve, or permit their families to suffer from malnutrition, or be exposed for the want of clothing or shelter. Homes must be maintained and the proper contacts and environments of organized society must be considered. Every humane consideration must be recognized. Second, we cannot continue indefinitely to plunge ourselves into debt for this or any other purpose.

RELIEF A NEW PROBLEM

Throughout all of the various phases of relief, we must remember that it is a comparatively new problem, in a national sense, and that we have very little past experience to guide us. It is high time, however, that some of the most prominent facts regarding the matter should be thoroughly understood throughout the Nation, in order that we shall be able to take steps to eradicate as many as possible of its undesirable features. The use of relief is most certainly justified, but its abuse must not be tolerated. That it is being flagrantly abused cannot be denied.

BUREAUCRACY IN RELIEF

Statistics show that in spite of the undeniable increase in industrial employment, our relief rolls are increasing at an alarming rate. In conversation with many who are informed upon the subject, I do not believe it is exaggerating to state that we have over a million able-bodied "chiselers" on relief. These "chiselers" must be charged to faulty administration. Either the intellect of the "chiselers" is superior to that of the administrators, or the administrators are not doing their duty. I do not believe that those the most closely in contact with relief are to blame for the "chiselers." I believe it to be the ones higher up, those responsible for promulgating the policies. True to the inevitable tendency of bureaucracy, they are administrating relief in a manner calculated to increase the scope and the power of their bureau. They are ignorant of local conditions and are too elated with a false sense of their own importance, too busy endeavoring to extend their own authority to heed the advice given them by their field forces and private agencies. Any bureau is a dangerous institution, but one which can bring a sentimental argument to bear upon its activities is doubly so. We must be as merciless in our eradication of the "relief racketeer" as we would be with any other. We must demand just as efficient administration of relief as we would of any other governmental function.

Relief began as a local institution, because it was then a local problem. It became a national problem with the coming of wide-spread unemployment. As the Federal Government assumed more of the administration it also assumed more of the financial obligations. We all recognize, of course, the necessity for public works in order to provide employment, and the necessity for Federal administration in connection therewith. It is a well-recognized fact that the farther the functions of government are removed from the locality in which they function, the less efficiently they function. With this understood, I wish to illustrate how "chiseling" creeps in, and to propose a remedy.

ONE EXAMPLE

We have today upon our relief rolls an astonishing large number of whom, before the advent of relief, were tenant farmers. Never very ambitious or thrifty, they had always managed to make a living by share-cropping, without being in want for food, clothing, or shelter. Generally they owned a cow or two, raised their own hogs, and plenty of chickens. They were allowed a house, pasture and shelter for their stock, and plenty of ground upon which to raise their own living, and in many cases their fuel. They worked the land on shares, with draft animals and tools belonging to the landlord. Their share of the crops fed their stock. Their cows and chickens bought their staple groceries. If industrious, they secured enough work at odd jobs to furnish cash for clothing and some in addition. Considering their investment and effort, they had the best side of the bargain. If they were in want in winter, the landlord saw to it that they did not suffer. They were in the main a self-supporting class of people, but relief has changed the picture.

The attention of many of these tenant farmers was drawn to relief when it became necessary for the industrial workers of the nearby cities. In unbelievable numbers they sold their stock and moved to the outskirts of the towns and cities. In many cases they were sought out by the relief workers and relief was forced upon them. It had never before occurred to many of them that they were not affluent. Accustomed in many instances to cutting wood for fuel, some overzealous welfare worker placed them on the list for free coal delivered. Thousands and thousands of them deserted the land, their source of sustenance for generations, and became wards of the taxpayers. Those in charge of local administration protested, but their protests were lost in the shuffle. The self-important, sentimental busybodies who for years had dabbled in relief work as a pastime had foolishly been placed in high positions and, drunk with power, were ruling with a high hand. This is only one of many illustrations which might be drawn, but it serves to illustrate my point.

THE REMEDY

Now for the remedy—and in my opinion there is only one—to eradicate the "chiseler": Place back on each county all of those who are receiving relief in cash or in groceries, clothing, fuel, or rent. Let the money for this purpose come from taxes imposed only within that county. Let each one who applies for relief be required to secure the signatures of 10 property holders of the borough, ward, or township in which he resides. This will bring home to the taxpayers the realization that relief money is not money which comes, by some trick of legerdemain, from thin air, but money which is actually theirs. When this is fully realized, the citizens of every county in this Nation will rise up in their might and put an end to "relief racketeering" almost overnight. They will search out every able-bodied man who can but will not support himself and see to it that he does so.

I am not using the above illustration from any idea that they are, by any means, the only ones "chiseling" on relief. Far from it. There are others too numerous to mention, many of whom are less justified and more reprehensible. I use it to bring me to another point.

Whether or not we like to admit the fact, we are up against the necessity of returning a large percent of our unemployed to the land, where they can be at least partially self-supporting. Our industrial system is so developed and capable of such enormous production that we cannot employ our industrial population gainfully all the year around. As I have said before, we cannot continue to support them forever by taxes. There is also a limit to the prices which the consumer can pay. The only solution is to return many of them to the land. Then, why in the name of common sense should we permit our relief to be administered in a manner calculated to take from the soil those who are best fitted to remain there? Public works for the unemployed are a present necessity. The average American wants a job which will enable him to make a living for himself and his family. All who are not willing to work are drones. Place their fate in the hands of those who know them—the taxpayers of their respective counties.

HUMANITARIAN DAY

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a resolution that I introduced today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to call a conference of the rulers of every country in the world for the purpose of having 1 day in each year to be recognized as Humanitarian Day

Resolved, etc.,

Whereas there is a great deal of human misery in the United States and in every country in the world; and

Whereas a great deal of this misery is brought about because of superstition, ignorance, illiteracy, poverty, wars; religious, national, and race hatred; and

Whereas these social evils are responsible for much of the sorrow that exists in the world; and

Whereas a great deal of this sorrow could be eliminated by humanitarian treatment of our fellow men and by the proper kind of education: Therefore be it

Resolved (if the Senate concurs), That the President of the United States shall be authorized to call a conference of the rulers of every country in the world for the purpose of having 1 day in each year, to be recognized as Humanitarian Day, and on that day the people in every country of the world, regardless of creed, nationality, or race, shall mingle together to discuss ways and means to end poverty, wars, and every other thing which retards the progress of mankind.

OMNIBUS BANKING BILL

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may have until midnight tomorrow night to file its report on the bill H. R. 7617, the omnibus banking bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the same length of time be permitted to present the minority views on the same bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OUR POST-OFFICE INSPECTORS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address by the Chief Post Office Inspector on the Postal Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of K. P. Aldrich, Chief Post Office Inspector, delivered on the Farm and Home Hour, National Broadcasting Co., Station WMAL, Washington, D. C., at 12:50 p. m., eastern standard time, April 18, 1935.

My friends, as Chief Post Office Inspector, I have been asked to talk about our service, and discuss crime from the viewpoint of our 540 post-office inspectors.

We have decided views on this subject. They are based upon our experience as the oldest investigative force of the Government. From colonial days to the present, post-office inspectors have been successfully running down stagecoach bandits, train robbers, safe crackers, post-office burglars, kidnapers, and all others who interfere with the mails and use them for vicious purposes or to defraud the public.

Our number of arrests compares favorably with any other Government organization, though but 25 percent of our work is in apprehending criminals and bringing them to conviction.

Our decided views concerning law enforcement also come from the fact we are successful. We convict 98 percent of the criminals we bring to trial. We believe this is a record.

Our present methods are based upon years of experience. First, we select inspectors from men in the Postal Service who are honest, with common sense, who will work hard; men who are zealous to see that the sanctity of the peoples' mail and the privacy of their papers are never violated.

We find such men and they stay in our service. Of our 540 inspectors, 132 have over 20 years experience and 229 have over 10 years experience.

We are proud of our force. We have had in our ranks such men as Noah Webster, of dictionary fame; men who afterwards became Postmaster General, as did Horatio King and J. N. Tyner. George B. Cortelyou also started on the road to Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Postmaster General, and Secretary of the Treasury, from the Chief Inspector's Office. Congressman CLAUDE DOBBINS, who so ably represents the great State of Illinois and serves on the important Committee of the Post Office and Post Roads, was in his earlier years a most able post-office inspector.

In a later day, under the leadership of former Post Office Inspector Elmer L. Irey, that fine body of investigators, comprising the Special Intelligence Unit of the Internal Revenue was organized. It is yet made up in large part of post-office inspectors selected by the then Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Hon. Daniel C. Roper, former First Assistant Postmaster General, and now Secretary of Commerce. This unit has not only saved the Government millions of dollars but has brought to justice such men as Al Capone, Waxey Gordon, and Dutch Schultz.

We are successful because long experience has taught us the advisability of carrying on our work in a quiet manner. This we feel has brought us the confidence of the able force of United States attorneys and their assistants under Attorney General Cummings. We have the confidence of the police forces of States, counties, cities, and towns, who, regardless of what you hear to the contrary, are to an uncommon degree honest and able. Government agencies, our own included, too often get the credit for the good work done by the police. For some reason or other Federal bureaus make the newspaper headlines.

One of the viewpoints post-office inspectors have is that there is about the same amount of crime now, in proportion to the population, as there was years ago. However, no one can talk definitely on this matter.

We know that crime is more advertised now. We know this advertising causes many mistaken ideas. For instance, the general opinion is that our larger cities have a greater proportion of murders than the smaller. Over the years you will find the opposite is true, and that cities like Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, are comparatively safe when compared with many smaller cities.

Another instance concerning mistaken ideas engendered by advertising crime is that many people now believe that crimes are solved by agents using mysterious, occult powers and scientific methods. As a rule, our experience is that the greatest use of scientific apparatus is in verifying information subsequent to, rather than before the apprehension of a criminal.

The fine laboratories in use in Northwestern University, by the Chicago, St. Louis, and New York police forces, among others, have for many years past done wonderful work. But after all, the most important thing in crime detection was very ably set forth in an editorial in the Saturday Evening Post which stated:

"No imaginary Scotland Yard can solve the gangster menace. What is needed is swift, unimpeded action by police, prosecutors, and courts, and this comes only when an aroused public opinion operates. Nor must the reader of murder mysteries suppose that detectives solve cases by abstract reasoning or by psychic powers. It is information—and much of it petty information—which solves cases, and it is only when the public cooperates that the investigator can secure information. This may not be very romantic, but it is the fact."

One thing we do know about crime is that crimes of violence are now committed by comparatively young men and boys. There are many reasons given for this, all more or less accurate.

It is certain the last 5 years of depression have taken away from young men the opportunities for work, and worst of all the chance to live with their families.

As one who has dealt with crime in all parts of the United States for over 20 years, I know that the American people should thank God for the wisdom of our President when he conceived the idea of the Civilian Conservation Corps, where these young men may be profitably employed under proper leadership. What the President saved the country in the costs of crime and what he has added to good citizenship is incalculable.

Here is something else from the viewpoint of post-office inspectors. We hear too much, in my opinion, of crimes of violence; of public enemy no. 1 or 1,000, who robs a bank and gets away with fifty or one hundred thousand dollars and shoots down two or three in doing it. He is publicized, his alleged adroitness and daring enlarged upon, and pictures shown with vivid portrayals of his early life, usually one of poverty and a sordid environment, with few if any opportunities.

Post-office inspectors have a great deal of experience with this kind of men. However, post-office inspectors also know that there is another kind of public enemy, of much greater importance and much more inimical to the safety of the Nation.

They are the men of education, and social prestige, who are familiar with big business, who organize companies under high sounding names, and using the mails to defraud, filch millions of dollars from the unsuspecting public where the other so-called "public enemy" gets but hundreds. For every one the gangster shoots down, these smooth criminals, who get but little newspaper notice, leave a train of ruined men and women, broken hearts, deaths, and suicides.

These are the kind of men who, when convicted by juries of their fellow men, still have sufficient of their illegal gains to endeavor to prevent justice by publishing journals attacking Cabinet Officers, United States judges, and United States attorneys, and post-office inspectors, who have had the courage to bring them to justice.

These are the kind of men our forceful solicitor of the Post Office Department, Karl A. Crowley, has relentlessly followed and recommended that fraud orders be issued against them.

Our success in handling these most difficult cases has been considered outstanding. The millions of dollars saved annually to the public is in sharp contrast to the cost of our investigations which are believed to be the lowest of any investigating agency.

I desire, in closing, to state that the success of the Post Office Inspection Service in its handling of criminal work has in a large measure been due to the whole-hearted support of the Postmaster General, James A. Farley. He has stoutly withstood in every instance the influence of those persons of social, political, and financial prestige, who have endeavored to protect the guilty. I am in a position to know. I could not say more and I should not say less of his able and impartial administration of his great responsibilities.

At some later date I hope to tell you of the work of our force as auditors, adjusters, and postal experts. Until then I will say good-bye to you.

NATIONALISM VERSUS SECTIONALISM

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a speech which I made over the radio last night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the the following address delivered by myself over a National Broadcasting Co. network Thursday night, April 18, 1935:

In an address delivered in Atlanta, Ga., on Saturday, April 13, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, stated: "Those who are urging that the processing tax be removed are in many instances deliberately misleading the public about the nature and effect of the tax. All the difficulties of the textile industry are being blamed on the processing tax." The Secretary then specifically stated: "In a radio speech the other night a Member of Congress discussed the distressed condition of New England mills and advocated removal of the tax and an embargo on textile imports as the remedy. It was inferred from this address that the processing tax was giving foreign spinners an advantage in the domestic market."

On Thursday, April 11, I made an address over the radio on the subject Japan's War on Our Textile Industry, in which I strongly urged the removal of the processing tax from the cotton-textile industry. The remarks of Secretary Wallace may have been made with reference to my viewpoints discussed in my speech. Regardless of that, however, there are many of the Members of Congress from the South as well as from the North who have been very active and are at this very moment urging strongly, if not demanding, that the processing tax be removed from the cotton-textile industry. As one of this group, I cannot permit the statement made by Secretary Wallace, that we are "in many instances deliberately misleading the public" to pass by unchallenged.

To deliberate means to carefully consider one's action. No person worthy of the integrity of the public and who is honestly striving to help and improve the welfare of our people, would deliberately mislead them. As Members of Congress, we are not apart from the people. We are part of the whole. We are just as much a part of that great group known as the "people of the United States" as is any citizen. Their interest is also our interest. Is there any person among us that would deliberately mislead the very group we are a part of? Is there any one of us that would deliberately mislead the people of this great Nation or any part or section of it? Is there any Member of the distinguished National Legislature that would deliberately mislead any group of our people? It is as one of them that we are here. It is because of them that we are here. It is for them that we work. It is in their interests and the improvement of the general welfare of the Nation as a whole that we strive and conscientiously work to accomplish. Mr. Secretary, your statement is unfair and lacking in respect for the integrity of the Members of Congress toward whom you intended it to refer.

Those of us who consider the processing tax on the cotton-textile industry economically unsound are urging and demanding that it be removed in order to help the people, not to mislead them. I cannot for a moment believe the economic welfare of the people of our country as a whole is benefited and improved if the people of one section are benefited over a short period at the cost of imposing a serious detriment on the people of another section. And yet is not this condition actually occurring under the plan of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace? He advocates an alliance of certain sections of our country for the purpose of supporting his plan, knowing that the operation of his plan of exacting a processing tax from the cotton-textile industry causes great hardship and distress for the people of those sections dependent on the normal functioning of the cotton-textile industry.

In the long run, the national welfare of our people is not improved if, to benefit one section, another section must suffer. In a short time the benefit going to the first section would cease. I cannot agree to a plan that proposes to benefit agriculture at the high cost of sacrificing industry, for in the long run there would be no benefit to agriculture. Likewise, I am not in favor of any plan or method of helping industry, if the method of doing such would place an injurious and distressing burden upon agriculture. There must be methods evolved that will permit both of these huge essential activities to function normally, not at the expense of each other but for the good of each other, as well as the improvement of national welfare as a whole.

There is something frightfully wrong in a country where the Government is paying agriculture for not producing, for not performing its natural, normal function, while at the very same time thousands—yes, millions—are unemployed, on the very brink of starvation, and industry is unable to operate normally and in some cases, such as the cotton-textile industry, actually struggling for its very existence. In this great country of ours, known as "a land of plenty for all", at the present moment there has not been evolved a cure, nor even a remedy, for this tremendously distressing national crisis. Increased taxation and increased public debt certainly has not helped. This national illness reaches the very heart of our Nation. If it is to be remedied, the cure must penetrate the source of the illness.

If our country is to emerge from the stranglehold clutches of this depression, the economic welfare of the people as a whole must be considered constantly. We can never win this battle that we must win if one section of the Nation is benefited at the expense of another section. The national welfare of the entire country must be improved, with all sections cooperating with each other at the same time.

Ours is a large country. We cannot exist divided into sections, with various sections opposing or combined to oppose the progress of each other, as was urged by Secretary Wallace in his Atlanta speech. The sectional division of our Nation was settled in 1865, let us hope for all time. I want to call the attention of the whole people, the farmers and those engaged in industry and those who are on relief, and those who are unemployed, to a statement in the Atlanta speech made by the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace. I quote: "I appeal for an understanding and an alliance between the great agricultural sections of the South and the Middle West. If the cotton program goes by the board the corn, wheat, tobacco, and other programs will follow. The unity of the farmers will be broken." And Secretary Wallace is supposed to represent the entire country, not just parts of it. Coming from this member of the President's Cabinet, who is considered by many as a great economic philosopher of the new deal, the advocating of sectionalism together with the fact that a change in the cotton program, namely the removal of the processing tax from the cotton-textile industry, would wreck the agricultural program, as a conclusion is both extremely dangerous and economically unsound. Secretary Wallace is actually appealing to the farmer to support his plan, even if to do so would seriously cripple American industry and in the case of the cotton textile industry, seriously injure it at the very time when its very existence is threatened. The removal of the processing tax from the cotton-textile industry as a factor itself, would not cause the industry to boom, but it would greatly assist this essential industry back to normal operation and increased employment. The removal of this tax is a necessity. It must be done. I repeat, agriculture needs American industry. The farmer needs the cotton-textile industry. The cotton farmer knows that he stands to lose if the great domestic market for raw cotton, namely the American cotton-textile industry, is greatly curtailed and reduced or ceases to exist. In addition, there are thousands of workers and their families dependent on this great industry who would also lose. We must prevent this tragedy. Yet, Secretary Wallace appeals to the farmer to endorse and support a plan that in the long run is certain to cause losses, if not serious distress. Is it not Secretary Wallace that is doing the misleading?

In all my experience in Washington since 1913 I have never known any Secretary of any Department to appeal in an alliance of certain sections of the country. The significance of the statement of Secretary Wallace is still more serious to the welfare of the American people. It extends much deeper than the surface. It is tragical. He actually advocates the alliance of certain sections of the country, namely, the agricultural South and Middle West, as opposed to the sections of the industrial East. The Civil War, a tremendous tragedy in the development of this great Nation, was fought to settle certain sectional difficulties. We emerged from that war a unified nation, but only at the cost of the lives of thousands of young men and much suffering. We are still paying for that war. If this costly experience is to remain a lesson to us there must not be set up any unfair sectional competition in this country. Our Nation must function as a union, with a united striving for the improvement of the welfare of all the people in all sections, rather than a competitive struggle of section against section. Secretary Wallace, the Civil War must not have been fought in vain. We cannot tolerate sectional competitive strife in this country.

It is true that imports of cotton goods carry a compensatory processing tax equal to that levied on the domestic product. Nevertheless, imports from Japan have a marked bearing on this situation, for goods are coming in at such low prices that United States manufacturers are compelled to sell in competition at cost of production or below, thus substantially absorbing the processing tax. The cheap price is always the market price.

Gradually the cotton farmer of the South is beginning to realize that these conditions have an important bearing upon his own welfare and livelihood. He reads with alarm that Brazil, to the south of us, had an exportable surplus of about 800,000 bales of raw cotton last year. He realizes that the cheap price is always the market price; and when Secretary Wallace admits that our export market is falling off, he wonders what will become of him and his cotton workers without a home market as well. Nine million wage earners in the raw-cotton industry also ask that question. Government statistics show that our exports for 8 months prior to March 1935 diminished over two and a half million bales when compared with a similar period of the previous year. That our domestic consumption showed a similar alarming decrease may well be understood when it is considered that 51 textile plants have either ceased operations or have partially closed since the beginning of the year. Affected by this condition are 23,600 workers in the mills. In analyzing these figures it is interesting to note that by far the greater proportion of the mills affected were in the southern section of our country. Secretary Wallace does not mention this.

It is only through cooperation that this Nation can be efficient. Are we, therefore, functioning efficiently as a country primarily concerned with the improvement of the welfare of all the people if we permit a great and essential factor in our economic life, namely, the cotton-textile industry, to gradually cease to exist? To do so is not national efficiency. This industry must be saved, and it can be saved by removing the impediments to its normal operation. One of these is the cotton-processing tax. The burden of this tax must be removed.

President Roosevelt has the needed power to save the cotton-textile industry. I do not see how he can fail to do so.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, the problem of social and economic insecurity is one of the most difficult with which the Nation is faced today. We have experienced as a result of the depression wide-spread distress with attendant griefs and heartaches. Unfortunately the efforts of the present administration have not as yet provided any improvement of a permanent character. Experiments and extravagance have been disappointing and discomforting. Inconsistency, uncertainties, and contradiction, characteristics of many of the policies, have tended to intensify rather than diminish the fears of future insecurity. On all sides we hear expressions of doubt, anxiety, misgiving, trepidation, and apprehension as to the outcome of the voyage on which we have embarked in the last few years. From all parts of the country there comes a plea for the relief of present suffering, a demand for some assurance of certainty of action and stability of policy, as well as a cry for protection against recurrence of disasters in the future.

Political opportunists have used the occasion to advance their own fortunes by advocating all manner of remedies, opiates, and balms as cure-alls for our ills. Demagogs have denounced our institutions, our methods, our systems, and our leaders, in their efforts to excite passion and arouse prejudice. Unsound and unworkable schemes as well as strange and ridiculous nostrums have been held out as the only remedy for society. Guaranteed incomes, distributed wealth, assured employment have provided the texts of the economic gospel messages expounded by artful preachers as the hope for an early utopian salvation. The platform, the radio, the press have been utilized to advance the cause of these pseudo benefactors of mankind. Propagandists, promoters, and proclaimers have painted pictures of the alleged ease, contentment, and security possible for their followers.

These conditions naturally have accelerated the demand for some type of new social legislation. Placing the "security of the men, women, and children of the Nation" as a first objective is a commendable program. It is as old as the institutions of our country. It has always been an objective of our Government. It is the soul of our democracy. It has always been the objective of those who have insisted upon the worth of spiritual values. It encouraged our colonial ancestors to declare their independence. It inspired our forefathers to give to the world the finest example of constitutional representative democracy. It developed the determination of our pioneers in their conquest of a continent. It consecrated the endeavors of an emancipator in the breaking of the shackles of human slavery. It challenged the ingenuity of our investors in the harnessing of the forces of nature. It enlisted the services of our patriots in the defense of our rights as a Nation. The security of the men, women, and children of the Nation has been the altar at which every patriotic sacrifice has been offered, the altar at which every patriotic dedication has been made, the altar at which every ennobling patriotic inspiration has been received. We may therefore conclude that a program for security does not involve a radical departure from time-honored principles, even though in the course to be pursued we may introduce some modifications adaptable to changed conditions of our national life.

I believe that we should accept a reasonable responsibility for the aged and that we should advocate a system to bring all possible economic security to the worker, but that in so doing we should adhere to the limitations of constitutional authority and power; and may I add, Mr. Chairman, it is my conviction that the desired benefits of assistance to the aged and to the worker can be secured within the framework of our Constitution, that we need not transgress its provisions nor seek to evade its requirements. And still further, may I emphatically declare my conviction that we need not become a socialistic state in order to recognize a larger degree of social responsibility to the unfortunate. Rather am I persuaded that the recognition of this responsibility by the civic and industrial leaders will help to protect our traditional American institutions of freedom and personal liberty by the correlation of the needed economic security. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is our duty to transmit as heritages to our children the blessings of liberty and the glory of national achievements, as well as to provide the requisite aid to the aged and to give security to the worker. Let us be mindful of the fact that security for the individual, whether worker or aged, will be a mockery and a sham if in the attainment thereof we barter away our constitutional rights or evade our constitutional duties and allot to our people the role of puppets of a socialistic state. The protection of private enterprise with the necessary adjunct of a reasonable profit and the preservation of personal liberties circumscribed only by the rights and welfare of others is a solemn obligation laid upon us by a constitutional oath. Private enterprise, I believe, is willing to do its part. It should be given an opportunity to assume its share of the burden without the visitation upon it of punitive and destructive requirements at a time when it is exerting every effort to maintain itself.

The bill, presently before the House, known as the "Social Security Act" is meritorious in many respects. It is regrettable that the sponsors of the measure insist upon a composite piece of legislation embracing several distinct features rather than separating it into at least two major bills. In this respect it resembles much of the legislation urged by the present administration. Of course, the purpose of this course is apparent. Proposals which might otherwise be rejected even by the members of the majority must be reluctantly accepted in order to secure the benefits of the desirable features of a proposed enactment.

The bill is divided into nine titles, all of which, however, must be voted upon as a whole. It is fair to assume that the same influence which has wielded such tremendous power on the members of the majority party will again assert itself, making separation impossible. The bill, as a whole, is based on the theory of "grants-in-aid to the States", by which is meant that funds are to be disbursed for the States upon the fulfillment of certain conditions by such recipients. Titles I, IV, V, and VI provide for grants to the States for old-age assistance, for the care of dependent children, for maternal and child welfare, and for public health. Agencies for these purposes are already operative in a number of States.

Titles III and IX relate to unemployment insurance and for the contribution of taxes to create a fund for this purpose. Aid is extended to States to encourage them to establish approved systems of unemployment.

Titles II and VIII are the objectionable features of the bill and have no place whatever in this measure. They provide for a distinct departure from established policies and should be striken from the bill. They provide for compulsory old-age annuities and prescribe the method by which the money is to be raised to pay these annuities. It is doubtful whether they will stand the test of constitutionality. Certainly they are of such a character as to invite serious question. It is difficult to find any constitutional provision by which the Federal Government is authorized to impose a system of compulsory old-age benefits upon private industry. Aside from the question of constitutionality, the contributions required of both employer and employee by this provision places a burden difficult or impossible under present conditions for either to stand. We are all anxious for recovery. Everything possible should be done to accelerate a return to normal conditions. Private business enterprises should be encouraged to launch out. Reemployment of wage earners in private fields of endeavor is essential to recovery. Those employed today are required in most instances to help shoulder the economic burden of a less fortunate relative. There is no justification for insisting that this feature of the bill be retained. It is retardation which means further insecurity. Recovery is a prerequisite for security. Again, Mr. Speaker, I protest against the practice of forcing upon the House composite bills carrying subjects which should be considered and acted upon separately.

The subject of old-age assistance has long been disputed and remains today to some extent controversial. I prefer to cast my lot with those who believe that a larger degree of responsibility rests upon society today for the dependent aged people in our communities than existed in the past. Medicine, hygiene, and improved living conditions have contributed to prolonging life. The development of machinery and its extended and ever-widening field of operation tend to place upon the discard list at an earlier age the skilled as well as the unskilled workman. The insecurity of those past middle age engaged in industry is alarming. Naturally these conditions are intensified as a result of our present unemployment problem. The obligation of the State to provide assistance to the dependent aged has long been recognized, dating back to the days of Queen Elizabeth. The harmful effects of pauperizing the individual should not be overlooked, and while institutional care will always be needed for the aged who may by reason of infirmity or illness be helpless or require care, nevertheless, in many instances a sense of self-respect and dignity can be maintained under old-age assistance funds which would not be possible when an almshouse invitation was extended.

The provision for the establishment of a system of unemployment insurance is desirable and no doubt will be generally supported. It is unfortunate that a plan of this kind was not established years ago. In some industries and in some States unemployment-insurance funds are in existence. Whether it should be forced upon industry and labor at this time is doubtful. The distress incident to unemployment is felt most intensely by the unemployed and their immediate dependents. But it must be recognized that a large part of the burden of wide-spread unemployment rests also on the general public. Taxes are levied for unemployment relief, contributions are made to agencies ministering to those in distress, and in many other ways the disastrous effects of a major business collapse and the resultant failure of the wage earners to secure a livelihood is felt by the citizens as a whole. Sound measures which give promise of aiding society in solving, at least to some extent, this difficult problem should commend themselves to all thinking people. Such measures aid not only the individual directly affected, but their benefits reach out into all walks of life and into all avenues of industry and business. They are individualistic and also cooperative in their results. They provide a means for cooperation between employer and employee for the benefit of all society and for the advancement of the general welfare.

There can be no present benefit expected from this legislation insofar as unemployment is concerned. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I fear it will be a distinct disappointment. We should not hold out to the unfortunate and those in distress that this legislation will alleviate their present ills. It will not. To this extent it is a sham, a mockery. As has been well said, "They ask for bread and we give them a stone." The present difficulties should challenge the best efforts of the administration to adopt a sound, workable, and economical national program and discard the theories, experiments, and fallacies which have proved so costly and futile.

I am compelled, Mr. Speaker, to repeat the warning which I have heretofore expressed. This problem of economic insecurity and social instability will not be solved simply by the enactment of legislation creating unemployment-insurance schemes or providing old-age-assistance funds. We cannot hope to give the people a sense of security by glib legislative phrases or by idealistic executive pronouncements, or by the compilation of actuarial statistics. We cannot provide a sense of security by programs for the destruction of wealth and artificially creating scarcity. We cannot assure to the people a sense of security by measures threating their investments of life savings. We will fail to give a sense of security to our people if a policy of foreign trade is pursued which tends to destroy the operation of the fields of raw material and threatens the closing of mills and factories. These are all vital elements for security.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I contend that we should translate idealism into realism, that we should be practical and not visionary, that a policy should be pursued of consistency embracing all features of our complex modern life in our endeavor to conquer insecurity.

STATEMENT OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY CONCERNING CLOSED BANKS

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a statement made by Comptroller O'Connor, concerning certain closed banks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement of the Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. O'Connor answering statements of Clifford A. Prevost and quoting Hon. Clarence J. McLeod:

APRIL 3, 1935.

DETROIT FREE PRESS,
DETROIT NEWS,
DETROIT TIMES,
Detroit, Mich.

GENTLEMEN: My attention has been called to an article published in the Detroit Free Press under date of March 30, 1935, written by Clifford A. Prevost and quoting extensively Representative CLARENCE J. MCLEOD. Congressman MCLEOD has so misrepresented and misstated facts and figures that the article cannot go unanswered.

It is indeed unfortunate that Mr. Prevost was led into an article which does not contain one correct paragraph. The headlines, "Congress to be asked to probe charges of political domination of 1,500 closed national banks", is not correct, and the subheading "McLeod wants choice of receivers explained" is information which is available to everyone. The receivers of 939 of the 1,540 national banks now in receivership were appointed by former Republican Comptrollers of the Currency, and it is rather interesting to note that Congressman MCLEOD did not raise this question while these Comptrollers were in office but attempts now to embarrass these former Comptrollers of the Currency with his investigation. Congressman MCLEOD is advised that two Republicans were appointed receivers in the Detroit banks—C. O. Thomas as receiver for the First National Bank of Detroit on May 11, 1933, succeeding himself as conservator, and B. C. Schram on May 11, 1933, as receiver of the Guardian National Bank of Commerce—both appointments being made by the Acting Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. F. G. Awalt, prior to the appointment of J. F. T. O'Connor as Comptroller. Mr. Awalt was appointed Deputy Comptroller of the Currency on the recommendation of Col. J. W. McIntosh, who was then Comptroller.

Mr. Schram was appointed receiver by Hon. D. R. Crissinger, Republican Comptroller, and prior to going to Detroit had successfully served as receiver in 19 important receiverships. Mr. C. O. Thomas was first appointed receiver by Hon. Henry M. Dawes, Republican Comptroller, and prior to going to Detroit had successfully served as receiver in 24 national bank trusts. When Mr. Thomas was assigned to the Detroit trust, an investigation was made of his record in the Bank of Pittsburgh, in Pittsburgh, Pa., and in this connection, the following quotation from an article by James Sweinhart is of interest: "The manner in which a Federal receiver liquidated the slow assets of the Bank of Pittsburgh, in Pittsburgh, Pa., indicates that the fears of many Detroit merchants and manufacturers who are debtors to the First National and Guardian National Banks, of Detroit, that they are to be wiped out through liquidation of the local banks, are unfounded. A survey of what went on during the liquidation of the Pittsburgh institution shows that the receiver was reasonable and fair and won the highest esteem and good will even of the debtors of the bank whose notes and mortgages he had to realize on." A salary of $14,000 per annum was fixed for each of these receivers. In August of 1934 Mr. C. O. Thomas received a flattering offer from a large financial institution and resigned as receiver after rendering a magnificent service to the depositors of Detroit. No better evidence could be offered that the salary paid Mr. Thomas was inadequate than the fact that he resigned to receive a much larger salary.

Comptroller O'Connor called Mr. B. C. Schram on the telephone and asked him if he would take over the receivership of the First National Bank of Detroit and handle it together with his own receivership, as he was familiar with the Detroit situation. He was further requested to cut the salary in each trust to $8,000 per annum, making a total salary of $16,000 for handling the two institutions, and saving for the depositors $12,000 per annum in salaries of receivers. Mr. Schram agreed and has given eminent satisfaction in his work. It would have been perfectly proper for the Comptroller of the Currency to appoint some outstanding leader of Michigan at a substantial salary to succeed Mr. Thomas, but the Comptroller was interested in conserving the assets for the depositors. No better justifiable opportunity to play politics could be found. It is hoped that this is a sufficient explanation to Mr. McLeod of the appointment of the Receivers in Detroit. It is not necessary to point out that these banks were closed nearly a month before President Roosevelt took office.

The statement, therefore, by Mr. Prevost that Postmaster General James A. Farley had cooperated with Comptroller J. F. T. O'Connor to place politicians in control of closed banks is false. Mr. Farley has never made a single suggestion as to receivers in any part of the United States. Evidently Congressman McLeod seeks to condemn the Comptroller of the Currency because he retained in office two receivers who had been appointed by Republican comptrollers.

The article further sets forth a resolution which Congressman MCLEOD advised Mr. Prevost he would introduce on Monday. The Congressman did not introduce the resolution quoted in the article, but introduced an entirely different resolution. The Congressman misled Mr. Prevost in this particular. The McLeod resolution which was actually introduced does not authorize the committee "to subpena witnesses, administer oaths, and send for such papers as may be necessary to carry out the investigation herein authorized." This was the part of the proposed resolution which would possibly have justified the scare headlines. The McLeod resolution asks for information as to "the methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed national banks", and in answer to this it may be said that the same policy has been followed for 70 years in the Comptroller's Office. except that the present Comptroller has not removed Republicans who have been doing a good job. The resolution which Congressman MCLEOD introduced reads as follows:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following information: The methods of selecting and appointing receivers and attorneys for closed national banks; the costs of receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses involved in the liquidation of each of the closed national banks now in process of liquidation; the amounts due depositors of each such bank at its date of closing; and the amounts paid depositors of each such bank since closing."

Much of this information Congressman MCLEOD has already received, and he has never been denied any information that he has requested from the office of the Comptroller of the Currency. Congressman MCLEOD would require the Comptroller to add a score or more employees to be paid out of depositors' funds in order to furnish detailed information in all of the more than 1,500 closed national banks. The Comptroller has been interested in saving expenses for the depositors, while Congressman MCLEOD would freely spend their money in this manner. If Congresman MCLEOD would take the trouble to read the Comptroller's annual report, he would find therein accounted for: All collections by receivers, collection and offsets allowed; collections from stock assessments; amounts borrowed from the R. F. C.; dividends paid by receivers to secured and unsecured creditors; distributions by conservators, payments to secured and preferred creditors; offsets allowed and settled; payments to secured and preferred creditors; offsets allowed and settled; disbursements for protection of assets; receivers' salaries, legal and other expenses; conservators' salaries, legal and other expenses; a table showing the status, progress, and results of liquidation of all national banks placed in hands of receivers from the date of the first national bank failure in 1865 to October 31, the end of the fiscal year in the Comptroller's office; separate tables giving dates of appointment of receivers; capital at date of organization and at date of failure; dividends paid while solvent; total deposits, bills payable and rediscounts at date of failure; also tables showing assets at date of failure, additional assets acquired subsequent to failure; offsets allowed; disposition of all collections and dividends paid to creditors of all insolvent national banks, this information being given in detail as to each national bank. In addition to this, each receiver makes a quarterly report showing receipts and disbursements in his particular trust, and this report is posted in his bank and is available to every one of the depositors. This quarterly report is divided into four subheadings and gives the depositors the following information:

ASSETS

Assets at date of suspension.
Additional assets acquired since suspension.
Stock assessment (—— percent).

Total assets to be accounted for—Cash collected from assets; cash collected from additional assets; cash collected from stock assessment; total cash collected from assets and stock assessment; offsets allowed on assets. Losses charged off: On assets; on stock assessment; total losses charged off. Remaining assets: Uncollected assets; uncollected additional assets; uncollected stock assessment; total remaining uncollected assets.

RECAPITULATION OF REMAINING ASSETS—BOOK AND ESTIMATED VALUES

Total assets accounted for—Remaining assets: Uncollected assets; uncollected additional assets; uncollected stock assessment.

LIABILITIES

Total remaining assets—Secured liabilities at date of suspension; unsecured liabilities at date of suspension; additional liabilities established.

Total liabilities this date—Secured and preferred liabilities paid in cash (paid by Conservator ————); unsecured liabilities offset; unsecured liabilities for which receiver's certificates have been issued; unpaid secured liabilities (both proved and unproved); unsecured liabilities not paid or proved.

COLLECTIONS AND DISBURSEMENTS

Total liabilities accounted for—collections from all sources: Cash collected from assets and stock assessment; cash collected from interest, premium, and rents; cash collected by receiver, and held as trustee for owners; Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans received (loan to conservator $——).

Total collections to be accounted for—disbursements of every character: Secured and preferred liabilities paid (including dividends) (paid by conservator $——); collateral account (collections held by secured creditors and not yet applied); advances in protection of assets (taxes, insurance, etc.); expenses of receivership (expenses and advances by conservator $——); dividends paid to unsecured creditors (—— percent); (paid by conservator $——); Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans repaid; cash in hands of receiver and comptroller.

Total collections accounted for.

The article further states that "O'Connor admitted Wednesday that receivership costs in the Nation are approximately 7 percent of collections." This remarkable showing, which has been approved by everyone, was twisted in the article in order to color the statement. The Comptroller's office, over a period of 70 years, has returned to the depositors approximately 93 cents out of every dollar collected. This leaves 7 cents for the payment of receivers' salaries, legal fees, rent, and all other items of overhead. In the two Detroit receiverships, the expenses were less than 2 cents of each dollar collected. No other system of liquidation can compare with this record.

The article then goes on to state that Congressman McLEOD has been collecting data on receiverships with a view to taking the receiverships away from the Comptroller of the Currency and turning them over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and follows with figures regarding the Bain banks in Chicago, with particular reference to receivers' salaries and attorneys' fees for these banks. Again Mr. McLEOD leads Mr. Prevost into a serious error as he does not point out that the Bain banks were State banks and not under the jurisdiction of the Comptroller of the Currency nor under the supervision of the Federal Government. Just how the Congressman is going to turn over State receiverships of all State banks in the State of Michigan and in all other States to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not explained.

Not satisfied with giving misinformation, Congress McLEOD then resorts to rumors, and says he has heard a rumor that the attorneys' fees in the two large banks in Detroit have run as high as $250,000 each, which would be half a million dollars for both, and then gives this as the reason for abandoning the "rigid policy of secrecy." From the facts already given it would seem that there was very little secrecy about the facts and the positively false rumor was never inquired into by Congressman McLEOD, but was given free circulation. The Comptroller stated to the two Congressmen from Michigan on the House Banking and Currency Committee that he would furnish the information with reference to attorneys' fees and that the Congressmen were at liberty to make any use of the information that they saw fit. This will be done.

Congressman McLEOD is quoted as saying that receivers are public servants paid from funds of the depositors. This is as nearly accurate a statement as anyone who knows the Congressman would expect him to make. The Congressman is quoted further as saying that both depositors and the public have every right to know for what purpose their money is being expended. None of the public's money is being expended, yet the Congressman advises that the public is entitled to know for what purpose its money is being spent.

The Congressman advises that the reason for his desire to have receiverships turned over to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is because that board is bipartisan, whereas the Comptroller is appointed by the President. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is a large creditor in most of the receivership banks and Congressman McLEOD would place the Corporation in the embarrassing position of being a trustee for the other creditors, and in some instances the Corporation might be compelled to bring action against itself. The Congressman has suddenly discovered that after 70 years the office of the Comptroller of the Currency is a partisan office, and yet its policies have not changed in the 70-year period.

Again the Congressman misleads Mr. Prevost when he says "as a result of the threat of Representative PRENTISS M. BROWN to offer an amendment to administration's banking bill calling for publicity for all receiverships, O'Connor has agreed to make public within a week or 10 days the fees being paid to attorneys for the First National Bank and the Guardian National Bank of Commerce." This is positively a false statement, as Congressman BROWN never made such a suggestion, and, therefore, it could not have been turned into a "threat." The statement regarding Congressman BROWN's estimate of legal fees is also incorrect, and the statement, "O'Connor did not deny that legal fees for this receivership have approximated that sum" is incorrect, as the Comptroller advised the committee that he would give the Congressman the facts.

The Congressman has again misled Mr. Prevost when he says that "fees to lawyers and others chosen by the Comptroller, usually with the advice of Farley and State Democratic national committeeman, for the jobs" have had no publicity. Mr. Farley has never made the slightest suggestion as to the fees of any appointee of the Comptroller's Office. The misleading statement by the Congressman, therefore, is positively vicious.

Congressman McLEOD further misled Mr. Prevost when he said, "In agreeing to disclose the figures for the two banks at Detroit, O'Connor was attempting a compromise to prevent enactment of legislation." No one suggested any legislation; therefore this statement is false.

Congressman McLEOD further failed to state that he obtained the appointment of his law firm, McLeod, Fixel, Abbott & Fixel of Detroit, Mich., as attorneys for the receivers of the Lincoln Park National Bank of Lincoln Park, Mich., the Inkster National Bank of Inkster, Mich., and the First National Bank of Dearborn, Mich. His firm has received up to December 31, 1934, $11,924, and the firm is still acting as attorneys for the receivers in these three banks. Congressman McLEOD received these appointments from former Republican Comptrollers of the Currency and his firm has not been removed or disturbed in their work by the present Comptroller of the Currency, notwithstanding the Congressman's unfair criticism of the Comptroller and his receivers during the past 2 years. Frankly, could anything be more nonpartisan than this? Congressman McLEOD had his firm appointed because of his Republican standing and he now questions the right of any Democratic firm to be appointed in exactly the same manner.

It is indeed unfortunate that public officials attempt to make capital out of the sufferings and distress of our people. If the article was intended by Mr. McLEOD to further unrest and to give encouragement to those who would destroy all forms of representative government, it will in a measure serve that purpose. Newspaper men must naturally get their information from public officials and now and then are entirely misled by them.

Sincerely yours,

J. F. T. O'CONNOR, Comptroller.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—ROSSETTA LAWS (H. DOC. NO. 160)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 2128, entitled "An act for the relief of Rossetta Laws."

This bill provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Williams Laws, who was a member of Company F, Twentieth Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of that organization on the 6th day of October 1865.

The official records show that the soldier in question was tried by a general court martial and found guilty of assault with intent to kill; that the proceedings, findings, and sentence of the court martial were approved by proper authority; and that the soldier was subsequently released from confinement and mustered out of the service without an honorable discharge.

The Secretary of War strongly recommends that this bill be not favorably considered, and I find nothing in the facts in the case which would justify different action on my part.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 18, 1935.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. Is this motion debatable? If so, Mr. Speaker, I desire recognition.

The SPEAKER. It is within very narrow limits.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I have no direct interest in the bill which has been returned without Presidential approval, but I do desire to make this observation, with all respect for the views of the President as expressed in his veto message, sent us in good faith, that he did not have before him, when he considered the bill, the evidence which persuaded the committee and Congress to pass the bill. It went through both the House and Senate unanimously, and then to him.

The committee has carefully examined the adverse report of the Department, together with records and additional testimony which caused it to disregard the adverse departmental report. The President, however, frankly states that his disapproval is based upon the departmental recommendations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the President is to be guided solely by the recommendations of the Department, which Congress has fully considered along with additional facts in trying to do justice to these people who are interested in these private bills, I want to ask the Speaker if there is not some way that Congress could follow through upon some of these various measures which are returned to us in this manner and enact them into law over the veto if we feel that the interests of justice demand it?

The SPEAKER. Certainly the House has the power to proceed under its own rules. The Committee on Military Affairs has the power and privilege of considering the bill and reporting it back to the House.

Mr. KVALE. But the fight must begin de novo within the committee in each instance.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman states that the bill was passed unanimously by both branches of Congress.

Mr. KVALE. Necessarily so.

Mr. TRUAX. The gentleman from Minnesota knows that these bills on the Private Calendar are given very little consideration by individual Members, and that there are a number of other similar bills that should have been stopped right here and never should have been allowed to go to the President of the United States.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes in order to reply to the gentleman from Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I think it is only fair that I rise here to state some facts in connection with correction of dishonorable discharges to which the gentleman from Minnesota has referred.

When a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, or the whole committee, attempts to correct a dishonorable discharge given a man because of court-martial proceedings they have to go back into the records of the past and have no substantial grounds upon which to proceed. They have no way to produce any evidence except that given to them in the report by the War Department; and the report of the War Department is taken absolutely from the report of the court martial of the soldier concerned. The President is right in his stand. No committee sitting in judgment upon a matter of this kind has any way whatsoever of producing any substantial facts bearing upon the case except to get them in this manner.

I do not believe there is one case in a thousand of the cases where bills are introduced to correct the dishonorable discharges of soldiers which has the slightest bit of merit to it. I believe this, and I think every other man in this House who has been a soldier believes that the 4,000,000 or more men throughout the United States who have honorable discharges are entitled to have their honorable discharges protected. Every dishonorable discharge that is corrected cheapens the honorable discharges which men have earned.

Mr. KVALE. I am just as proud of my honorable discharge as is the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I shall not take the time of the House now, but within the next day or two I shall endeavor to show the gentleman the facts about at least one of these thousand cases to which he refers.

Mr. FADDIS. If the gentleman has the evidence, no doubt the committee will hear it and take it into consideration; but I am explaining to the House that very, very seldom is evidence of merit produced in support of such bills.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn until Monday noon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DEROUEN (at the request of Mr. MONTET), for 5 days, on account of illness.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 6457. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Hudson, N. Y., and of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the city of Providence, R. I., respectively.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 97. Joint resolution authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the Convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia, June 8, 1935, to June 17, 1935, both inclusive.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2439. An act authorizing adjustment of the claim of the Public Service Coordinated Transport of Newark, N. J.; and

H. R. 3071. An act for the relief of Second Lt. Charles E. Upson.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.), pursuant to the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Monday, April 22, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(Monday, Apr. 22, 10:30 a. m.)

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT CONVENTION RECONSIDERATION

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return temporarily to executive session and, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the treaty known as Executive E (73d Cong., 2d sess.), the International Convention of the Copyright Union, was ratified on Friday last be reconsidered, and that the treaty be restored to the Executive Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I concur in the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, on request of the Senator from Wisconsin, the vote whereby the convention was ratified is reconsidered, and the convention is restored to the Executive Calendar.

CLAIM OF SUDDEN & CHRISTENSON, INC., ET AL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the enclosed decision rendered on December 22, 1934, by the arbitrator, John Clark Knox, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $78,025.83 for the payment to Sudden & Christenson, Inc.; John A. Hooper, Emil T. Kruse, Edward Kruse, Gilbert Loken, and G. W. McNear, Inc., or their successors in interest, as recommended by the arbitrator, upon receipt by the Secretary of State of satisfactory releases from the respective claimants.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1935.

(Enclosures: Report, decision, draft bill.)

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of papers and documents on the files of the General Accounting Office which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. GLASS and Mr. HALE members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas a serious situation exists in the textile industry of the State of New York and other States of the United States; and

Whereas a most remarkable and extraordinary increase in the importation of cotton textile fabrics from Japan has been had during the past 12 months; and

Whereas the importation of cotton textile fabrics from Japan has increased from 30,000 square yards in January 1934 to 10,200,000 square yards in January and February 1935; and

Whereas, if allowed to continue, this condition can only result in dire economic distress for the textile manufacturers and for that large portion of labor which is employed by this industry in this State; and

Whereas proper and immediate legislation is necessary for the correction thereof; and

Whereas the members of this legislature are deeply concerned with this problem which is bound to affect the economic condition of this State and also this Nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Congress of the United States be, and hereby is, memorialized to enact legislation which will restrict the importation into this country of any textile article from any other country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from any such country during the 5 years of 1930 and 1934, inclusive.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to reduce the present tax on beer and other liquor

Whereas the bootlegger continues his operations to the detriment of the income of the Federal Government; and

Whereas it is proper that the legitimate dealer be protected and the public revenues increased: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of Wisconsin hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to reduce the present Federal tax on beer to $2 per barrel and the present Federal tax on liquor to the former rate of $1.10 per gallon; be it further

Resolved, That a properly certified copy of this resolution be sent to each of the following officials: To the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Chief Clerks of both Houses of Congress, and to Hon. Henry Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate petitions of several citizens of Mississippi, South Carolina, and Tennessee, praying for the enactment of old-age-pension legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Ban Yan Club, No. 30, of San Diego, and the Chambers of Commerce of Portrero and Alpine, all in the State of California, and also by a mass meeting of citizens of Yakima County, Wash., favoring the adoption of the so-called "Townsend old-age-pension plan", which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from members of Branch No. 199 of the Literature Association of Lithuanians, of Johnston City, Ill., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Antifacist Action of German Workers' Organizations, of Newark, N. J., protesting against the enactment of proposed alien and sedition legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Federal Bar Association, Washington, D. C., favoring acceptance of the bequest to the United States contained in the last will and testament of the late Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes and that it be set aside as a trust fund for endowment in the Library of Congress of a chair to be known as the "Oliver Wendell Holmes Chair of Research Jurisprudence", which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate petitions of sundry citizens of the United States praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana (Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON), which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the American Society for Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics, Inc., at Detroit, Mich., endorsing in principle Senate bill No. 5, known as the "pure food, drugs, and cosmetics bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Palmetto, Fla., favoring the enactment of legislation proclaiming October 11 in each year as General Pulaski's Memorial Day, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WALSH presented petitions and papers in the nature of petitions from the Pratt Civic Association of Massachusetts; the City Council of Salem; the Springfield Taxpayers' Association, of Springfield; and the Federation of Polish Women's Clubs, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the taking of adequate measures to afford relief to the cotton cloth textile industry, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions endorsed by Local Union No. 860, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Framingham, Mass., favoring the withdrawal of Bulletin No. 23709, issued by Deputy Administrator Fleming, of the Federal Emergency Administration, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Ladies' Auxiliary of Walker-Rogers Post, No. 662, of Lowell, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Patman bonus bill", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry members of Mount Holyoke College and other citizens of South Hadley and vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called "Patman bonus bill", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of West Somerville, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 195 of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, of Taunton, Mass., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Division No. 253, Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, of Quincy, Mass., praying for the amendment of House bill 5423, known as the "Rayburn public-utility bill", so as to except from its provisions transportation companies owned by public-utility holding companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Overseas Post, No. 240, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Lynn, Mass., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2897) to make it a crime to advocate or promote the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Post No. 23, of the Polish Army Veterans Association of America, Adams, Mass., favoring the enactment of House bill 2739, to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 717, International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, of Boston, Mass., favoring the enactment of the so-called "Wheeler-Rayburn bill" providing for the regulation of public-utility holding companies, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Belmont-Waverly Post No. 165, the American Legion, of Belmont, Mass., favoring the holding of the 1935 United States fleet maneuvers in the Pacific Ocean, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to take the profit out of war, which was referred to the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being members of the Young Women's Christian Association, of Lowell, Mass., praying for the enactment of Senate bill No. 5, known as the "pure food, drugs, and cosmetics bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the following resolution of the Senate of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Whereas on March 13, 1935, Senator Morris Sheppard introduced in the Senate of the United States of America, a bill known as S. B. No. 2294, authorizing the President of the United States, through such person or persons as he may designate, to select an appropriate site within the Canal Zone and to cause to be erected thereon, a suitable statue of heroic size of Maj. Gen. George W. Goethals, in commemoration of his signally distinguished services, in connection with the construction and operation of the Panama Canal: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Texas, That it hereby commends the high purpose of Senate bill No. 2294, and directs that copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD.

Mr. SHEPPARD also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Texas, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Whereas the Democratic Party of Texas in convention assembled on September 11, 1934, adopted the following plank in the party platform:

"We oppose the abdication or surrender of the State's power to control the production of its natural resources. We likewise oppose any Federal encroachment upon the exclusive power of this State to control the production of oil and gas. We oppose any plan that results in the arbitrary compulsory unitization of oil fields"; and

Whereas there is pending at this time before the Committee on Mines and Mining of the United States Senate a bill known as the "Thomas bill", which has for its purpose the attempted regulation of the production of oil within the States; and

Whereas the purpose of said bill is directly contrary to the principles contained in the platform of the Texas Democracy and contrary to the principles of our dual form of government, in that it is an attempted invasion of the sovereign powers of this and other States of the Union: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Texas (the house of representatives concurring), That the Members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress be, and they are hereby, respectfully petitioned and requested to oppose the adoption of the so-called "Thomas bill" or other similar bills; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate and the chief clerk of the house of representatives be, and they are hereby, instructed to mail a copy of this resolution to the members of the Texas delegation in the Congress of the United States, to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the United States Senate, and to the Chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives.

FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION AT NATIONAL GUARD CAMPS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the committee of the National Guard Association of America, at a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs, made a presentation of their desires and now have written a communication to the chairman of that committee, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], and committed it to myself as something of a serving deputy. I ask the privilege of having it printed in the RECORD, with the accompanying paper, for the information of the Senate and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GUARD ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1935.

The Honorable MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Senate Military Affairs Committee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: It is our understanding that the War Department has asked the House Military Committee to pass a resolution requesting the President to earmark certain funds for construction at Army posts and camps and at air fields, as well as at National Guard camps. When this suggestion was first considered by a subcommittee of the House Military Affairs Committee some weeks ago the National Guard was asked to present the items touching the National Guard which it desired included in such a resolution then being considered. A representative committee of National Guard officers from throughout the United States appeared before this subcommittee and presented in detail its requests.

In support of that action and to submit more specific information concerning the requests for funds to be allocated to the States for the construction of armories, a hearing before the joint committee of the Senate and the House was accorded the representatives of the National Guard on yesterday, when detailed information and suggestions were offered.

For your consideration, this committee of the National Guard are submitting herewith a tentative draft of a resolution which we believe incorporates the ideas and items under consideration. We have included in this resolution the items submitted by the War Department of Army posts and camps, air bases and air fields, as well as items for construction at National Guard camps, which items remain of those considered at earlier hearings.

We therefore respectfully submit our request that you introduce a resolution covering these subjects, and will appreciate your securing prompt consideration of it.

We desire to express our very deep appreciation of the helpfulness and interest always exhibited by your committees.

Sincerely yours,

ROY D. KEEHN,
Major General, Illinois National Guard,
President National Guard Association.

Resolved, etc., That the President is requested to allocate from the $4,880,000,000 appropriated under House Joint Resolution 117 the following amounts for the specific purposes mentioned below:

Construction at Regular Army posts and camps, to include air bases and air fields	$126,000,000
Construction at National Guard camps located throughout the 48 States	12,000,000
To the several States for construction of, repairs, alterations, and additions to armories for the National Guard and Naval Militia located throughout the 48 States	80,000,000

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. THOMAS of Utah), from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) authorizing the publication as a public document of America Secure: Analytical Register of Regular Army Officers and Security Statistics, with graphs, 1775–1935, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 540) thereon.

REGULATION OF BANKS AND BANKING

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, by his able and consistent discharge of the duties of that position, has won special respect everywhere. On April 21, 1935, he issued a statement on the proposed banking act of 1935. The source of the statement and the importance of the subject he discussed entitled it to a suitable place for future use and reference.

I ask as a part of my remarks, with subsequent reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency, to have the statement printed in the RECORD; also accompanying it an article of the same date appearing in the New York Times, and another one appearing in the Baltimore Sun.

There being no objection, the statement and articles were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PROPOSED BANKING ACT OF 1935

STATEMENT OF HON. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Since the introduction of the proposed banking act of 1935 (S. 1715 and H. R. 5357), a flood of letters and telegrams have been sent to Senators and Congressmen in protest against one particular section of the bill, namely, title II. I myself have received several hundred letters which show evidences of having originated from one central office. On the face of the facts, I would say that they have been signed and mailed by persons who have neither read the provisions of the bill nor are conversant with the principles incorporated in it. For the enlightenment of probably thousands of ill-advised correspondents, I am herewith reproducing one of the "form letters":

APRIL 8, 1935.

Hon. ———,

Senate Committee on Banking and Currency,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ———: I hope that you will find it possible to use your influence against the banking bill (H. R. 5357, S. 1715). I believe that it endangers the development of sound banking in this country, not only because its banking principles are unsound but because it permits political control of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks.

Respectfully yours,

(Signed) JOHN DOE.

On the other hand, a number of bankers, editors, pseudoeconomists, and so-called "financial experts" have bandied the subject back and forth in the press and through the medium of "form letter" correspondence for something like 2 months. Such tactics have resulted in a wealth of misinformation. Much of this misinformation has been deliberate and willful.

At this stage of the matter, I wish to warn the general public, and particularly the correspondents to whom I have just referred, that they must be on their guard lest they be abused as were thousands of business men by the use of similar methods against the enactment of the Securities Act of 1933 and the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. To this date there are literally thousands of well-intentioned but misinformed business men who do not know the facts pertaining to the prospective issuance of their own securities under these acts. This misunderstanding is not due to defects in either of the acts or to the administration of them. It all goes back to the campaign of vicious propaganda and misinformation.

Similar results are now evidenced with respect to the proposed Banking Act of 1935. Do not be misled. This legislation will serve a public purpose and its enactment is essential to the establishment of the financial and economic security of this Nation's domestic enterprises.

As a result of having devoted much thought and study to the numerous articles which have appeared in the press and hundreds of letters which have come to my desk, I think it best that this attempt be made to explain more clearly to the public the issues which are in controversy and discuss the principles involved in order that a much clearer understanding may be had of the necessity for the passage of this piece of legislation.

In my opinion, the proposed Banking Act of 1935 is, in all probability, the most important piece of banking and monetary policy legislation with which this or any other Congress has dealt. This statement is based upon the importance of title II alone; and, curiously enough, title II of the bill is bearing the brunt of almost all the opposition made to the entire piece of legislation. Please be advised, however, that all of those who are offering concerted opposition to the bill on the basis of the incorporation of title II are almost spontaneous in their clamor for the enactment of titles I and III.

Hence, I shall deal only briefly with the first and third titles of the bill. The first title provides for the merging of temporary deposit insurance funds into permanent funds, that $5,000 be designated as the maximum insurable deposit for assessments, withdrawal from the fund, buying assets of insured closed banks, and a number of other important matters. The third title provides for "accidental" holding-company affiliates, security affiliates in liquidation, security dealers accepting deposits, employees' deposits, liquidation of assets of banks in voluntary liquidation, termination of double liability, examinations, and a number of other important matters.

Title II, on the other hand, deals almost wholly with the creation of machinery for the effective regulation of a definite monetary policy in accordance with the campaign promises of President Roosevelt based on the Democratic platform of 1932 which advocated "a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards" and proposed to put an end to "the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at the expense of the public."

Moreover, it is a definite attempt to accomplish the ends which the President had in mind when on July 3, 1933, he stated to the American delegation to the London Economic Conference and again reaffirmed on October 22 in his address to the American people in which he stated that "when we have restored the price level, we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation last July and I say it now once more."

This bill among other things provides that:

(1) "The offices of governor and chairmen of the board of directors of each Federal Reserve bank shall be combined." In their places a Governor and Vice Governor "shall be appointed annually by the board of directors, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. The governor shall be the chief executive officer of the bank."

Whereas in the original Federal Reserve Act the executive head of the bank was to have been known as chairman of the board of directors and at the same time act in the capacity of Federal Reserve agent, the active head in control of purely banking operations was to function in the capacity of a bank manager. The Federal Reserve banks gave to the bank manager the high-sounding name of "governor."

Since that time it has developed that the governor of each Federal Reserve bank has not only superseded the chairman and agent as the executive officer of the bank but has also become the virtual dictator of the Federal Reserve bank to the extent of practically controlling the election of directors who are presumed to be independent in the exercise of their power in the election of said governor. The results are obvious.

The above provision of the bill merely merges the two offices and at the same time provides for the retention of all governors and chairmen—if they are qualified and if, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, the various boards of directors elect them governor and vice governor. At the same time the language of the bill makes it clear for once that banks cannot evade or override the law through the creation of a high-sounding office and wrest control from the Board by creating a dictatorship within the Federal Reserve System.

The bill further provides that:

(2) Prior to July 1, 1937, the Federal Reserve Board may waive the capital requirements for the admission of nonmember State banks as members of the Federal Reserve System.

It is intended, through such a provision, to recognize the fact that small banks—that small State banks—are not mere "pawn shops." It is in recognition of the fact that smallness and bigness in a bank's capitalization, deposits, investments, or loans is not an indelible evidence of either soundess or weakness. The success or failure of a bank depends primarily on its management and not on its size.

It is a recognition of the fact that there are thousands of small State banks in this country which are worthy of membership in the Federal Reserve System. On the other hand, it absolutely does not provide a license for, or inducement to, the inclusion of unsound banks, or of undercapitalized banks, within the Federal Reserve System. Assuming an unbiased and unprejudiced administration of the act in accordance with the intentions of Congress, there should result no unfair treatment of, or impositions on, either State banks or national banks under the provisions of this section.

The next provision to which I wish to call your attention is:

(3) "In selecting the six appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board the President shall choose persons well qualified by education or experience or both to participate in the formulation of national economic and monetary policies."

Moreover, each director is to receive a salary equal to that of a member of the President's Cabinet, and shall be retired at the age of 70 upon a retirement wage to be paid out of funds derived from levies on Federal Reserve banks.

Such a provision is conceived in the public interest. It provides for no favoritism between bankers, lawyers, economists, manufacturers, or men from any other profession. The administrative duties of a Board member are such as to require a far broader experience and basis for the exercise of sound judgment than that derived from the narrow confines of any one profession. Please note that the section reads: "The President must choose persons well qualified by education and experience, or both, to participate in the formulation of national economic and monetary policies."

That is a mandate.

The next three points to which I wish to direct your attention are of the greatest vital importance. They have to do with the Federal Open Market Committee, flexibility of reserve requirements, and discounts.

They are, in order of sequence, numbered (4), (5), and (6).

(4) The creation of a Federal open-market committee consisting of 5 members, 3 of whom shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board, the other 2 to be governors of the Federal Reserve banks selected by all the governors of said banks. Their terms of office shall expire at the end of each calendar year. Said committee shall have supervisory control over the open-market operations of the Federal Reserve banks.

(5) The Federal Reserve Board is empowered to change the reserve requirements of member banks as to any or all Federal Reserve districts and/or any or all classes of cities and as to time and/or demand deposits.

(6) "Subject to such requirements as to maturities and other matters as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, any Federal Reserve bank may discount any commercial, agricultural, or industrial paper and may make advances to any such member bank on its promissory notes secured by any sound assets of such member bank."

Significance of provisions (4), (5), and (6)

The first question which arises in connection with these three provisions is as to whether they involve a radical change in the present powers and functions of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve System as it is now constituted. The second question is as to whether there will be established a political dictatorship of banking.

The unequivocal answer to the first—aside from a technical splitting of hairs—is no. To the second an unequivocal answer of no must be given.

It is a fact that all of the powers which are by this bill centralized in the Federal Reserve Board have since the enactment of the original Federal Reserve Act existed within the Federal Reserve System. That is, all open-market powers dealt with in title II of this act exist in the present law, and were so read into the original act by the "governors" of the Federal Reserve banks, as I shall subsequently point out. But it also must be mentioned that when any or all the Reserve banks, the Reserve Board, or the Treasury, through its stabilization fund, engage in open-market operations, they depart from and transcend the field of banking and become engaged in operations foreign to banking per se.

That is, when banks or the Board engage in open-market operations, they are buying and selling money; they are expanding and contracting the total volume of money; they are laying the foundation for inflation, deflation, and economic chaos if intelligence and prudence are not exercised in accordance with the sound principles of monetary science.

Such principles are not one and the same with even those of sound banking, where private profit is predominant. On the other hand, the principles of monetary science to which I refer are the principles of national monetary policy operations which absolutely must be made to conform with a public interest which oftentimes is directly opposed to the private-interest motives of bankers if they are to be administered in the interest of the general public.

Development of coordinative system—Policy in open-market operations of Federal Reserve Banks

For your information, I want to give you a brief historical sketch of the development of open-market operations by Federal Reserve banks under the original Federal Reserve Act and the centralization of their power without any specific authorization of law.

My wish is first to narrate in terms of what might be called "bankers' technical language"; then I wish to translate it into good everyday English.

Prior to 1922, the Reserve banks, having the power to invest money, made considerable investments in the open market, buying bills and buying Government securities. The holdings of United States Government securities by Federal Reserve banks gradually increased in the early years of the System to about $300,000,000 in 1920 and were slightly smaller in 1921. Their purchase and sale of bankers' acceptances were made largely in accordance with seasonal changes in the supply of acceptances and in the demand for funds.

In 1922 Federal Reserve banks, facing a decline in earning assets because of repayments of discounts by member banks, began to buy Government securities for the purpose of increasing their earnings. It was observed that the operations of Federal Reserve banks, acting independently, were affecting the market for Government securities, and that these operations conflicted with each other and with those of the banks as fiscal agents of the Treasury.

In May 1922, at a meeting of the governors of the Federal Reserve banks, a committee was appointed to coordinate the buying and selling of Government securities so as to have a more orderly program under central control.

In October 1922 this committee undertook to make recommendations to the Federal Reserve banks regarding the purchase and sale of Government securities. It was observed in this year that purchases of Government securities did not cause an increase in the earning assets of the Federal Reserve banks, nor did sales cause a decrease, but rather that they affected the volume of borrowings at member banks. As a consequence, the conference of governors of the Federal Reserve banks voted that "investment policy should give minor consideration to the question of earnings and constant consideration to the effects which open-market operations have upon the condition and the course of the money market and the volume of credit."

On April 7, 1923, the Board advised the governors of the Federal Reserve banks formally of a resolution adopted by the Federal Reserve Board on March 22, 1923, with respect to open-market operations by Federal Reserve banks, pointing out the necessity for the coordination of open-market operations of the Federal Reserve banks with their discount operations and their general credit policy. It also announced the organization of the open-market investment committee for the Federal Reserve System. This committee consisted of five representatives of the Reserve banks and was to be under the general supervision of the Federal Reserve Board. From this time on open-market operations could not be engaged in by Federal Reserve banks, except with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

In March 1930 the open-market policy conference, consisting of representatives of all the Reserve banks, replaced the open-market investment committee. Under the Banking Act of 1933 the Federal open-market committee, consisting of 12 Reserve-bank governors, was established.

What I have said in the immediately preceding six paragraphs is, in technical bankers' language, a correct statement of what Federal Reserve bankers did and are now doing. But in the language of the layman, this simply means that the Federal Reserve System is already engaged in all of the operations and performing all of the functions which will be required under the proposed bill; however, there is added one factor of the greatest significance to the public. We shall, through this act, definitely fix the responsibility for and the power to engage in open-market operations in the Federal Reserve Board. In the future, when money becomes "easy" or money becomes "tight" or when we are led into a period of inflation or a period of contraction and economic demoralization, we shall be able to put our finger upon the Federal open-market committee and say, "You are responsible."

May I reemphasize the fact that when the Federal Reserve banks back in 1921 and 1922 began their open-market operations "for the purpose of increasing their earnings" and later when they appointed a committee "to coordinate the buying and selling of securities in the open market", they were literally buying and selling dollars for profit. They were buying and selling dollars in just the same manner and for precisely the same purpose that hundreds of carloads of wheat were bought and sold, a hundred times over, in the Chicago wheat pit or in the street, despite the fact that the wheat was in freight cars and stood on the railroad sidings for days, weeks, even months without once having been moved. That is, the open-market committee was dealing in previously created credit obligations for profit and eventually awakening to the fact that they were shooting the price structure to pieces, upsetting the financial plans of the Government, disrupting business, and confusing the bankers. Through this act we propose to introduce responsibility for such activities—in fact, to command that the necessary operations must be engaged in at the direction of the Federal open-market committee with a mandate laid down for the orderly conduct of such operations in the public interest.

To what extent is this the introduction of a new principle into the law? The answer is: "It is not new."

Section 8 of the Banking Act of 1933 provided for the insertion of a new section in the Federal Reserve Act, to wit:

"There is hereby created a Federal open-market committee * * *", immediately followed by subsections (b), (c), and (d), which made all open-market operations subject to "regulations adopted by the Federal Reserve Board." Based upon the latter fact, I insist that the proposed title II does not in any way increase the political control over the operations of the Federal Reserve Board, the Federal Reserve banks, or of member banks. On the contrary, the law remains as it has been for over 20 years. Under the above provisions of subsection (d) any Federal Reserve bank might be excused from participation provided it "filed with the chairman of the committee, within 30 days, a notice of its decision, * * * not to participate." In this respect our proposal is to strike out the exception and leave the power to initiate action with the Board.

Now, what of the flexibility of reserves provided for in the bill?

May I remind you that the same Congress which enacted the Banking Act of 1933 wrote a similar clause into Public, No. 10 (in that part known as the Thomas amendment), a provision for the "increase or decrease from time to time, in its discretion, the reserve balances required to be maintained against either demand or time deposits."

On this point, the proposed Banking Act of 1935 gives recognition to the fact that there is no safety to be found in arbitrary judgment or arbitrary figures with respect to the reserves of either Federal Reserve banks or of member banks. Several hundred years ago the goldsmiths retained 100 percent reserves. Later they arbitrarily reduced their reserves. England has no such arbitrary reserve requirements established by law. This country has progressively found it advisable to reduce the legal reserve requirements for even commercial banks from an arbitrary figure of 50 to 40 to 25, until now they stand at 13, 10, and 7 percent on demand deposits of commercial banks, depending upon the size of cities in which they are located.

No banking dictatorship created

The powers referred to in no. 6 as I am designating them cannot and should not be construed as the creation of a Federal Reserve Board dictatorship over purely banking operations of the Federal Reserve banks and their member banks. In this respect the Board's directions to banks are either permissive or prohibitive as to all purely banking operations. Within these two extremes all actions with respect to purely banking matters are left to the discretion of Federal Reserve banks and their member banks. That is, bankers will decide as to whether they shall or shall not make loans or investments which lie purely within the field of banking operations, such as whether loans shall or shall not be made to an individual or corporation, or a mortgage purchased, or the calling of a loan. And it is likewise left to the Federal Reserve bank as to whether it shall or shall not rediscount any of the paper of a member bank, or make a loan to said member bank upon any of its sound assets.

The next provision to which I wish to refer is:

(7) "Federal reserve notes are to be issued by the Federal Reserve bank and retired under such rules and requirements as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe."

From the orthodox banking point of view such a provision is sound. Banks are not opposing this feature of the bill.

The next and last provision to which I wish to make a specific reference is:

(8) National banks will be permitted to "make loans, secured by first liens upon approved real estate, including improved farm lands and improved business and residential properties."

This is a long-established principle. Do you want it stricken out, or do you have some arbitrary limit you think should be fixed? This is definitely up to the Congress. We must choose reasonable limits. What is your suggestion?

It is because of the above provisions incorporated in title II that the American Bankers Association, a number of the State bankers' associations, and numerous bankers and economists throughout the country are making a concerted effort to divide the bill and enact titles I and III, alleging that said title II effects radical changes in the banking laws of the Nation.

May I point out that, with one or two exceptions, all of the above requirements have to do with the control over the monetary policy of the country. Monetary-policy operations cannot and should not be merged with purely banking operations.

The administration of a monetary policy has to do with the contraction and expansion of the credit and currency of the country and directly affects the purchasing power of money. This function transcends those of banking, farming, manufacturing, or that of any other business activity. It literally controls the economic and social welfare of the whole Nation. Traditionally, to be sure, this function has been turned over to banks and bankers who have operated it without direct responsibility to anyone. We propose, as I have previously pointed out, to centralize the powers and responsibilities in the Federal Reserve Board.

There are literally thousands of bankers in this country whose heads are bowed in humiliation and shame. They are blamed for the vicious results, many of which they are not able to rationalize. They have had their lines of credit shut off or have experienced the withdrawal of huge sums of money upon demand. In turn they have been forced to try to call in loans which they oftentimes have made with the greatest of caution and deserved confidence, to be peremptorily thrown into the maelstrom of a financial panic, contraction, or depression.

Among them, however, there have been a few bankers "in the know" and also in a dominant position for laying down the rules for making money "tight" or "easy"—of literally determining the trend—yet the latter have not personally been singled out nor can they, under our present system, be called to account for the disastrous results of their acts. It is my earnest desire that the fifteen or twenty thousand bewildered bankers, who have never known and never will know what it is all about, demand that this great destabilizing and disturbing factor of monetary policy shall be separated from banking per se and placed in the hands of men who must and who shall be held responsible and accountable for their acts. Undoubtedly in this great Nation we can find at least five or eight men, depending upon the final provisions of the act, who know what it is all about and can be trusted to administer our monetary policy intelligently and with the greatest amount of integrity and respect for the people, and act for the public welfare.

Bankers as a whole are not qualified to determine nor competent to administer our monetary policy. They have not been able to discern the difference between purely banking functions and monetary policy operations. As a whole they have known only that money was "easy" or money was "tight" without knowing the "whys" and "wherefores" and have been wholly ineffectual if not irresponsibile in the administration of our monetary policy.

We have been sifting and winnowing the basic facts for the past 6 long years. We know the facts. We have weighed the evidence. We have made up our minds as a result of the collapses of 1920 and 1929. None of the opposition will dispute the facts. They cannot deny them. If they have not made up their minds after 6 years, we have little promise that they will have anything to offer after another 2 years.

It is common knowledge, however, that there now lies within the hands of bankers the potential makings for one of the most stupendous inflations this or any other Nation has ever experienced. And experience teaches us that banker control of monetary policy will probably give us an equally devastating financial whirlwind when that bubble is pricked.

This bill is conceived as our most essential safeguard.

FLETCHER ATTACKS BANKERS, DECLARES OMNIBUS BILL NEED—"AS A WHOLE, THEY ARE NOT QUALIFIED TO DETERMINE OUR MONETARY POLICY", HE SAYS—HOUSE REPORT IS FILED—ASKS PASSAGE IN ECCLES' FORM—MINORITY CALLS RESERVE CHANGES DANGEROUS

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Opening a campaign to put the omnibus banking bill through the Senate, Chairman FLETCHER, of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, struck out today against a "flood of letters and telegrams" attacking the measure, which, he said, has been sent to Congress Members.

In support of the bill's proposal to lodge control of open-market operations, discount rates, and member bank reserve requirements in the Federal Reserve Board, he declared in his statement that "bankers, as a whole, are not qualified to determine, nor competent to administer, our monetary policy."

"They have not been able to discern the difference between purely banking functions and monetary-policy operations", he said. "As a whole, they have known only that money was 'easy' or money was 'tight', without knowing the whys and wherefores, and have been wholly ineffectual, if not irresponsible, in the administration of our monetary policy."

BILL REPORTED IN HOUSE

As this defense was voiced from the Senate side, the House Banking and Currency Committee filed its report recommending passage of the bill in substantially the form it was drafted by Marriner S. Eccles, Governor, and other officials of the Federal Reserve Board. A minority report filed by the seven Republican members of the committee recommended that the bill be not passed if it contained the title II reorganizing the Federal Reserve System and broadening powers of the Federal Board.

The fight in both branches will center around this portion of the bill, as titles I and III have aroused little opposition. Senator GLASS, chairman of the subcommittee which is now holding hearings on the bill, has predicted that his group would take title II out of the bill and reserve it for further consideration.

Senator FLETCHER has predicted with equal emphasis that the full committee would put title II back in the bill, and that the Senate would pass it in the form he said President Roosevelt told him he wanted it.

FLETCHER SEES PUBLIC BENEFIT

"This legislation will serve a public purpose and its enactment is essential to the establishment of the financial and economic security of this Nation's domestic enterprises", Mr. FLETCHER'S statement said.

"Title II deals almost wholly with the creation of machinery for the effective regulation of a definite monetary policy in accordance with the campaign promises of President Roosevelt based on the Democratic platform of 1932, which advocated 'a sound currency, to be preserved at all hazards', and proposed to put an end to 'the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at the expense of the public.'"

Asserting that the control of monetary policy must be placed in the hands of men who can be held accountable and responsible for their acts, Senator FLETCHER declared that "when banks or the board engage in open-market operations they are buying and selling money; they are expanding and contracting the total volume of money; they are laying the foundation for inflation, deflation, and economic chaos if intelligence and prudence are not exercised in accordance with the sound principles of monetary science."

REPUBLICANS ISSUE WARNING

The Republicans said in the House minority report that "no emergency has been shown requiring the passage of the title II."

"No immediate need for it has been evidenced," they continued. "The inherent dangers in it are obvious. Its presence in the bill jeopardizes the early passage by Congress of titles I and III."

The minority report was signed by Representatives HOLLISTER, of Ohio; WOLCOTT, of Michigan; CAVICCHIA, of New Jersey; FISH, of New York; GIFFORD, of Massachusetts; DIRKSEN, of Illinois; and FENERTY, of Pennsylvania.

The two titles of which they approved, dealing with a permanent Federal deposit insurance system, to be eligible for which State nonmember banks do not have to join the Federal Reserve System, and clarification of technical details of the existing Federal Reserve Act, are generally conceded to be noncontroversial.

"One of the things most dreaded today by thinking people is the possibility of weakening, or perhaps the collapse of Government credit because of continued deficits," the minority said in commenting on the open-market powers the bill proposes to confer on the Federal Reserve Board.

"Government financing should be on the same basis as private financing—that is, a free and open market, where the savings of the people are voluntarily used in the purchase of Government obligations. Wherever the Government is in a position to compel the use of the savings of the people to acquire such obligations, such financing becomes a forced loan and is one of the most vicious inroads on liberty."

OPPOSE "FORCING" BANKS

"Weakening of the market for Government obligations is a danger signal in the spending program of any government, and this bill would make it easy to ignore such a danger signal. What most people do not realize is that whenever banks may be forced to acquire Government bonds against their will or at rates which they would not recognize if the transaction were voluntary, as far as the actual credit of the Government is concerned deficits might just as well be financed by fiat money."

Mr. HOLLISTER and his colleagues made much of this argument during the long hearings on the bill. Mr. Eccles at that time replied that the intent of the proposed open-market powers was not to force banks to buy Government obligations and pointed to the ease with which the Treasury has already carried through important refinancing operations.

The Republican report remarked that "open-market operations are always conducted for all the banks by the New York Federal Reserve Bank, for New York is the money and bond market of the country."

URGE FURTHER STUDY

"If this new provision becomes law, it means that the resources of the Federal Reserve banks from the 12 districts may be drained to New York for the purpose of acquiring bonds, no matter how unwise it might appear to bankers generally," the minority went on. "Thus the board of a particular Federal Reserve bank might consider that it was already overloaded with Government bonds and yet be forced to buy more."

They recommended further study of the contents of title II, calling it a "clear example of hasty and ill-advised legislation on a matter of vital importance to the country." They also condemned the proposed power to control Reserve requirements.

"The right to raise is the right to curtail or even stop entirely the normal banking function of lending," the report said. "The right to lower brings the possibility of endangering deposits by requiring insufficient reserves. Neither power should be lightly exercised."

House leaders predicted that the bill would pass practically as reported, with the chief fight on the floor centering on defeating radical amendments, including those for the "commodity dollar", fixed-price levels, and other such proposals of the sort.

BANKING BILL CALLED VITAL BY FLETCHER

By C. P. Trussell

WASHINGTON, April 20—Banking today took the center of the Washington legislative stage.

Routed in every attempt it made during the last 8 legislative days to strip the principal features from the social-security bill, which it finally helped to pass yesterday, the House Republicans turned their guns against the omnibus banking measure, just emerging from the committee.

A 3,500-WORD STATEMENT BY FLETCHER

Almost immediately there came from the other side of the Capitol a 3,500-word statement from Senator FLETCHER (Democrat of Florida), Chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, in which he warned:

"There now lies within the hands of bankers the potential makings for one of the most stupendous inflations this or any other nation has ever experienced. And experience teaches us that banker control of monetary policy will probably give us an equally devastating financial whirlwind when that bubble is pricked."

CALLED ESSENTIAL SAFEGUARD

"The omnibus banking bill is conceived as our most essential safeguard."

His defense of the measure centered almost wholly upon the so-called "central bank section." That part of the bill is being attacked not only by the Republicans but also is the subject of a Nation-wide protest which the Florida Senator denounced as an organized movement.

"Bankers," Senator FLETCHER said, "are not qualified to determine nor competent to administer our monetary policy.

"They have not been able to discern the difference between purely banking functions and monetary-policy operations. As a whole they have known only that money was 'easy' or money was 'tight', without knowing the 'whys' and 'wherefores' and have been wholly ineffectual if not irresponsible in the administration of our monetary policy."

FACTS CANNOT BE DENIED

"We have been sifting and winnowing the basic facts for the past 6 long years. We know the facts. We have weighed the evidence. We have made up our minds as a result of the collapses of 1920 and 1929. None of the opposition will dispute the facts. They cannot deny them."

The pending bill, identified as the Banking Act of 1935, is the next piece of legislation on the administration's "must" program to be tackled by the House. Whether it is actually an administration instrument has been a subject of heated debate between Senator GLASS (Democrat of Virginia), of the Senate Banking Committee, and Representative STEAGALL (Democrat of Alabama), chairman of the same committee of the House.

ALSO HELD REPLY TO GLASS

Senator FLETCHER'S statement was received in some quarters not only as a reply to Republican and banking opposition to the pending bill but to the Virginian, who has maintained the measure is only sponsored by Marriner S. Eccles, Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, rather than by the President.

"Title II," said Senator FLETCHER of the controversial section of the banking bill, "deals almost wholly with the creation of machinery for the effective regulation of a definite monetary policy in accordance with the campaign promises of President Roosevelt based on the Democratic platform of 1932, which advocated 'a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards' and promised to put an end to 'the indefensible expansion and contraction of credit for private profit at the expense of the public.'"

CITES ROOSEVELT'S PROMISE

Mr. FLETCHER also declared the measure was a "definite attempt" to accomplish the ends "which the President had in mind" when, on July 3, 1933, he stated to the American delegation to the London Economic Conference, and again reaffirmed on October 22 in his address to the American people in which he stated that:

"When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation."

Senator FLETCHER'S statement made categorical reply, although he did not refer to it, to an arraignment of title II in the first legislative report to be made in connection with the banking measure.

VIEW SIMILAR TO THAT OF GLASS

Without waiting for the release of the majority report of the House Banking Committee, which was sent to the printers this afternoon, the Republican members of that body made public their minority report. It asked for complete elimination of the central-bank section.

Taking a view similar to that of Senator GLASS, this report asserted:

"The present title II is not even the original title II as presented in the bill, but is almost without change an amended title II submitted by Governor Eccles after he had entirely completed his testimony before the committee.

"While the committee was assured that the first draft was the joint work of all the various financial departments of the Government, and had their joint approval, we have no assurance that title II in its amended form has received any approval except that of Governor Eccles, or has even been submitted to anyone else."

TWO SECTIONS HELD SATISFACTORY

Title I, providing for the merging of temporary F. D. I. C. funds into permanent ones and keeping the deposit insurance maximum at $5,000, and title III, making various changes in the present banking statute, including termination of double liability, were found by the minority committeement to be "in the main" satisfactory.

"But title II," their report added, "while containing some provisions of merit, is in its entirety such a radical departure from the sound principles of central banking that the evils it contains more than counteract the advantages of title I and title III."

BASIS OF MINORITY OBJECTIONS

The minority objections centered upon:

Changes in control of the Governor and Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board and the governors of the Reserve banks.

Increasing the power of the Federal Reserve Board.

"Too great liberalization" of the discounting and borrowing provisions of the Federal Reserve member banks.

CITES BANK OF ENGLAND AS EXAMPLE

The present separation of the Reserve banks from Federal control, the minority maintained, "is in accordance with the central banking practice in most of the more highly civilized countries under a democratic form of government", and cited the Bank of England as an example.

"Conversely," the report continued, "countries under close dictatorship, like Italy and Russia, have central banks entirely under government domination. One of the first and essential steps in any dictatorship is to extend power over the credit resources of the country."

To realize the full effect of the proposed changes in control of governors of the board and the Reserve banks, the committeemen asserted, "it must be remembered that the governor has always been the dominant figure on the Board, and the Board is thus made more subject to control by the Executive (the President).

FLETCHER EXPLAINS PROVISIONS

"The bill provides," said Senator FLETCHER, "that the offices of Governor and chairman of the board of directors of each Federal Reserve bank shall be combined. In their places a governor and vice governor shall be appointed annually by the board of directors, subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. The governor shall be the chief executive officer of the bank.

CALLS GOVERNORS VIRTUAL DICTATORS

"Whereas in the original Federal Reserve Act the executive head of the bank was to have been known as 'chairman of the board of directors' and at the same time act in the capacity of Federal Reserve agent; the active heads in control of purely banking operations was to function in the capacity of a bank manager, the Federal Reserve banks gave to the bank manager the high-sounding name of 'governor.'

"Since that time it has developed that the governor of each Federal Reserve bank not only has superseded the chairman and agent as the executive officer of the bank but has also become the virtual dictator of the Federal Reserve bank to the extent of practically controlling the election of directors who are presumed to be independent in the exercise of their power in the election of said 'governor.'

"The results are obvious.

"The bill merely merges the two offices and at the same time provides for the retention of all governors and chairmen—if they are qualified—and the various boards of directors elect them governor and vice governor."

REPLIES TO G. O. P. CRITICISM

Replying to the Republican charge that under the bill the Federal Reserve Board would become the open-market committee with its decisions as to the buying and selling of Government bonds "mandatory on all" of the Reserve banks, Senator FLETCHER said:

"We shall, through this act, definitely fix the responsibility for and the power to engage in open-market operations, in the Federal Reserve Board. In the future when money becomes 'easy' or money becomes 'tight' or when we are led into a period of inflation or a period of contraction and economic demoralization, we shall be able to put our finger upon the Federal open-market committee and say, 'you are responsible.'"

FORESEE DANGER TO DEPOSIT

The Federal Reserve Board, acting "perhaps by a bare majority of a bare quorum", the Republicans held, could raise or lower reserve requirements at will, and they added:

"The right to raise is the right to curtail or even stop entirely the normal banking functions of lending. The right to lower brings the possibility of endangering deposits by requiring insufficient reserves."

Replying to this, Senator FLETCHER said:

"The proposed banking act gives recognition to the fact that there is no safety to be found in arbitrary judgment or arbitrary figures with respect to the reserves of either Federal Reserve banks or of member banks. * * * England has no such arbitrary reserve requirements established by law. This country had progressively found it advisable to reduce the legal reserve requirements for even commercial banks from an arbitrary figure of 50 to 40 to 25, until they now stand at 13, 10, and 7 percent on demand deposits of commercial banks, depending upon the size of the cities in which they are located."

FLORIDA'S INTEREST IN FOREIGN TRADE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Florida Times-Union of April 20, 1935, entitled "Florida's Interest in Foreign Trade."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Florida Times-Union of Apr. 20, 1935]

FLORIDA'S INTEREST IN FOREIGN TRADE

Addressing a Jacksonville audience last week, the occasion being a luncheon given by the chamber of commerce, Dr. C. T. Murchison, of Washington, director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, told his hearers that this State was considerably interested in more than one way in the movement of goods into and out of the United States. Florida's share of foreign trade, largely consisting of exports of citrus fruits, naval stores, phosphate rock, lumber, and other commodities, was considerable and increasing. But it was also suggested that the tourist business—which annually brings many people into the State for a week, a month, or all winter—was worth a great deal, and the visitors to an extent were able to come and enjoy our climate because of the foreign trade enjoyed by their States. In other words, the tourist business, one of the greatest industries of Florida, is affected by the world trade.

"Viewing the economic life of Florida in its entirety one is impressed greatly by its dependence upon foreign trade activities", Dr. Murchison said. "This, bearing in mind, of course, the indirect as well as the direct relationships. Your own exports of citrus fruits, vegetables, phosphate, and naval stores have much to do with your prosperity, but equally important to your prosperity are the exports of other States." Declaring that the consumer demand in New York City for oranges and grapefruit is in no small manner affected by the export-import activities of that city, the people, he said, who come to Florida from Michigan area are to a very considerable extent dependent for their funds upon the export of automobiles to other countries. The number and buying powers of visitors from the Middle West depend to an extent on export of grain, etc.

That Florida should be active in the promotion of the country's foreign trade was argued by Dr. Murchison, who declared that this State would find it highly advisable to use every effort to uphold the hands of the administration in the courageous effort which it is now making to restore world trade. "Under present conditions the world over the old-fashioned procedure of promoting exports by greater sales effort has become inadequate", he said. The general lowering of tariffs was not to be depended upon; but at this time and with world conditions as they are, the movement to do away with arbitrary and artificial restrictions should be encouraged and aided.

Alluding to the exclusive bilateral commercial treaties, exchange controls, quota systems, and burdensome administrative restrictions are being attacked and the effort made to reestablish foreign trade in the world on a reasonable, proper basis. "Against the formidable barriers indicated the United States moves to secure a bargaining arrangement, made separately with each country," Dr. Murchison said. "We have already completed four such agreements with Cuba, Brazil, Belgium, and Haiti. That with Belgium will go into effect May 1 and it is expected that the others will become effective shortly. Negotiations with 13 other countries are under way, including such important nations as Canada, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, and Sweden." It is hoped to have these treaties completed within the year.

"It is to be emphasized that insofar as we succeed in lowering tariff walls we reduce the price of foreign-made commodities and so encourage larger consumption," Dr. Murchison remarked. "Other countries in their turn will be able to purchase American goods much more cheaply and in consequence consume a larger volume. The increased consumption will obviously increase the volume of production and so serve directly to alleviate the unemployment problem from which the world as a whole is suffering." Florida, is, indeed, as the Director of the Foreign and Domestic Commerce Bureau suggested, greatly interested in the effort being made to win back again the foreign trade that has been lost the past several years. Florida wants markets abroad for her products, and desires that the products of other States be accessible to the people of foreign lands.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY—KNOXVILLE CELEBRATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article from the Knoxville Journal, of Knoxville, Tenn., entitled "A Royal Salute to the T. V. A." This article quotes a resolution by the City Council of Knoxville, establishing and proclaiming the week of May 12–18, inclusive, as T. V. A. appreciation week. The article shows with what favor the city of Knoxville has received the T. V. A. development in east Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the article be published in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Knoxville Journal of Apr. 20, 1935]

CELEBRATION TO CONTINUE FOR A WEEK—ROOSEVELT, CONGRESSMEN, AND OTHER NOTABLES WILL BE INVITED TO ATTEND—ENTIRE VALLEY TO JOIN IN MAMMOTH RECEPTION—BARBECUE TO BE CLIMAX OF EFFORT TO SHOW AUTHORITY OUR APPRECIATION

Knoxville, city of prosperity and hospitality, will extend a royal salute to the Tennessee Valley Authority, favorite project of the Roosevelt new deal, in a rousing reception scheduled to begin Sunday, May 12, and to continue through the following Saturday.

Invitations will be extended to President Roosevelt, Senator Norris, Speaker of the House Byrns, Governor McAlister, and other national and State dignitaries to participate in Knoxville's most ambitious enterprise.

East Tennessee, from Georgia to the Kentucky line, will also be invited to come to Knoxville during the spectacular event and join in paying respect and homage to the Authority's far-flung achievements.

LEADERS APPROVE

Plans for the festivities were unanimously approved by prominent business men at a meeting yesterday morning at the chamber of commerce, under the chairmanship of Gen. Cary F. Spence.

Vice Mayor Spence served in place of Mayor John T. O'Connor, called to Nashville in the press of State legislative details.

"We want to express our appreciation of what the T. V. A. has done for Knoxville, and to invite the Authority to retain here as much of its organization as it possibly can", Oscar Handley, of Miller's store, said, addressing the meeting.

"We want the public to know that Knoxville is behind the T. V. A. and all its purposes.

"We want this demonstration to be so gigantic that the will of the people will have ample space to express itself."

He added that he was certain that every branch of the city's business, social, and industrial life will offer complete cooperation.

Following adoption of the motion put forward by M. G. Chambers that Mayor O'Connor appoint a committee to perfect plans for the gigantic salute and to supervise the varied activities that will be part of this program of national interest, R. H. Clagett, general manager of the Knoxville Journal, said:

"I do not think anyone possibly could be opposed to this movement to honor the T. V. A.

"It is a surprise to me that we of Knoxville have not done so sooner."

ANNUAL AFFAIR

He then made the suggestion that a celebration in honor of the T. V. A. should be made an annual affair and that the festivities to begin the week of May 12 should be a monument to the city's whole-hearted approval of the Authority's ideals and achievements.

Tentative plans discussed at the meeting yesterday call for a mammoth torchlight parade, resplendent with bands and decorated motor cars, and carried out with the thundering tread of the city's working personnel.

A barbecue of tremendous proportions is slated to be the climax of the rousing week.

The barbecue will be at Shields-Watkins field at the University of Tennessee, and will be featured by addresses by the T. V. A. directors, Dr. A. E. Morgan, Dr. H. A. Morgan, and David Lilienthal, under plans discussed yesterday.

Possibility of showing T. V. A. films and news reels touching on Authority developments was also discussed.

It was estimated that at least 10,000 would participate in the barbecue.

After the meeting, James S. Hall, of the Hall's Sons store, echoed what had already been said to the effect that Knoxvillians would cooperate in every possible way to make the T. V. A. week monumental in the city's history.

"We are all appreciative of the Authority's work and the scope of its future program", Mr. Hall said, and added:

"This celebration and salute to the T. V. A. is an excellent gesture. I am for it unreservedly, and I feel positive that the same may be said of every other person here.

"If President Roosevelt comes to Knoxville", he added, "the event will lack nothing—it will be a vital link in the history of both east Tennessee and the T. V. A."

In naming the week beginning May 12 as "T. V. A. Appreciation Week", Mayor O'Connor has issued the following proclamation:

"Whereas an act of Congress of the United States creating the Tennessee Valley Authority was approved by the President on May 18, 1933; and

"Whereas the whole Tennessee Valley, and Knoxville in particular, since that date, have enjoyed increasing benefits from the Tennessee Valley Authority's development program, and foresee even greater benefits to come in the future; and

"Whereas we in Knoxville, being close to Tennessee Valley Authority operations and in a position to visualize what T. V. A.'s efforts will mean in raising living standards and in bringing other lasting benefits here and throughout the Nation;

"I therefore, as mayor of the city of Knoxville, hereby proclaim the week of May 12 to 18, inclusive, as 'T. V. A. Appreciation Week', and I ask every citizen of Knoxville to take part in this public salute to the three T. V. A. directors and their staffs, that they may be reassured of our confidence and appreciation."

KNOXVILLE NOT ALONE

Knoxville, however, will not be alone in the parade offering a cheering salute to the Authority.

East Tennessee will have part, and social, religious, and patriotic groups here will also join the ranks of the marchers, under the proposed program.

C. M. Preston, of the Hamilton National Bank, brought up the question of generously welcoming and inviting the T. V. A. to retain its officers here following completion of Norris Dam and other nearby allied projects, and General Spence asserted that the point was well taken and said city officials would confer on this phase of the Authority's future program and plans.

The proposal to invite President Roosevelt to Knoxville as the highlight of T. V. A. appreciation week was made by Safety Director Walter Anderson.

City Judge Bob Williams said last night that the very spirit of the occasion calls for the presence of Senators BACHMAN and MCKELLAR and Representative J. WILL TAYLOR.

He further suggested that an invitation be extended to Vice President Garner, whose grandfather and father were born in nearby Anderson County.

"The T. V. A. appreciation week should stir the heart of every Knoxvillian and east Tennessean", Judge Williams declared.

"We are mindful here of the tremendous good the T. V. A. has brought in the Tennessee Valley and of the greater good that we all expect in the future", he continued.

"It is only natural and right that Knoxville as a city of enthusiastic supporters of the T. V. A., as well as the entire Tennessee Valley, where T. V. A. benefits will continue to manifest themselves as the years increase, should join in this generous and hearty tribute."

Judge Williams praised recent editorials in the Journal in which commendation was given to the suggestion of Tracy B. Augur, chief of the T. V. A. land planning and housing division, that the expansion of Knoxville be predicated on an orderly plan of suburban communities rather than on concentration of a greater population within defined city limits, and which pointed out that the Authority was not purely sectional in scope, but of an importance to the entire Nation as well.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a number of communications from leading organizations in several different States urging the passage of antilynching legislation.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ILLINOIS

THE COOK COUNTY FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS,
February 25, 1935.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Cook County Federation of Women's Clubs, an organization representing 75 clubs, has gone on record as endorsing the antilynching bill, and urge you to support the passing of this bill by the Congress of the United States at its next session.

Sincerely,

MARY E. GRICE, Secretary.

KENTUCKY

LEXINGTON, KY., February 7, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Senator from New York, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WAGNER: We, the Interdenominational Alliance of Lexington and Vicinity, wish to herewith express our deep appreciation for the wisdom and courage with which you are sponsoring the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill now before Congress, and we pledge to you our loyal support.

Respectfully yours,

INTERDENOMINATIONAL ALLIANCE OF LEXINGTON AND VICINITY.

C. H. DICKERSON,
L. RUCKER, Committee.

LOUISIANA

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

Protest emphatically implication in speech of Senator SMITH of South Carolina in Congress April 16, attacking Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Lynching is certainly not necessary for the protection of virtuous womanhood and, we believe, a crime for any cause whatever.

FLORENCE SYTZ,
Chairman Y. W. C. A. Public Affairs Committee.

NEW ORLEANS, April 17, 1935.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

Am opposed to speech of Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, made in Congress April 16, attacking Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill. Implication that lynching is necessary to protect virtuous womanhood is untrue, and I protest it for the women of the New Orleans Young Women's Christian Association.

MRS. HARRY A. THOMPSON,
President.

MICHIGAN

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,
Bay City, Mich., March 23, 1935.

The Honorable ROBERT L. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: The membership of the Young Women's Christian Association of Bay City, Mich., is deeply concerned over the lynching situation in our country and wishes to commend you for your interest and effort in promoting the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill.

We feel that all crime should come under strict legislation and that it is quite against the principles of Christian countries to allow such flagrant disregard of law.

Again thanking you, we are,

Very truly,

YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION,
Per AGNES M. LEE, Corresponding Secretary.

DETROIT, MICH., March 1, 1935.

ROBERT F. WAGNER, Senator,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We, the Detroit Inter-Church Fellowship, realize full well your past efforts to have Federal legislation enacted which will remove the bloody stains of "mobocracy" from our fair Nation.

We use this means to express our appreciation for the Wagner-Costigan bill which, we trust, will destroy forever that diabolical practice of barbarism among civilized people.

Yours for social justice and brotherhood,

THE DETROIT INTER-CHURCH FELLOWSHIP,
By T. W. ROSS.

MINNESOTA

TWIN CITY URBAN LEAGUE,
April 10, 1935.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the last regular meeting of the executive committee and board of directors of the Twin City Urban League the antilynching bill of which you are coauthor was unanimously endorsed, and we were instructed to write all Congressmen from the State of Minnesota, urging them to support the measure.

This we have done and sincerely trust that this bill will be enacted into law.

Very truly yours,

CLARENCE R. CHANEY,
President.
CHAS. W. WASHINGTON,
Executive Secretary.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

Resolution favoring the passage of a Federal antilynch law

Whereas the lynching of our citizens is a practice to be despised and deplored; and

Whereas the practice of lynching cannot be suppressed unless the Federal Government undertakes to enact laws punishing those participating in such crimes; and

Whereas there is pending in Congress an antilynch bill introduced by Senators COSTIGAN and WAGNER and Congressman FORD of California which will accomplish the results desired: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Alfred Gooding Guild, Young Peoples Religious Union of the South Church (Unitarian), respectfully urges the Congress of the United States to enact the pending bill referred to at the earliest possible date; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State, and Senators EDWARD P. COSTIGAN and ROBERT F. WAGNER and Congressman THOMAS F. FORD.

JOHN W. ANDERSON, President.
ERNESTINE L. CLEARY, Secretary.

NEW JERSEY

THE PARENT-TEACHERS ASSOCIATION OF THE JERSEY CITY STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
March 5, 1935.

Senator WAGNER,
Senate House, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WAGNER: As legislative chairman of the Jersey City State Normal Parent-Teachers Association, I have been authorized to write you expressing our approval of the antilynching bill.

We do hope that this bill will pass by a large majority.

Respectfully yours,

MRS. R. KRUGEL

NEW YORK

NEW YORK, April 17, 1935.

Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Washington, D. C.:

Imperial Lodge No. 127, of Elks of New York City, with a membership of 1,800 Negroes commend highly your support of antilynching bill, and urges you to continue the fight until Federal law makes lynching a crime at this session of Congress.

IMPERIAL LODGE NO. 127, I. B. P. O. E., OF NEW YORK CITY, JOHN A. DRIVER, Secretary.

Resolution unanimously adopted at a public meeting at the Town Hall Club, sponsored by the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, February 25, 1935

Whereas there have been over 5,000 lynchings in the United States since 1882, and 45 during the present administration; and

Whereas mob violence is a denial of the principles of American democracy, a serious menace to internal peace and a blot on American institutions: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge the passage of the Wagner-Costigan bill, which would make lynching a Federal offense; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from New York.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY OF FRIENDS,
New York City, April 11, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT WAGNER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The New York yearly meeting of the Religious Society of Friends, in session at 221 East Fifteenth Street, New York, N. Y., from fourth month eighth to eleventh, inclusive, 1935, view with great interest your bill against lynching, and we trust that this Congress will not adjourn without enactment of a law which will unite the country in an earnest endeavor to put an end to that inhumanity, which we regard as more disastrous to the perpetrators than to the victims.

Sincerely,

EDWARD CORNELL, Clerk.

WESTERN UNION STAMP CLUB,
New York City, April 15, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At its last meeting the Western Union Stamp Club, an organization of 50 members, all employees of the Western Union Telegraph Co., adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas we stamp collectors and philatelists have long felt the need for a clearer means of identifying the postage stamps of the United States; and

"Whereas identification of the same is made almost impossible by the antiquated laws now existing which permit but a small portion of each stamp to be illustrated; and

"Whereas our Canadian and English cousins enjoy full cuts of their own as well as those of the United States postage stamps, much to our disadvantage; and

"Whereas the stamp collectors and philatelists of the United States of America very materially contribute to the Treasury of our Government; and

"Whereas the United States has absolutely nothing to lose and much to gain by permitting full cuts of our stamps: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Western Union Stamp Club urge the Senator and Representative of this district to support the bill listed as

H. R. 1411, introduced into the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., by Representative MONTAGUE, of Viriginia."

Yours respectfully,

V. Y. HECHER, President.
P. C. MACKEY, Secretary.

CENTRAL CIVIC ASSOCIATION,
Hollis, N. Y., April 15, 1935.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the Central Civic Association, held under date of March 28, 1935, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill, H. R. 6514, to amend section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932; and

"Whereas this bill, as introduced by Hon. ROBERT L. BACON, provides for a 2-cent rate on first-class mail for delivery within the confines of any incorporated city and to such immediately contiguous incorporated cities as may be determined by the Postmaster General; and

"Whereas we believe that immediate action of said bill would materially increase the receipts of the Post Office Department: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, the officers and members of the Central Civic Association, in regular meeting assembled, do hereby most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States the early enactment of this legislation; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of aforesaid resolutions be transmitted to Hon. ROYAL S. COPELAND, Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER, Hon. ROBERT L. BACON, Hon. WILLIAM F. BRUNNER, Hon. STEPHEN A. RUDD, Hon. MATTHEW J. MERRITT, and the press."

J. WATSON DAVIS,
Committee on Resolutions.
LILLIAN M. HENKEL, Secretary.

Attest:

VINCENT MCLEAN, President.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., March 14, 1935.

Whereas it is freely predicted by such men as Dr. Beard, dean of historians, that the situation now existing calls for a strong domestic policy without which in times past war has speedily followed.

Whereas our Government is spending huge sums for implements of war and for war purposes; and

Whereas armaments control men, not men armaments, and it is a question of Mars or Christ, the Prince of Peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we humble followers of Him, who came to bring peace on earth and good will to men, assembled as the Fourth Quarterly Conference of the First Methodist Episcopal Church urge a strong domestic policy with a wider distribution of wealth and use of productive facilities, enactment of laws insuring to each and all a full measure of what he produces individually and to the community all that the community produces; be it further

Resolved, That we exhort our President and Congress to oppose increase in war appropriations, bring about material reductions in same, enact laws taking all profit from manufacture of munitions, and make the declarations of war possible only after a majority vote of the electorate; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators, Representatives at large, and Congressman SNELL from this State.

Secretary pro tempore.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

OMEGA PSI PHI FRATERNITY,
Washington, D. C., March 14, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
United States Senator, State of New York,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Omega Psi Phi Fraternity wishes to submit the following resolution on lynching:

"Whereas the United States of America is the only civilized country in the world where lynchings occur at frequent intervals with impunity in violation of all the tenets of Christianity, moral and civil law, and the Federal Constitution; and

"Whereas those charged with the enforcement of the laws of the several States have been notoriously lax in their duty to protect the lives of certain citizens when threatened by mob violence; and

"Whereas some of the States are a party to the crime, unable, or unwilling to bring the lynchers to justice: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the President and the Congress of these United States at this session assembled enact the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill, which will outlaw lynching and adequately protect the lives of all Americans from mobs, bent on mischief, defying all law and order and reducing our constitutional guarantee of life to a mere scrap of paper. We 4,000 loyal college men of America, do hereby beseech you in your respective positions to use your office to erase this blot from the American Nation."

We have the honor to remain,

Most respectfully yours,

OMEGA PSI PHI FRATERNITY,
LAWRENCE A. OXLEY,
Grand Basileus.
J. ARTHUR WEISEGER,
Grand Keeper of Records and Seal.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am not clear as to the statement of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair stated that the question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] to the pending bill.

Mr. MCNARY. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. May we have the amendment stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 5, after the word "lease" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the word "mortgage", and to insert the same amendment at the end of line 8.

THERE WAS ONCE A TEA PARTY IN BOSTON

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. On last Friday I asked a member of this body to give notice to the Senate that I wished to speak today on a matter of personal privilege, and he then gave that notice for me. Subsequent to that notice having been given there was a unanimous-consent agreement made on the pending bill. I should like to know, before I begin my remarks, whether I would be limited under that notice on a matter of personal privilege to the time limit specified?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator would.

Mr. LONG. I would be limited to 40 minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, the Senator would be limited to 40 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Then I will take my 30 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment at this time.

Mr. President, the newspapers have been somewhat concerned in their columns with a few remarks emanating from some Cabinet members and some near-Cabinet members relative to affairs and legislation in Louisiana. The legislature of that State has been in extraordinary session and has enacted certain laws dealing with several affairs, including public works, in the State. While the legislature was in the course of its deliberations it received some instructions from Washington delivered in various and sundry manners. One was from the Relief Administrator that he had taken steps in some lines to see that certain things were done and others not done.

Another was a series of ultimatums from the Secretary of the Interior telling of dire distress and calamity which was to be visited on the State if it did not harken unto his wise sayings and salubrious imaginatings.

Following that we were informed through the columns of the public press that the Secretary of the Interior had made some visits to the White House and had come back and grown almost profane in reiterating the several warnings to that State.

Our State has withstood a good many scourges and it has helped others through their distress. It has had the flood and knows what it is to fight the waters of Noah. It has even become a recipient of the dust of the West and has begun a battle against that calamity. There have been various and sundry invasions from within and without which our people have either experienced or of which they have read. But this is a new event in our lives, wherein, unlike the locust which threatens us every 7 years, we are threatened with eternal damnation in Louisiana if the State remains a sovereignty.

The objective taken by the gentleman from Washington, the gentleman who never has been elected to anything, is something I wish to discuss. We are not making any particular argument about these gentlemen who are anointed and appointed. They have a peculiar status in this third year of our reigning empire of St. Vitus. They have a peculiar status. They are entitled to be embellished for the future history of the country. Their royal prerogatives have never yet been prescribed as they might be some day. I might refer to some of their titles in the order of their respective importance:

For instance, number 1, the prime minister, James Aloysius Farley, the Nabob of New York.

Number 2, the lord high chamberlain, Harold Ickes, the chinch bug of Chicago.

Number 3, the expired and lamented royal block, Hugh Sitting Bull Johnson, who has now described himself as the new oo-la-la of Oklahoma.

The honorable lord destroyer, Hugh Almighty Wallace, the ignoramus of Iowa; and then there are various and sundry other lesser lights whose royal prerogatives are not so well understood, but, of course, in the changing events of the day are likely to be given a better status as times may make it appear necessary.

To revert now to what has been said about Louisiana's legislature, a number of years ago Louisiana undertook to build some highways and some roads and some bridges. Louisiana was faced with this condition. There had been an administration which had continued in Louisiana almost without interruption for more than 20 years, probably for 30 years. It had begun under the Fosters and had continued under the Sanders.

We went into the Governor's office of Louisiana in 1928, not with the full State administration, but with pretty nearly the full administration. The State of Louisiana was bonded for $61,000,000 for modern highways. The State of Louisiana had 26 miles of highways which were recognized as first-class roads.

This element which had put our State in distress urged to the people of Louisiana that they did not dare to vote another bond issue in that State for the reason that inasmuch as they, when in power, had squandered and misused the money it was only natural that whoever succeeded them would similarly squander and misuse the money. As I shall show in a moment, that element which plead guilty to having squandered the money above the $60,000,000 limit is the element which is now in control of Federal expenditures in Louisiana. I shall name them by name and by title in a few moments.

The State of Louisiana, therefore, in the beginning of 1928 saw for itself the necessity of the criticisms which had been leveled against the conduct of those who had preceded in power should not be repeated following the year 1928, and, therefore, on the urgent demand of the banks of that State, on the urgent demand of the newspapers of that State, on the urgent demand of the chambers of commerce of that State and of various other civic bodies, the State of Louisiana undertook a road-building and public-construction program safeguarded by a board which should prevent the squandering of funds in that State whether they were raised by State appropriation or whether they were contributed by the Federal Government.

Who joined in that request? That was a request concurred in by the Federal Bureau of Good Roads in Washington. It was applauded by the bodies corporate serving under the Federal Government in Washington and in Louisiana. It was applauded by every Long and anti-Long board in the State, so much so that it was said that if Louisiana would take the lead and write into the organic law of that State a proviso that the board should not only be informal but should be a legal and constitutional body, that forever and a day would an example be set guaranteeing the proper expenditure of public funds.

I was the Governor of the State. I took them at their word, and so in the year 1928, after having proclaimed through a proclamation adopted by the board of liquidation of Louisiana, I followed in the year 1930 recommending to the Legislature of Louisiana that it submit to the people of the State a constitutional amendment. There was adopted a constitutional amendment which is now a part of the organic law of Louisiana. It created a State advisory board composed of 7 elected public officials, of 1 official elected by the police jurists, who are the parish or county governing boards, and of 11 public-spirited business men, bankers, merchants, civic officers, who did not care to engage in politics. They insisted that the elective officers who were willing to go into politics should be a minority of the board, but that a majority of the board should be of the banker-business man type who would not be concerned in politics, but who would be concerned only in the propriety of public expenditures for the welfare and uplift of the State.

I now read to you the composition of that board:

There is hereby created a State advisory board composed of 19 members, to wit: The Governor, Lieutenant Governor, speaker of the house of representatives, secretary of state, State auditor, the attorney general, and president of the Police Jurists Association of Louisiana, and of 11 other members, to wit:

1. John Legier, of Orleans Parish.
2. E. R. Berstein, of Caddo Parish.
3. Sam Polmer, of Terrebonne Parish.
4. W. D. Hill, of Rapides Parish.
5. P. M. Atkins, of Ouachita Parish.
6. Charles O. Noble, of Calcasieu Parish.
7. P. M. Milner, of St. Tammany Parish.
8. J. D. O'Keefe, of Orleans Parish.
9. William Pfaff, of Orleans Parish.
10. Alfred D. Danziger, of Orleans Parish.
11. Charles H. Hamilton, of Orleans Parish.

What is the membership of that advisory board?

Charles H. Hamilton was the president of the Association of Commerce, an avowed anti-Long body of that State.

Aldred D. Danziger was the president of the Young Men's Business Club in that State.

William Pfaff was the president of the motor league of that State.

J. D. O'Keefe was the Republican president of the biggest national bank in that State, and still is.

P. M. Milner was a prominent officer of the Free Bridge Association of Louisiana.

Charles O. Noble was a capitalist and a banker and an oil operator from Lake Charles, La.

P. M. Atkins was the wealthiest man of northeast Louisiana, a wholesale hardware merchant and a banker.

W. D. Hill was a banker from the central part of the State.

Sam Polmer was the biggest wholesale merchant in the congressional district known as the "cane section of Louisiana."

E. R. Bernstein was the former mayor of Shreveport, La., a capitalist and a man of high repute.

John Legier was president of the American Bank & Trust Co., of Shreveport.

That is the committee voted by the people of Louisiana in order that these newspapers and these civic bodies should have it said to the United States public boards of Washington and elsewhere that not a dime of public expenditures in Louisiana would be made unless it was taken from every avenue of fraud, politics, and corruption.

What happened? That board operated. They built paved roads in Louisiana on the most difficult soil, for the lowest cost, of the highest type and strength of construction of any public roads to be found in the United States today. Notwithstanding the numerous bridges, the cost of public roads in Louisiana—paved concrete highways, rights-of-way, and everything else taken into cost—was less than $26,000 a mile, a low cost never equaled by any other State in the United States since they have been building public highways. No one will challenge that statement.

Now the Federal Government inform us that they are going to spend some money; that they are going to load down on the various boards of Louisiana several million dollars; that they are going to give to a city government several millions, and to another government several hundred thousand dollars, and to another board several million dollars; and what else do they do? They call into Washington the element that spent the $61,000,000 and built no roads; they call into Washington the most rebuked, repudiated, conscienceless characters known to either the public or the private life of Louisiana or any other State; the men who built the toll bridge to kill the free bridge; the men who squandered the $61,000,000 and said, "Don't spend any more millions, because our successors are only expected to do as we have done." They call in the operators of the coffin clubs, the swindlers who have defamed the State with the worthless and fictitious stocks that they have sold from the Atlantic to the Pacific. They call in that gang of brigands, and then say to them, "You are invested with the authority of expending the hundreds of millions in Louisiana and you are invested with the authority of bonding and mortgaging the communities of Louisiana for the repayment of this money that you are going to be allowed to spend and over which you are to be given control."

Whom did they call in? They called in J. Y. Sanders, the man who was the head of that organization for 20 years; and the day I took the oath of office as Governor of Louisiana, on May 21, 1928, they flashed in my face a report of the auditor of Louisiana that at the end of the first year of my term as Governor, if I did not spend another cent for the highway commission we would owe only $5,000,000 more dollars than the total revenue of that year would amount to. They flashed in my face the day I took the oath of office a contract that this man had caused the highway commission to sign by which a farmer with three children could not cross a bridge coming into New Orleans and going out of New Orleans without paying $8.40 in toll charges to cross that bridge. They flashed into my face the parishes of the State bonded with debts that they could not pay, praying for relief because the people could not support their schools or educate the youth of the land and continue to pay the amortized bonds and accruing interest that Sandersism and Sullivanism had left to the State of Louisiana. So we assumed that burden, and with it saddled on our shoulders Louisiana undertook, under the most difficult of circumstances, to restore that State from the pillage and mire of corruption and rottenness and debauchery that is not even denied by a single newspaper in the State of Louisiana today, but which has been asserted as a matter of accepted and undisputed fact for more than 10 years, to my certain knowledge.

So we have gone ahead. We assumed $41,000,000 of extra bonds beyond the others I have mentioned that they loaded onto the port of New Orleans, $41,000,000 more than the $61,000,000. They did not have any revenue behind those bonds, and we had to vote an additional tax to protect the credit of Louisiana in order to pay $41,000,000 of port bonds issued under the authority of this continued reign of scandal and corruption that Louisiana had to bear.

Now the State of Louisiana has a chance of life. So we went out, Mr. President, and we provided in Louisiana to relieve those parishes and those subdivisions of the State of some of these debts, bonds, and obligations with which they had been left under this regime of corruption and rottenness, known to the present President of the United States. I say "known to him" because he has talked with me about it in days past. We went out to relieve that State of an overburdened hundreds of millions of dollars in debts for ports and roads that they did not build and do not pretend ever to have built. We went out to put revenues behind those obligations. We went out to restore the credit of the State, to provide education where it had never been. We went out under the curse of 20 to 30 years of prostituted government, known to the present President of the United States, whose agencies are now trying to reinstate those responsible in the State of Louisiana. I say "known to him", not to Ickes, not to Wallace, not only to James Aloysius Farley, but to the present President of the United States lies the knowledge, lies the intent, lies the desire and the demand that corruption, rottenness, and political prostitution of the lowest debauched order ever known in any uncivilized or civilized country shall be reinflicted upon a State. They do not mean me.

Now, what have they done? They have called in a relief administrator. The public press is filled from morning to night with reports that Mr. Harry Hopkins has taken away the relief administration from the Long forces in Louisiana. I wonder how long it is going to take that bunch to get that administration away from the Long folks. Here is a news report of the Washington Herald of October 20, 1933. That is nearly 2 years ago, a year and a half ago; and it says here:

LONG SNUBBED IN RELIEF WORK

Recent appointment of Harry J. Early, of New York, to be State director of unemployment relief in Louisiana yesterday brought up with renewed emphasis the Roosevelt administration's hostility to the Long political machine in that State.

Harry L. Hopkins, Federal Relief Administrator, it was explained, sent Early to Louisiana to take charge of relief on finding what his office described yesterday as deplorable conditions in Louisiana.

And so forth. I will let that appear at the conclusion of my remarks.

So Mr. Early was sent to Louisiana, and became the Federal administrator on October 5; but when they were telling you how the Long administration had been "snubbed", they did not tell you that the Long administration never did have that relief in Louisiana. Bless your soul, when Hoover started it, he let the Governors of 47 States name their administrations, but I always have been in bad with the President. I was in bad with Hoover, just as bad as I am with this one we have now. It did not make any difference. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to say a word to guests of the Senate who are in the galleries.

When several hundred are speaking, even in a low tone, a noise is created on the floor of the Senate which interferes with the debate, and also with our guests who desire to hear the debate. The occupants of the galleries have no right to do anything or say anything that disturbs the Senate. The present occupant of the chair on one occasion has found it necessary to clear the galleries; and he states again that if order cannot be preserved in the galleries, they will again be cleared.

Mr. LONG. When Mr. Hoover set up the relief work, I was called in by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and I was handed a list of names that the Governor of Louisiana had to appoint on the relief work in Louisiana if Louisiana was to have any relief work.

No. 1 was Mr. Charles A. Stair, the manager of the telephone company in Louisiana. I do not think anybody will claim that he was a Long man.

No. 2 was a young man named Smallpage, who was the financial secretary of the Electric Bond & Share Co. in Louisiana; so I think you will hardly attribute him as being a Long man.

No. 3 was Mr. W. B. Thompson, an anti-Long wholesale merchant in Alexandria, La.

I think out of about 11 names they allowed me to suggest that it might be a good thing if they had just one Long man on the board, so that everybody would know we were taking no offense; and I believe they put one or two of our friends on it just to make it look good. Of course, he was not supposed to attend any meetings, or anything of that kind, but his name was in there. Now, after they have had this anti-Long administration for many years, lo and behold, we are suddenly told that they have to send a man from New York by the name of Early because of rampant corruption that has been found to exist in this board that we had nothing to do with naming, and nothing to do with running. So they sent Mr. Early from New York to Louisiana. He served for a certain period of time, and now we hear from the articles coming from Hopkins and Mr. Ickes and Mr. Roosevelt that they have found terrible corruption in Louisiana again; that their second selection has been found incompetent; and they have, therefore, appointed another one to take it out of our hands.

They always had it out of our hands. They always had it "politicalized." They always used it against us, and they can use it against us again. But they will find out in January how much good it does them when they count the votes there the next time. It will do them nearly about as much good as it did in the month of September, not quite as much, because the boys were expecting more that time. But it will not do them any more good, I am certain.

They have appointed Mr. Frank Peterman. Who is Frank Peterman? He is a man I elected to the State senate. He is the man I named president pro tempore of the senate. He is the man who issued so many checks and so many drafts upon everybody who was in the employ of the State administration that I had to make him resign as president pro tempore of the senate. He got to sending in checks and drafts so thick, and clubbing the members of the State administration to pay those drafts, that we had to make him retire as president pro tempore of the Senate, after he sent draft after draft after draft. He sent three drafts on one member of the highway commission within 30 days for $75 apiece, beginning in the month of December and winding up in the month of January 1932. So this gentleman, who was formely an attorney, and still is the lawyer for the Texas & Pacific Railroad and the power companies; this gentleman, who could not even be satisfied with the money that he was getting from them, but was sending draft after draft and making us pay his drafts down there day and night, who was holding up State officials for money under the threat that, being president pro tempore of the senate, he was likely to visit some dire disaster on them if they did not pay the drafts and give him the money—this gentleman who finally had to be removed, who was made to go in and tender his own resignation as president pro tempore of the Senate in order to keep from being exposed, and who went in and tendered his resignation as president pro tempore of the Senate—this man has been picked as the relief administrator, to do away with politics down in Louisiana. They propose to start that burglarizing on us again. That is number 1.

Number 2. They set up as a board of the P. W. A. down there a gentleman by the name of Edward Rightor, and they said he was an ally of Sullivan, who was connected with the wire service and gambling institutions, and they wanted to send to the highway commission a gentleman by the name of Orloff Henry, saying that he would have to be named on any highway construction job that the State of Louisiana had. Right off the bat they began sending out word to this materialman to raise the price "or you will not get the job", to "raise your price, and you will get the job."

We served notice on them that the public roads and highways of the State of Louisiana will be under the jurisdiction of the Louisiana Highway Commission, and the Bureau of Public Roads in Washington, D. C., and the State advisory board, and they will be under no other authority, and no realm of corruption and rottenness can be saddled upon Louisiana in exchange for giving us that fund.

If we have to surrender the sovereignty of the State of Louisiana, we will surrender it into hands that are not reeking with confessions of such fraud and graft and corruption as that gang has acknowledged. They cannot come down there and have the State of Louisiana confess itself into that kind of a situation. So we passed a law.

Last year we said to these communities and boards and departments of Louisiana, "We will take up these bonds you are having to pay. We will assume them as a matter of State obligation, in part, and we will impose taxes and pay this bill." So we levied a tax on the corporations, we levied a tax on the refineries, we levied an income tax, and we devoted the proceeds of all those taxes to paying off, as far as possible, the bonds which had been levied upon those people during the last 30 years, when we had nothing to do with levying them or spending the money.

Just as we got those bonds arranged and the taxes levied and we had to go through a civil war to make the taxes stick to pay off the bonds—lo and behold, they send word that they are going to put all these boards and municipalities in debt again, and allow the money to be squandered.

What have we done, therefore? We have taken the radical step of requiring that expenditures of these funds shall be approved by the State advisory board of Louisiana. We have simply said to Mr. Ickes, and to Mr. Hopkins, and to Mr. Roosevelt, "If you want to lend any money to any board of that State to build a public project, we want to be satisfied, first, that the community needs the project; and we want to be satisfied, second, that the money will not be squandered, as the last money sent to the State was squandered."

I have the proof here in my hand to show how the money has been squandered in the past. We say to them, "If it has been a good thing to have the State advisory board in the past, it will be a good thing in the future; but if you expect the public boards and bodies of Louisiana to be reloaded with obligations of which we have relieved them during the past year, obligations for which primarily and ultimately the State of Louisiana must stand responsible, then you ought not to allow that money to be spent, or misspent, or squandered, unless the State advisory board, nonpolitical, nonsectarian, is allowed to pass on the necessity and the regularity of the expenditures."

Is there any necessity for that? I hold here in my hand a report submitted for the commission council of New Orleans. I have not time to read it, but it is a report in which a public official of the city of New Orleans says:

> We had a political campaign in the month of January 1933. The C. W. A. board took our entire pay roll and paid its standing, regular wages that we have had to pay, and thereupon we took the regular wages, for which we were collecting taxes, and bought votes throughout the city of New Orleans in the month of January.

I have it here, in their public report, which cannot in effect be read in any other way. And now they want to take $100,000,000 and spend it in the same way. It is bad enough to have it spent that way, but then to leave them to have to pay it after the money has been squandered for politics and elections of that kind is worse!

They might go down there and spend the whole $5,000,000,000, but they could not win the election. They could, however, load us with $5,000,000,000 of debt which we would have to pay, for the payment of which they have mortgaged those communities as a result of carrying on their politics.

Mr. President, how much more time have I?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 6 minutes left.

Mr. LONG. I am sorry I have not more time. I certainly would like to complete my statement of this case. I will not have the time, however.

Let me show the Senate the type of men to whom I am referring. I hold in my hand a little charter, the charter of a "tombstone and coffin club", operating in the State of Louisiana. They issue a man a policy of insurance, and on the face of that policy it reads, "$500." This is an old skin-game society, which, when a man dies, sends his family a check for $10, and tells them they have a clause in the policy providing that if he dies from such and such a thing they divide it by two, and if he dies from something else they divide it by six, and if he dies from something else they divide it by twenty-some odd, or more than that.

They called in the little, crooked operator of this little, crooked society, which we had to put out of business by State law, and I have the evidence in my hand for that statement, which Senators can read if they desire. They called in this little man, and he began summoning the people from south Louisiana, telling them millions of dollars of public funds were going to be placed in the hands of this swindler for disbursement. They are going to load down the municipalities and corporations of the State with debt, and then call upon the Long administration to pay the debts, as they did the last time.

They are not worried. They get all the money they want from the United States Government. They spend it in their filthy politics, and in the rotten debauchery from which we have relieved the State, and leave us to pay it back.

Mr. President, that is known to the President of the United States, I reassert. They get the funds under this Washington administration, load our State government down with debt, spend the money for rotten politics, and then they ride off and say, "That is the result of the debauchery that has been inflicted on Louisiana as the result of Huey Long's administration."

Everything they have been able to spend and inflict in all of their scourges of the past they say are due to the politics of HUEY LONG in Louisiana, notwithstanding the fact they have had two boards already, and that they were appointed from the ranks of the opposition. Now they have sent down a third, because the others were not quite low down enough for the crooked debauchery they have found necessary for the politics of the coming January.

We have passed a law providing that no municipality shall bond itself without the consent of the State, and that none of these funds for which they have issued bonds shall be spent unless they have received a cursory review and a proper examination on the part of the State advisory board. The law was enacted to take care of such things as this. That is our whole program. Who is going to be injured?

Mr. Ickes said: "Oh, no; we will not lend this money to a municipality which has anything to do with the State." Well, how is the municipality incorporated? From what does the municipality derive its right to borrow money? It derives its authority for its existence, it derives the authority for its maintenance and operation, from the State. But the pronouncement from Washington issued by the President of the United States, through his lord high chamberlain, Harold L. Ickes, is that the State of Louisiana must not dare to say to its own creature, "There shall be propriety, honesty, and regularity in the expenditure of this money." That is the ultimatum. The sovereignty of the State shall be no more. A new "Boston tea party" has been declared. The new President of the United States has set up a "Boston tea party" of his own by which he will reach into the sovereign States of this Union, 48 in number, and he will draw out the tax resources from those 48 States, and then he will withhold from those 48 States their proportion of the funds we have appropriated if they insist upon exercising the right of a State. It is a new kind of a "Boston tea party" that has been decreed by the President of the United States, in which he says to Louisiana, "Yield in this instance to the corruption and the debauchery from which you have freed yourself." "Yield", says he, "to Sanderism." "Yield", says he, "to this squandering set that afflicted Louisiana with a curse worse than the yellow fever, worse than a flood." "Yield", says he, "to this rampant state of debauchery, to prostitution, to utter degradation." "Yield", says he; "surrender your sovereign right to supervise that for which you will be held a debtor, in order that our program may be carried on as a new kind of a 'Boston tea party.'" The State must not only be taxed without its consent, but the State must allow the money to be spent only by surrendering its sovereign right.

There may be a new kind of "Boston tea party" Mr. Roosevelt is creating, but that "Boston tea party" can work two ways. Do not forget that! This "Boston tea party" can work two ways. When you strip the States of this Union of their sovereignty to supervise what afterward they are to be held for, they can strip themselves of the sovereignty of becoming debtors for taxes. Strip them of the sovereignty in one way and they will strip themselves of the sovereignty in another way. You have to go into those States to collect your taxes just as you have to go there to spend them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Louisiana on the bill and on the amendment has expired.

THE TWO FORCES EVER CONTENDING FOR SUPREMACY

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, since that lawless day—June 16, 1933—when Congress forgot the Constitution which the Members had sworn to uphold and when a rubber-stamp majority surrendered its legislative power to the White House and passed the act to legalize monopoly and crush independent industry, this country has been visited by the greatest flood of economic disasters in its history.

Since July 1933, when the first N. R. A. codes were proclaimed, the industrial production of the United States—which is the chief source of employment and likewise the main source of taxation to support all government—has been reduced in most industries by 25 percent.

Since that July 1933 the army of unemployed has grown to upward of 11,000,000, or to one-half the total of the unemployed for all the industrial nations of the world.

Since that abhorrent day the number of persons carried on Federal relief rolls have swelled to 23,000,000, one-fifth of our population and the greatest public-dole roster in world history.

Since that July 1933 the accumulated deficits of the Treasury, which is the scoreboard of the country's financial failure and shame, have piled the public debt by billions above the World War peak, until the interest burden thereon exceeds our Federal revenues from income taxes.

The homes of the country have been robbed by the extortionate trust prices of legalized monopoly.

The workers have been robbed by trust prices on the cost of living. Thus their real wages have been reduced by code price fixing, while their jobs have been reduced in two ways: First, by wiping out the small industries, and, second, by reducing production and employment to boost the price.

The farms of the United States have been doubly afflicted by the codes of the N. R. A.: First, the forced reduction of industrial production has cut down the home-market demand for everything the farmer raised; second, the price has been increased for everything the farmer bought.

The revenue of the railway freight carriers have been reduced by the fallen tonnage of industrial production and the declining volume of interstate commerce, until scores of formerly prosperous railways are now reduced to the disastrous extremity of either Government ownership or bankruptcy.

The banks, which, because of depressed industrial production, have been compelled to reduce their industrial loans by over $3,000,000,000 since 1932, are in the same slough of despond as are the industries and utilities, and are faced with Government ownership or bankruptcy. In face of this comes the President's "must" of title II of the pending banking bill. If this political centralization is passed the President becomes the financial dictator of the country and can make or break any banking institution at his own sweet will.

The volume of industrial, financial, railway, and utility shares of common stocks marketed in 1934—the second year of the new deal—fell to one-half the sales of 1933 and 100,000,000 shares less than in 1932.

The only glimmer of hope of relief from this 2-year orgy of disaster—the only bright ray of national industrial recovery—is the knowledge that the N. R. A., by the terms of the act itself, expires on June 16, 1935.

There is only one possible disaster that can stay that glad omen of general public relief, and that is the failure of the Members of the Senate to support their oaths to uphold the Constitution.

Why should any Member of the Senate desire to arrest the due processes of Nature, defy public opinion, and disappoint his constituents, fly in the face of the Constitution, indeed, ignore even the terms of the N. R. A. Act? Why not give the people of the United States another breath of hope, as when the Senate voted down the President's ambition for our adherence to the League of Nations by way of the World Court?

If we are here to represent the will and desires of our constituents—the home owners and the workmen who have been harassed by this squawking and felonious foreign-bred "Blue Eagle", the farmers who have lost sales by reduced industrial production and have paid monopoly prices, the shops and mills which have been strangled in a supposed free country—we shall not be particeps criminis to the extension of the life of this ill-omened bird of prey.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], one of the ablest spokesmen on the majority side of the Senate aisle, told the Senate on April 2:

> The N. R. A. is the greatest prop ever put under the trusts of America. Every Senator in this Chamber knows that to be so.

And no Senator has denied that statement. Are we here to prop the trusts? Is that the purpose for which we were elected?

The Democratic national platform carried this pledge:

> Strict and impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices.

What will be Senators' answer to the folks at home on that pledge? Will the answer be:

I forgot you and the Democratic platform, but I will never do it again. I did all I could to suspend the antitrust laws and extend that suspension and legalize monopoly and unfair trade practices because the President told me to.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] further declared:

Every policy of the N. R. A. is a policy to increase the cost of manufactured commodities.

There are 125,000,000 consumers of manufactured goods in the United States, or an average of over a million consumers to each Senator. Will any Senator tell those million constituents of his, who voted for him on the pledge to enforce the antitrust laws against monopoly, that his vote was cast to destroy the antitrust laws and prolong the life of the N. R. A., whose every policy is to increase the cost of manufactured goods consumed by them?

The eloquent Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] further remarked, in his exposure of the N. R. A., that by extending this act—

We not only make recovery of the country impossible, but in the succeeding election we will make the recovery of the Democratic Party absolutely null and void.

For over a generation the national platforms of all the political parties have pledged the people for the enactment and enforcement of antitrust laws against monopoly. Few Members have been elected to this Chamber in the past 40 years who have not pledged their constituents to legislate against monopoly and in favor of strict enforcement of antitrust laws to prevent monopoly.

What are pledges worth? What are speeches worth? What are the platforms worth on which we swear to stand? What are the public records of the United States Senate worth if we turn traitor to the pledges of 40 years and admit that we have been elected year after year by false pretenses?

Are we to admit and confess by our votes for the N. R. A. that our particular business is to secure public office by false pretense? Are we here not as representatives of our people, but as obedient props of the international trusts which exploit our people?

Are we here not as independent and responsible delegates of sovereign States, but as dependent and irresponsible mercenaries of federalized monopoly?

To obtain our senatorial seats we have sworn to uphold the Constitution, which in article IV guarantees to every State a republican form of government. Are we now to abdicate from our sworn allegiance to our respective States, shift our allegiance, and vote for an N. R. A. which guarantees to every trust an autocratic form of government? Shall we substitute the united trusts for the United States?

The crimes and misdemeanors of the N. R. A. and the 731 codes of unfair monopoly, the rules and regulations, under the authority given the President, which are as binding as if they were law, run into 75 bound volumes. In addition there are 5,000 more such rules which were meant to be as binding as laws passed by Congress. In this new-deal library its Blackstone would be that now commentary by Gen. Hugh S. Johnson bearing the illuminating title, "The Blue Eagle from Egg to Earth."

All the ideas of all the petty bureaucrats have been incorporated into such laws and from one end of the country to the other have sent free American citizens to jail under some hasty, ill-considered rule, the guilding object of which is to demoralize, intimidate, and punish any who dares to operate his business as it has been operated for a century and a half without the consent of some petty minion of the great smiling tyrant. And yet the Constitution guarantees that our Government is a Government of law, not of petty men.

During the entire years of this administration the people have been hounded, broken in business, sent to jail by whims and fancies of thousands of fascistic- or communistic-minded tyrants who scheme the destruction of the Republic, not its recovery. Washington and the country today swarm with secret spies, out-Russianing Russia, who report anyone and everyone who dares to breathe a thought against this administration and find in its star chambers ways and means to quiet anyone who dares speak out for the preservation of his country.

The criminal career of the N. R. A. began in its conception. The United States Supreme Court, in its recent decision in the petroleum code case, has shown that the codes were conceived by an unconstitutional delegation of the legislative powers of Congress to the Executive. Thus the Blue Eagle was born in unlawful wedlock. It was conceived by violation of the fundamental law of the land.

Moreover, it was born for a criminal purpose. Its fundamental aim was not only to suspend the antitrust laws but to break down the common law of the courts of the English-speaking race—the common law against monopoly—the common law which Washington and Jefferson, which John Marshall and the Supreme Court had recognized from the birth of this Republic down through a thousand decisions of American courts.

That the practices of the N. R. A. are criminal, are tacitly admitted even by the Department of Justice, when it refuses to test these illegal practices by appeal to the Supreme Court after the lower court has denounced their validity.

That these criminal practices cannot be administered under the law of the land is admitted by the administrators thereof—as shown by the resignations of Administrators Johnson and Williams, as further shown by wholesale resignations of bureau chief and board members, and even now is tacitly admitted by Richberg, the last administration experiment.

Richberg came before the Senate Finance Committee, on the first day, with an admission that about 18 codes were rotten. And on the second day, he admitted that of the total 731 only 171 should be retained, thereby admitting that 560, or nearly 80 percent of the whole number, were indefensible, and therefore null and void in principle and practice.

In other words, the N. R. A. administrator finds that 171 trusts still find the codes and their monopoly heads useful in exploiting the American people in violation both of the antitrust laws and the common law against monopoly.

Meantime, General Johnson's textbook of the N. R. A.—"The Blue Eagle from Egg to Earth"—finds that the whole N. R. A. system is "dead as a dodo", and that the third administrator, Richberg, has "ants in his pants."

Are Members of the Senate so anxious to be classed by history with Richberg and the trusts, so eager to be bitten by the ants of the N. R. A., that they propose to enroll themselves as nursemaids and internes in the attempted rebirth of the N. R. A.?

Do they wish to be listed as midwives and quack doctors for an attempted Caesarian operation upon the Constitution in order to bring forth a second puny brood of unlawful codes of N. I. R. A.?

That is what we are asked to do. It is an insult to our intelligence, but we cannot escape the responsibility for our action. We have the privilege of sitting down with Richberg, who admitted, when cornered, that the actions of the N. R. A. were unlawful, but who insists on retaining his regal power through the extension of N. R. A., despite his own admission. What respect will he have for our integrity if we, through our votes, perpetuate this unlawful monster?

The crimes and misdemeanors of the N. R. A. begin with the violation of articles I, IV, and VI of the Constitution. They continue by violation of the constitutions of the 48 States, and by violation of the common law against monopoly. Their final career is the violation of the N. R. A. Act itself—which restricts the administration to interstate and foreign commerce only, and prohibits the use of the codes for the ends of monopoly—which is the prime and chief use of the 731 unlawful codes.

Every one of these codes is based upon an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power to the Executive. When Chief Justice Hughes read the indictment of the petroleum code he pronounced the death-knell of the 731 codes—all resting upon unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

These codes not only assume unlawful legislative power, but they are unlawful assumptions of judicial powers. They assume that the N. R. A. administration is both the legislative body, the judge, and the jury. They assume to overthrow the entire American system of government by the people.

The climax of this licentious assumption of autocratic power is reached when members of the Cabinet and bureau chiefs seek to give the N. R. A. the powers of a corporation having " perpetual existence " by organizing six Federal corporations in Delaware—all proposing to take over the powers of the N. R. A. and expand those powers to a system of Government ownership and operation of industrial and utility plants, with all the powers of the Soviet general council in Moscow.

The first of these Delaware holding companies, of which Secretaries Wallace and Morgenthau are controlling board members, incorporated October 16, 1933, is based upon—

2. The National Industrial Recovery Act, approved June 16, 1933.

This Delaware corporation then proceeds to expand the powers of the N. R. A. to include the following:

(d) To engage in any activity in connection with or involving the production, carrying, shipping, storing, exporting, warehousing, handling, preparing, manufacturing, processing, and marketing of agricultural and/or other commodities and/or products thereof.

There is only one way to put an end to this Soviet plan incorporated in Delaware, and that is to bury every vestige of the N. R. A., the basic foundation of this corporation, on June 16, 1935, as provided by the act itself. Otherwise, if we permit Richberg and the President to have their way and extend the act, there is nothing to prevent the financing of this Delaware project from the four billion allocation.

Take, again, the Delaware corporation incorporated by Ickes and Kohn October 27, 1933, which likewise creates a corporation having " perpetual existence " by expanding the powers of the " National Industrial Recovery Act (Public Act No. 67 of the 73d Cong.)", as provided in article (1) thereof, until the powers of the N. R. A. include:

(4) To manufacture, buy, sell, and in any other manner to acquire or dispose of, and generally deal in, building materials and other products of every kind, nature, or description, including without limitation iron, steel, granite, stone, brick, cement, wood, paper, and plaster.

These Delaware articles of incorporation bear the notation, " Do not publish." The undoubted design is concealment of the premeditated crime and purpose. What use is to be made of the $5,000,000,000 appropriated in one sum " subject to the allocation of the Executive "? Does anybody know? Does not the use of this unprecedented fund—two billion greater than the total annual revenues of the Government—come under the same blanket of concealment?

There is just one sure way of blocking the use of this $5,000,000,000 appropriation for carrying out the incorporated ends of these Delaware corporations incorporated by Cabinet and bureau chiefs, and that is to bury N. I. R. A., the basic act on which these Delaware corporations rest.

He who seeks to prolong the life of N. I. R. A. becomes particeps criminis to the attempt by these Delaware charters to convert the United States of America into another Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, such as Russia has in Moscow.

Shall we substitute the N. R. A. of the new deal for the Constitution and Bill of Rights? Shall we give the service of our votes to tear down the America of Washington and Jefferson, and plant on the ruins the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of Stalin and communism?

Will the United States attempt to perpetuate the unfair codes of monopoly by extending the life of the codes under Delaware charters of " perpetual existence " and the thinly veiled hypocrisy of " codes of fair competition ", which all men know to have been drafted in behalf of the trusts, by the trusts, for the trusts, under suspension of the antitrust laws?

If that is the program of the majority, then let it beware the fate declared by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who warns his party that—

In the succeeding election we will make the recovery of the Democratic Party absolutely null and void.

The Senator from Maryland is not a lone voice from the Democratic side, because when this unlawful act was passed there were 13 other Democrats who cast their votes against with his, and no doubt the practical demonstration of the muss the N. R. A. has gotten the Democratic Party into will produce other wise Senators who sometimes change their minds and will have the courage to stand by that change despite the coercion of our smiling President.

Why did a sound Democrat like the former Senator, Jim Reed, and the former Secretary of State, Bainbridge Colby, and the former Democratic candidate for the Presidency, John W. Davis, inveigh against this outrageous crime upon our Republic? Every patriotic, sound Democrat throughout the country has thumbs down upon extending the life of this tyrannical monster. Backing that decision, regardless of party, are 90 out of every 100 voters, whether farmers or wage earners, producers or consumers, business men or housewives in the United States, and if the people were still the sovereign power of this country the N. R. A. never would have been and surely would be destined to die its natural death. It never could have passed this Senate in the first place had not its period of duration been stated. Are we for the perpetuity of America and American freedom, or for the Tammany Hall and Wall Street regime of subsidized monopoly—the underworld racket of the N. R. A.?

Has the Senate majority reached that stage of its existence when, despite its pledges of 40 years and all its platforms, it will follow the Blue Eagle from egg to earth? It is a choice between the funeral of the Blue Eagle on June 16, 1935, pursuant to law, or the funeral of the Republic through violation of the law.

Will they follow the commands of the code profiteers to give charters of " perpetual existence " to the 171 king trusts, or heed the prayers of the 125,000,000 who cry, " From the crimes of the N. R. A., good Lord, deliver us "?

The only reason the President wants to extend the N. R. A. is to hold the power it gives him, the political machinery it has built up, the employees it has furnished jobs. There is no thought of the people; the only thought is, Can the administration win in 1936 with the $5,000,000,000 campaign fund, the most staggering in history?

If the President gets his section 2 of the banking bill, if he gets the N. R. A. extended, and with the $5,000,000,000 campaign fund he wins the election of 1936, then the velvet glove will be pulled off and we shall see the steel hand of the tyrant without more camouflage. The voice of Jacob will have served its purpose of deception and the hairy hand of Esau will have been permanently declared the heir and head, and in that hand of stealth, secrecy, deceit, fraud, hypocrisy, duplicity will be placed the fate of our once glorious but now crumbled Republic, upon whose ruins another Caesar, another Napoleon will have built his throne. The international Fabian organization will have all but succeeded in its plot to destroy our Republic and substitute in its stead a communistic or fascistic form of government. The bayonet, secret service, and star chamber will do the rest.

It is with a sense of doom and foreboding that I speak. Planned crisis after crisis has been forced upon us, and they have been met with the subservience of dumb-driven cattle. Right after right this Congress has meekly given away. Today we stand at almost the last barrier. Shall we again barter our birthright for a mess of pottage? It is hard to conceive that free Americans have allowed themselves to be mesmerized into a condition of unthinking passivity.

You Democrats, I challenge you; stand by the principles of Jefferson, your founder, and defeat this insidious foreign-planned attack on our liberties. Do not wait until you have revived the terrible thing, without a dotted " i " or a crossed " t " to protest. You see what it is contemplated to do with your generous gift of $5,000,000,000. Already, in secret, it has been decided not to pretend to begin public building construction until November; by November, Senators, it will soon be so cold that the work will have to be continued over to the spring, and when the spring comes another excuse can be found that the work may not be started until, shall we say September, that the full flood and force of this $5,000,000,000 campaign fund may be poured into the country just previous to the November election in 1936. The last election only cost the taxpayers $200 for every new-deal vote, but with this $5,000,000,000 and other billions left over from other appropriation gifts to the President, one can see that the $200 per vote can be multiplied by three or four; and who cannot say that the next Congress will be coerced into making another $5,000,000,000 allocation to the President? A leading Democrat, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], said here upon the floor that he should not be surprised if we were called on to appropriate another $5,000,000,000 at the next Congress.

Already your masters, swollen with powers, are beginning tyrannically and shamelessly to put into effect their full punishing power. A child could have foreseen this, but docile, obedient, always hopeful, though so many times deceived, you passed the bill, though no one in this broad land could get a word of information as to who shall administer this stupendous sum or how or where or when. We had the opportunity to safeguard the interests of the people, but we did not do it. Are we going to avoid our duty once again? Surely there are men here who cannot by this time but see what the plot is. If you supinely pass the N. R. A. extension and the administration's banking bill, you might just as well go home and stay there; and I am sure that the President will so instruct you just as soon as he acquires these two little things so necessary to his great ambitions. It will then be "all up" with the country, and we can only look forward to the inauguration of sovietism. For your country's sake, for your children's sake, I beg of you stop, think, act before it is too late; do not go like "dumb, driven cattle" to the slaughter. In a few more weeks, days, it will be too late. Now is the time to be men and assert yourselves.

Look around. See the havoc that has been wrought. Hear the cries of distress. See the arrogance of our masters. This proud Capital city has degenerated into a crossroads village. Dignity has departed, and the press reports of national doings resembles the doings of Podunk, billingsgate, personalities, and small times squabbles taking front-page space.

Where are our principles? Where is there hope in this headlong rush to sovietism? Where a sane, calm leader, whose concern is the good of our own people? Look over the list of key men now in control of our beloved America, once so sane, dependable, a haven of security and certainty, and you will find hundreds of internationalists, Communistic, and Fascistic advocates surrounding in a complete "red" circle our smiling President.

Regardless of platform pledges, the new deal has well established these poor suffering old United States in socialism. The history of long years of a civilization of individualism and representative government was thrown by the board and crack-brained experiment substituted. A civilization which guaranteed to its individuals freedom, luxury, and incentive, and was the envy of all nations, was junked overnight, and in the frenzy of our despair there was forged on us the chains similar to those under which Russia is starving to death.

They never intended anything else. All this talk of recovery has been but "springes to catch woodcocks." "Oh, judgment, thou hast fled to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason!" The whole plot has been to make capital of our misery, and, in the hopelessness of our distress, to catch and bind and deliver us to the Soviet system.

You know what is the condition of Italy, where fascism has destroyed all freedom, and no more is there any independent industry or prosperity. Do you want to gratify one man's imperial ambition? Do you want to establish here another Germany, and a return to the Dark Ages, with wholesale assassination, and the end of freedom of thought and expression? Do you look to Russia as an ideal, where poverty and misery and starvation are rife? Do you want to put our farmers in the state of the Soviet farmers—rob them of their grain, starve them to death, subject them to the tortures of cold and starvation—our free farmers, who have written the history of this beloved country from Lexington to this present day?

This punishing Government has not yet begun to exercise the tyranny which Senators have put trustingly into its hands to employ. When all the rights and liberties of our people have been supplanted by bloody, calculated cruelty, when the conflict arises, and class meets class in violence, what shall you answer to your conscience? Think! Act! Do not let yourselves be drugged into blind submission; do not betray the wholesome, upstanding American people.

When has it ever been that our Government has seen its men in control stoop so low and behave so meanly as to punish whole sovereign States in order to "get even" with their Democratic Governors who still think and act in accord with the Constitution, despite the kindly advice and later coercion of our like-to-be-God President? When has human misery so openly been made the pawn of politics? We have fallen upon an evil state when no longer can we have faith and confidence in the spoken word of our Executive, when his trusted officials tell us one thing and, under cover, do the opposite. It has been the custom in this country to let the people know. Now, no one, except the inner circle, is allowed to question or find out the plan of the dictator.

When the Kaiser became drunk with power, he spoke of "Me und Gott." Our imperial court, with an airy gesture, has even dismissed God.

A young man, Henry J. Burrow, Jr., from St. Paul, a Bible student, studying for the ministry, the other day visited our smiling President to urge him to set aside 5 minutes on some certain day for prayer for the Nation's troubles and against the impending drought. The guardians at the portals of his august majesty informed this young religious zealot that the President could take care of the situation; that he wanted no help from God. In short, if his ambitions are fulfilled—and they seem upon the verge of being fulfilled—he will become God as Lenin has been substituted in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics for the Divinity. Christ, upon whose teachings this Republic was founded, will no longer need acknowledgment. Home and family ties, the right to worship God as we choose, liberty of speech and press and person, religion, may be things of the past, as in Russia, where the late Commissar of Education Lunacharsky said:

> All religions are poison. They put the mind to sleep and destroy it; they kill both will power and conscience. War to the knife must be declared against all religions. Our task is the destruction of all religion and all morality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The time of the Senator from Minnesota has expired.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 5, after the word "lease" and the comma, it is proposed to insert the word "mortgage", and to insert the same word at the end of line 8.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is the same amendment on which the Senator from Louisiana previously spoke.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to have the effect of the amendment explained by its author.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is the author of the amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I will explain the amendment to the Senator from North Carolina. He will observe that in section 5 of the bill it is provided that voluntary liens created by a purchaser from the Corporation shall be cause for declaring all the payments due. In section 6 of the bill it is provided that no purchaser of property from the Corporation shall, "without the written consent of the Corporation, sell, lease, transfer, assign, or convey any such property." The amendment proposes to insert with those words, after the word "lease", the word "mortgage", in order to show the policy on the part of the Government that no voluntary lien shall be created on any property purchased during the time any remaining payments shall be unpaid.

Mr. BAILEY. It means that the purchasers may not create a second mortgage so long as the money is unpaid to the Government.

Mr. HATCH. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 16, after the word "rehabilitation", it is proposed to insert the words "or under any power given him by said act", so as to read:

(c) The Corporation shall have capital stock in the amount of $50,000,000, and the board is authorized to increase such capital stock from time to time in such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Corporation. Such original capital stock may be subscribed for by the President on behalf of the United States, and payments for such subscriptions may be made from any sums appropriated by the Emergency Relief Act of 1935 which may be allocated by the President or otherwise made available for rural rehabilitation or under any power given him by said act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in the State of Tennessee there was a man handling Federal relief under another man. Mr. Menzler was the head of the relief down there, but he had a man under him by the name of Duncan. They sent a man down there by the name, I believe, of Watson, regional field examiner of the Federal Emergency Relief in Washington, and he wrote this in his report:

Mr. W. M. Duncan was appointed auditor of the Tennessee C. W. A. in December 1933. He was a certified public accountant and apparently had excellent references and agreed to carry out the policies of the C. W. A.

By the 1st of February in 1934 it was apparent that Mr. Duncan was not qualified for the position.

I want that to be noted by the Senate. I am reading from the report of an officer of the Government itself referring to Mr. Duncan.

By the 1st of February 1934 it was apparent that Mr. Duncan was not qualified for the position. It was also ascertained that he was being controlled by the same political ring that controlled Mr. Menzler. So it was felt advisable to make a change in the accounting division as well as the administrator—

On the ground that they were controlled by a low-down political ring, I suppose. I do not know whether that is so or not. The ring might have been all right, so far as I know.

Mr. Johnstone and I were both in Nashville for a week during the process of the change. Colonel Simpson, who replaced Mr. Menzler, asked Mr. Johnstone to make and approve recommendations for the staff. I agreed to make an investigation as to available accountants. Because the situation had to be handled quickly, and knowing Mr. Duncan was vice president of the Tennessee Certified Public Accountants' Association, I asked for his recommendation as to his successor, and his recommendation included that of Mr. C. P. Harris, along with others. It was soon ascertained that Mr. Harris was the outstanding candidate of the group, and within 24 hours he was appointed and installed.

He was removed for some cause. There was appointed down there, as the record shows, a man named Simpson. Simpson was highly recommended by the newspapers, which, of course, is not to his credit in some places. I am informed that Simpson has been removed and they have reinstated Mr. Duncan, concerning whom the United States report said that—

It was apparent that he was not qualified and was being controlled by a political ring.

I do not know how true that is, but I merely show these reports which the Government renders on its own men from time to time ought to be fumigated. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator is referring to one Walter L. Simpson, who was removed for dishonesty and corruption, I will say that in what he says there is not a word of truth; not a word.

Mr. LONG. I do not know about Mr. Simpson.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is again taking Tennessee as an example. I say to him that I know something about Mr. Simpson. I was almost if not entirely responsible for his removal for dishonesty. If the Senator is defending a man like Simpson he does himself a great injustice. He ought not to stand here and defend such a man.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Simpson.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator knew him he probably would not be talking about him.

Mr. LONG. I have not said a word to his credit or discredit. I was reading about a man named Duncan who the Government said, was not qualified and was being controlled by a political ring.

Mr. McKELLAR. Duncan from where?

Mr. LONG. From Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I never heard about him. The Senator is again mistaken in his facts.

Mr. LONG. Then, the Government is mistaken about it. I would not doubt that they are, because most of the things we get out of them are fairy tales. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I would not doubt the Senator is mistaken about it. Remembering how greatly mistaken the Senator was in statements he made some time ago, which were wholly without foundation in fact, I have no doubt the Senator is mistaken again just as he then was.

Mr. LONG. Does the Senator refer to the charges on which he would not allow testimony to be adduced under oath? The Senator says they are untrue because he would not let witnesses swear to their truthfulness.

Mr. McKELLAR. We had the facts before us and passed on them, and because they did not tally with what the Senator thought were the facts, he rises here and talks about things about which he does not know anything in the world, and about a man concerning whom he does not know anything except such information as he obtained from a couple of crooks down in Tennessee, for whom he sent, according to his own statement, and had come here and advise him about what honest men should do.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am using now only such information on this last matter as appears over the signature of Robert B. Watson, regional field examiner of the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, and they may be crooks as the Senator from Tennessee says. I do not know. I rather think they are from what I know about them. However, I do not want to get into any argument with the Senator from Tennessee. [Manifestations of laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. I ask the present occupant of the chair to explain to the occupants of the galleries that Senators who are addressing the Senate have a right to have silence in the galleries. I ask that the Chair admonish the occupants of the galleries to maintain silence. The practice does not prevail in this body as in the House of having expressions of approval or disapproval in the galleries. I hope the Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries in such manner that they shall understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The point of order is well taken. The Chair will explain to the occupants of the galleries that they are here as guests of the Senate. In order to carry on the business of the Senate it is necessary that order shall be maintained. It is particularly necessary, when there are so many visitors in the galleries as there are today, that they should observe the rule of the Senate and maintain quiet in order that the business of the Senate may not be interfered with.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not object to the interruptions of my friend from Tennessee. I am sorry he takes to himself, personally, offense when I read Government reports reflecting on somebody from Tennessee. I hope the Senator will not quarrel with me. I want to be nice to the Senator. I do not want any argument with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when the Senator admits on the floor of the Senate, as he did sometime ago, that he sent for two dishonest and corrupt men and brought them here to advise him about matters in Tennessee, I am frank to say I do not understand what the Senator is endeavoring to accomplish. When he charges the administration with the wrong of having dismissed a man by the name of Walter F. Simpson, let me state to him that I urged that man dismissed. It was because of facts given by me that he was dismissed. He was dismissed because he was dishonest. I knew he was dishonest, and I urged that he be dismissed. It was not done at the instance of the administration. The administration dismissed him because of the facts which I adduced and upon which I demanded it, and I demanded it because he was dishonest, inefficient, incompetent, and I believe, corrupt; and the Senator from Louisiana, as I understood, was defending him.

Mr. LONG. No; I have not defended him. I do not know the man. I was reading from a Government report in which it was stated that a man named Duncan, who I was informed in Washington had been reinstated in his old job, was reported as being dishonest and corrupt, and in the hands of bad organizations and under political influence. I said, and I was careful to say, that this report might be in error; that I doubted this organization was as corrupt as it was said to be; that I did not believe it.

Mr. McKELLAR. In all kindness to the Senator, if he does not know anything about the facts and is simply reading a report which he thinks might be in error, which he does not know to be correct, but might be erroneous, why in the name of heaven is the Senator willing to rise in this body and read such a report? He does himself the greatest injustice when he undertakes to read reports which reflect on men who ought not to be reflected upon and stands by men that no honest man ought to stand by.

Mr. LONG. I am against all of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, could not I use some of the time of the Senator from Tennessee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee on page 3, line 16.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I take this occasion to ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a telegram from a prominent citizen of my State, who feels that the pending Bankhead bill should be passed.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

WARM SPRINGS, GA., April 12, 1935.

HON. R. S. COPELAND,
The Shoreham, Washington, D. C.:

I rejoice to learn vote will be taken Monday on Senator BANKHEAD'S bill for farm tenant homes corporation. I consider this one of the most constructive and important measures yet proposed. I know conditions fairly well, and am persuaded prompt enactment of the bill will mean greater stability throughout the country. I trust that it may accord with your judgment to use your great influence favorably now.

GEORGE FOSTER PEABODY.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask that the pending amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 16, after the word "rehabilitation", it is proposed to insert "or under any power given him by said act."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire the purpose of this amendment? Is the amendment tendered by the committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Utah that there is an express provision in the work-relief joint resolution authorizing the President to make transfers for the purposes set forth in this bill; and we were afraid the language of the original section of the work-relief joint resolution might not be sufficient. In other words, this amendment simply includes the specific powers given in that joint resolution to transfer funds for this purpose. It conforms to previous legislation on the subject.

Mr. KING. Then, may I inquire of the Senator if it is his understanding that in addition to the funds derived from the sale of bonds, if those funds should be inadequate, the President may take from the $4,880,000,000 any sum that he pleases and devote it to the execution of the purposes of the pending bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; the Senator will find that the original working capital of $50,000,000 is authorized to be transferred under the provision which we now have under consideration.

Mr. KING. I am familiar with that.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Utah, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. KING. I yield the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that the Senator's amendment tends to enlarge the powers to transfer money from what we call the $4,880,000,000 joint resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not so regard it, because the work-relief joint resolution authorizes the allocation of money for this specific purpose. This bill really is not properly phrased in that respect.

Mr. BAILEY. That is just the point. The work-relief joint resolution, carrying the appropriation of $4,880,000,000, provides for precisely the same character of activities as are contemplated by the pending Bankhead bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the Senator how much, under the work-relief measure, is available for these purposes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is familiar with that matter. There is no specific allocation for farm purposes. There is an allocation in the joint resolution, subject to the other provisions of the joint resolution, as I recall, of $500,000,000 for rural rehabilitation.

Mr. BAILEY. So we may assume, Mr. President, that already $500,000,000 are available for precisely the same purposes which are contemplated by the pending legislation. I wish to have this matter placed clearly before the Senate. We are, therefore, in this bill adding a billion dollars to $500,000,000 heretofore provided. I think that is a fact which all of us ought to consider, and it ought to be clearly established.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it is perfectly clear that with this authority permissive only in the President, the original working capital will come out of the $500,000,000 allocated for rural rehabilitation. I wanted to clarify this provision simply for the benefit of the Comptroller General's ruling on the subject; that is all. There is a capital of only $50,000,000 provided to come out of that fund, and, as we know, that is permissive with the President, not directory. There is no enlargement of authority; nothing but language to make it certain and clear that the money may be allocated for this specific purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am unwilling to have the pending bill defended on the ground that it is permissive. I will agree that it is permissive so far as the Senate is concerned, but it is an authorization, and we are responsible for the consequences. I do not think the fact that it is permissive affects its merits at all. We ought to assume that when we authorize the expenditure of a billion dollars it will be expended.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not now proposing merely the establishment of a new billion-dollar bank with authority to buy and sell land and stock and chattels and build houses, but we are adding a billion dollars to $500,000,000 already provided for those purposes. I think that states the fact which stands before us in this proposed legislation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In addition to the $500,000,000 which is earmarked in the relief joint resolution, I remind the Senator that there is also a basket clause in that measure which would permit that $500,000,000 to be extended well beyond a billion dollars if the necessity should so require.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that to be true. I was considering the $500,000,000; but in the possibilities of the 20-percent exchange within the $4,880,000,000 relief act, that sum may be expanded in excess of a billion dollars for precisely the purposes contemplated by the pending bill. In that view, the proposition before us is to add a billion dollars to a billion dollars heretofore authorized, and certain to be expended to a very great extent; I should say to such an extent as may be considered necessary in the premises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I call for a division.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Reynolds
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Robinson
Bachman	Couzens	Lewis	Russell
Bailey	Cutting	Logan	Schall
Bankhead	Dickinson	Lonergan	Schwellenbach
Barbour	Dieterich	Long	Sheppard
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Shipstead
Bilbo	Duffy	McKellar	Smith
Black	Fletcher	McNary	Steiwer
Bone	Gerry	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Gibson	Minton	Townsend
Brown	Glass	Moore	Trammell
Bulkley	Gore	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Guffey	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Harrison	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Overton	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Pittman	Wheeler
Clark	Johnson	Pope	White
Connally

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, we have spent a long time on this amendment. I desire to point out that the amendment does not seek in any way to enlarge the appropriation. I may say to Senators who were not here before that there is an express provision in the work-relief joint resolution authorizing the President to make transfers and assignments for the purpose of aiding tenant farmers and share-croppers in acquiring homes, under regulations to be prescribed by the President.

The bill, before this amendment was offered, authorized the amount necessary to provide the original capital stock to be transferred from the allocation from rural rehabilitation. Doubtless it may be transferred from that fund; but there is a vast difference between what is now commonly known as rural rehabilitation and a new permanent homestead program.

So this amendment does not seek to do anything at all except to clarify the power of the President, and to make it clear, certainly, as to the Comptroller General, that allocations from that fund for this purpose are authorized and permitted. It is simply a clarifying amendment, as I see it, and nothing more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 3, line 16. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask for the yeas and nays. I am offering the amendment for the committee, and I wish to have it adopted.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by the committee, on page 3, line 19, after the word "rehabilitation", to insert the words "or under any power given him by said act."

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KING. The amendment which has just been reported by the clerk is a complement to and a part of the amendment just rejected, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has been advised that it is the same amendment.

Mr. KING. So I assume the same action will be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may not the amendment be again stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, line 19, after the word "rehabilitation", to insert the words "or under any power given him by said act", so as to read:

> And the President is further authorized to transfer to the corporation, from the sums so allocated or otherwise made available for rural rehabilitation or under any power given him by said act, such sums as he may from time to time deem desirable to carry out the purposes of this act.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague a question, in order that the Senate may understand the amendment. As I see it, the rejection of the amendment would cripple the bill. Of course, to carry out the desire of those who desire to defeat the bill, no more effective method could be taken. I may misunderstand the situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the amendment is very important to the bill.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask what is the object of the amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The object is to make it clear that the President is authorized to make transfers from the work-relief fund for the original capital of this corporation.

Mr. BLACK. The corporation to be set up would be limited to lending money to tenants and share-croppers and farmers, and the bill provides for no lending of money to landlords?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. The object of the bill is to secure the lending of money to tenant farmers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator contends that the rejection of this amendment would cripple the bill, I desire to submit just a few observations. If it would cripple the bill, it would cripple it only to the extent that if the words were eliminated the President might not for the purposes of the pending bill divert from the $4,880,000,000 fund, which has been authorized, any of the proceeds of that fund, from the objects for which we had in mind the fund was to be used.

When the pending bill was drafted it was not contemplated that there should be diverted any part of the $4,880,000,000 fund to supplement the grant of money herein provided. The bill stood on its own foundation, an authorization of a billion dollars, fifty million of which was to be immediately subscribed by the President as capital stock, and additional capital was to be provided until a billion dollars of bonds had been issued, and a billion dollars, presumably, secured.

The attempt now is made to incorporate into the pending bill, providing a billion dollars, such part of the $4,880,000,000 heretofore authorized to be appropriated as the President, under the authority given him to make allocations, may see fit.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the amendment should be adopted, would there be any limitation on the amount which the President could take from the $4,880,000,000?

Mr. KING. I see no limitation whatever.

Mr. BORAH. I do not suppose it is the intention of the author of the measure that there should be no limit as to the amount which could be taken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I stated, probably before the Senator came into the Chamber——

Mr. BORAH. No; I was here while the Senator was speaking.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The only purpose of the amendment is to clarify; it is not to enlarge the original $50,000,000 capital.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have the floor; but I yield to the Senator from Alabama if he desires to reply to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bill authorizes a $50,000,000 working capital, to be transferred from the rehabilitation allocation in the Work Relief Act. My attention was called to the fact that there was specific authority in the work-relief measure for the allocation by the President of money to aid farmers, tenants, and share-croppers to acquire homes, just as is provided in the pending bill. There is authorization in this bill to take the money from the rehabilitation fund; and if the President did not desire to take it from that fund but wanted to take it from some other fund, he might be prevented from doing so. It would not increase the authorization of the amount of money to be expended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I stated a moment ago, when this bill was drafted, apparently there was no thought that resort would be had to the $4,880,000,000 fund, unless, perhaps, for the $50,000,000 for the capital stock which was authorized to be subscribed by the President.

The amendment, as I understand it, authorizes the President to take from that fund any amount which he may determine to be proper, so that as I read the bill, we have the authorization for a billion dollars, then there is authorization, if the amendment is adopted, for resort to the $4,880,000,000 fund for such further sum as the President may deem proper.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. My attention was directed to the language at the beginning of the section, where it is stated:

> The Corporation shall have capital stock in the amount of $50,000,000.

Then it proceeds to provide that the President may subscribe to the stock, and that he may make payments for the subscription from this fund. Am I not right in assuming, therefore, that wherever he obtains the money, the amount to be used in making the payments cannot exceed $50,000,000?

Mr. KING. I do not quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there is a further provision, which authorizes an additional amount of capital stock if conditions should require it.

Mr. KING. Up to a billion dollars. I think I am correct in that statement.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that in lines 7, 8, and 9, on page 3, the Corporation is authorized to increase its capital without limitation. In other words, with the authority which this amendment would provide, the capital could be increased by all of the $4,880,000,000, should the President see fit to do so.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that he could exceed the billion dollars, but certainly what the Senator states now is true, namely, that the capital stock may be increased up to $1,000,000,000.

Mr. STEIWER. In line 11 we find this language: "Such original capital stock may be subscribed for by the President on behalf of the United States, and payments for such subscriptions may be made from any sums", such as those now under discussion.

Mr. KING. Yes. There may be some qualification by the words "or under any power given him by said act." At any rate, having introduced the bill upon the theory that the Corporation was to be organized with an original capital stock of $50,000,000, to be subscribed by the President, and with authority to issue capital stock up to a billion dollars, it would seem to me highly improper to resort to the fund of $4,880,000,000, unless perhaps for the $50,000,000 for the capital stock, although I disapprove of that. So the relief fund would be diminished, of course, to the extent of the sums which might be taken from it in order to carry out the purposes of the pending bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if there is no limitation to the amount which may be drawn from the $4,880,000,000, I think it a very serious amendment, but the Senator from Alabama contends that it does not enlarge the appropriation at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 19, it is proposed after the word "rehabilitation" to insert the words "or under any power given him by said act."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BYRD. The occupant of the chair previous to the present occupant of the chair declared a similar amendment defeated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a similar amendment previously rejected. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out the following:

> The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $1,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection.

All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes), now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand I have 10 minutes on the amendment. Is that the rule?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator has 30 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has 30 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I am speaking, Mr. President, on the amendment. My amendment proposes to strike out the authority now contained in the bill to issue bonds to the amount of a billion dollars. It leaves the mechanics of the bill just as they are. I wish to state to the Senate why I desire to strike out the authority to issue a billion dollars of public debt in addition to the billions we have heretofore authorized.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that we should have better order. There is too much noise in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let there be order. The Chair will once more call the attention of visitors in the galleries that even a slight amount of disorder or conversation in the galleries interferes with the business of the Senate. The occupants of the galleries will kindly refrain from audible conversation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the very fact that it is necessary for a Senator to ask for a little order while the Senate considers the appropriation of a billion dollars of money from the exhausted Treasury of the United States is not without a very profound significance. I sometimes think we have reached the point where we will authorize the expenditure of a billion dollars as casually as a Senator would light a 10-cent cigar given him by a generous constituent.

The matter strikes me as of the very utmost importance. We are either going to take thought, Mr. President, of the consequences of our money expenditure, of the burden we place upon our country in the present moment, and the burden which we pass upon those who come after us, or we are going to cast loose from all our moorings and spend and spend and spend until the credit of the Government is questioned by investors everywhere.

There is no necessity for one dollar of the bonds provided in this bill. We already have $500,000,000 available, and $500,000,000, Mr. President, is abundantly sufficient for everything in contemplation by the bill or for the ultimate solution of the problem of agricultural tenants.

The solution of the problem is necessarily experimental. We have given the President almost a blank check with respect to this money. He can take such steps as he thinks proper, devise such plans as he conceives to be best, and he has $500,000,000 in his hands today, if the people of the country or the banks will respond by taking the Treasury bonds, for the purpose of undertaking to bring about a solution of the difficulty presented by this very bill.

It is inconceivable that that sum could be expended between now and next January—and we will be here next January. Why should we assume that this plan of public expenditure will be a success? Why should we not assume that the $500,000,000 now available is abundantly sufficient to try out every experiment which can be thought of by the President or suggested by the Members of the Senate?

Let us look at the bill and see what it contemplates. It contemplates not only a billion dollars, but a new billion-dollar bank—that is what it is—with land-buying power, land-selling power, and land-leasing power. The United States Government, under this bill, would be committed to add a billion dollars to the $500,000,000 already authorized, to the $500,000,000 more that may be available under the act we have heretofore passed, for the purpose of proceeding wholesale and unrestrained, with a scheme for buying, selling, and leasing land.

Senators may meditate upon that for a moment. At a time when we are struggling with the immediate difficulties and problems of a great depression, it is proposed to pile a billion upon a billion—and every billion we pile on is bound to be in the nature of a handicap upon commerce and recovery—for the purpose of buying land throughout the country, and of leasing land or selling land, and—now hear me, Mr. President—without one line of restraint. I say that the bill will authorize the board which is to be created by it to pay $100 an acre for the land and sell it for a dollar an acre. There are no restraints. The author of the bill did not even take the trouble to require that the land should be appraised when bought, or that when it should be sold that the selling price should correspond even with the purchase price.

Further than that, it is provided that upon a sale the purchaser may have 60 years in which to pay, and that is two generations of time.

But that is not all, Mr. President. This bill provides not only for buying land and selling land, but for house building and house selling.

Mr. GORE. And for furnishing; does it not?

Mr. BAILEY. And for house furnishing. There is no limitation in the bill. If the board desires to build a $5,000 house it builds it, and no man can call it to account. If it desires to build a $10,000 house it builds that house and no man can call it in question. And if it decides to spend every dollar of this money in three States, leaving all the others out, the board may do so and there will be no recourse.

That is not all, Mr. President. The bill authorizes also the buying of horses, mules, livestock, farming implements, buying them with the bonds which must be paid in interest and in principal by the sweat of the brow of the working millions of this land, and given out on a 60-year basis, and without any reference to what the property may cost. That is the bill. It is as wide open at both ends as a barrel with both heads knocked out.

More than that, the bill provides for no accounting whatever. We place a billion dollars in the hands of five men, and so far as the representatives of the people are concerned—and the Members of the Senate and of the House are their elected representatives—we kiss the whole proposition good-bye. The last thing we will ever have to do about it will be to confirm three nominations sent to the Senate and that will be the end of it, and they will be able to do what they please.

Mr. GORE. They will have to pay off the bonds later.

Mr. BAILEY. We will not pay them off. Senators will not pay them off; I wish they would have to pay them off. The Members of the House of Representatives will not bear this burden. The Government pays us $9,500 a year each, and beginning in July——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BAILEY. How much time have I occupied?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has occupied 10 minutes on the amendment. If the Senator wishes to speak on the bill he may do so.

Mr. BAILEY. I will take my seat if the Presiding Officer will give me a minute on account of the time his predecessor in the chair took by way of informing the Senate on a certain matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is entitled to take 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to save that for other amendments. I will take my seat with just one remark, that if we are going to part with a billion dollars in this fashion we might as well make a clean sweep of it, send for Dr. Townsend, and let him run the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move that the pending bill be committed or referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in the limited period I have served as a Member of the Senate I do not believe that there has been presented to this body any legislation of such importance so loosely and crudely drawn as is the pending measure. I say this with all respect to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], its author. The distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has demonstrated in language much better than is within my power some of the loose provisions; but not only has this bill been very crudely drawn but there is actual contradiction in one clause as compared to another.

If the United States Government is going to engage in the wholesale buying of land throughout the Nation, a very important question arises as to the taxation of real estate and personal property which is now paid to the localities and to the States, because, under the methods of taxation in use in practically every State in this Union, the localities, the counties, and the subdivisions of counties, collect their taxes mainly from real estate and tangible personal property. I call attention to the provision of the bill at the top of page 6, which reads:

> The corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, its loans and income, and its real and personal property, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation.

Then, Mr. President, to show the scant attention that was given to the preparation of this important bill, I call attention to clause (b), at the top of page 12, which provides:

> (b) Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property acquired and held by the corporation, or held by any purchasers from the corporation, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

Mr. President, it is proposed by this measure to establish another great bank in this country, a bank which, in my opinion—and I confidently make the prediction—will rival the Federal farm land bank and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It seems to me that before the Federal Government shall embark upon this important departure the Banking and Currency Committee, with the information and experience of the members of that committee, should at least pass upon the provisions of the bill, which proposes to establish, as I have said, another great bank to be financed by Government money.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this $1,000,000,000 appropriation or the guaranty of bonds in that amount—and, under the terms of the bill, I am confident that practically the entire sum will ultimately be paid by the United States Government—is only a beginning for great additional appropriations to follow.

The Senator from Alabama in response to a question propounded by me on Friday of last week, stated that there were 3,000,000 deserving tenant farmers in this country. Now it is proposed, as I understand, to expend an average of $5,000 in order to set up in business each of these tenant farmers. At that calculation the pending appropriation will provide for only 200,000 tenant farmers. I wish to ask the Members of the Senate, are not those who will not secure benefits under this $1,000,000,000 appropriation, as a matter of justice, entitled to have additional appropriations made by the Government in order that they, too, may receive similar benefits?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the fact that the loan provisions of the bill are not limited to tenant farmers and corporations, but include—and I think perhaps properly so—farm laborers, and we do not have a tabulation of the number of farm laborers before us.

Mr. BYRD. I was coming to that, because I think that there are many farm laborers in this country who are just as much entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this bill as are farm tenants. Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that the statement made by the Senator from Alabama is correct and that there are 3,000,000 deserving tenant farmers in this country. At the rate of $5,000 for each farmers——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator does not want to misrepresent what I said. I said there were 3,000,000 tenant farmers, but the whole matter was one of selection. I never said that 3,000,000 were entitled to benefits under this program.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has stated in the RECORD—he stated it on Friday—that there were 3,000,000 deserving farm tenants in this country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I challenge that statement, if the Senator wants to repeat it, and ask him to find it in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRD. I will stand on the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well, but I imagine the Senator will withdraw his statement when he shall have examined the RECORD and find he has not made a correct statement.

Mr. BYRD. I will certainly withdraw the statement if the Senator from Alabama is correct; but he stated, as I understood him, that there were 3,000,000 deserving tenant farmers in this country who, under one condition or another, may be entitled to the advantages to be obtained under the bill.

However, Mr. President, it is not so much a question as to exactly the number of farmers who will be eligible to obtain the benefits of this bill. We all know that the number will be very large; but the question is—and that is what I want the Senate to understand—that if we embark upon this new adventure it will mean an appropriation of $1,000,000,000 at the beginning, with many additional billions of dollars to follow.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has called attention to what it will be possible to do under this bill. I read from the bill itself:

> (3) To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

What can "facilities" mean? The use of that word gives the broadest possible opportunity to the board to be created to do anything they may desire to do.

Furthermore, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the board may require one purchaser to pay 10 percent in cash; they may permit another purchaser to pay nothing in cash, and they may allow 60 years for the payment of whatever sum may be due. In addition to that, in my judgment, they may remit the interest to be paid certainly for a part of that time if they see fit so to do.

Mr. President, upon my responsibility as a Member of the Senate I say that if this bill shall be passed it will not be for the benefit so much of the tenant farmers of the South as it will be for the benefit of the large landowners and farm corporations and those who have mortgages on their lands throughout the South and other sections of the country, because owners will sell their land to the Federal Government and obtain the cash for their land, and those who have mortgages on land will receive the cash when otherwise, perhaps, the mortgages would be of no value.

Mr. President, I do not desire to take up any more time of the Senate, but again I wish to submit to my fellow Senators that if we are going to start another big bank we should let the Banking and Currency Committee pass upon the details of the bill. That committee reported the Federal land bank bill; it reported the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill; any why should we deny the Senate the benefit of the knowledge and experience of the members of that committee in dealing with a subject with which they are all familiar?

Therefore, Mr. President, I have made the motion to commit or refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it was not my privilege to hear all the argument submitted by the Senator from Virginia on his motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Necessarily one must be out of the Chamber sometimes, and I was indulging in the luxury of a light luncheon when I learned the Senator from Virginia had made the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is my thought and belief that the bill should not be so referred.

It has been said during the course of the debate that the measure is for the benefit of landowners. Certainly if the measure should be placed in operation it would result in the purchase and sale of some lands. The corporation could not function unless that were true. However, I do not believe there is anything in the language of the bill or in the principle which runs through it that warrants the conclusion asserted by the Senator from Virginia, namely, that it is for the benefit of landowners.

On a previous day since the bill came before the Senate for consideration I took occasion to point out some of the conditions which, in my judgment, make necessary the passage of the proposed legislation. In more than one State, according to the statistics which are supplied, there are 68 percent of the farmers who are tenants and share-croppers. The process of passing farm cultivation in this country into the control of persons who do not own the farms has been growing, as was said on another occasion by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], ever since the Civil War. It has grown more rapidly during the last few years than during any other period with which I have been made familiar.

The pending legislation is, of course, subject to criticism and to amendment. The purpose of the legislation is to check farm tenantry in the United States and to encourage small-farm ownership. If the Senator from Virginia does not believe in that purpose; if he thinks, as is said by some writers on the subject, that the tenant system is the best that has been discovered; if he wishes to see the process carried on until the farmers of the United States consist almost entirely of tenants and share-croppers, he would be opposed to the pending legislation and would vote for some of the amendments which have been offered to it, and which, in my judgment, are intended to defeat the legislation; that is, if the amendments should prevail, they would have that effect.

It has been said—and I believe by the Senator from Virginia—that the bill really should go to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not agree to that suggestion. It is not banking legislation in the true sense of the term. It is farm legislation. It pertains to agriculture. The committee which considered and reported the bill was the appropriate committee; the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject matter.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Is it not likewise true that the Federal land bank relates to agriculture, and was not that legislation referred to the Banking and Currency Committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that was a bank, so-called, or an organization which has many aspects of a bank. I was about to point out, when the Senator from Virginia interrupted me, that frequently we are called on in both houses of Congress to consider legislation as to which there is in a sense an overlapping of jurisdiction. Admittedly this measure could have been considered by almost any committee to which the Senate saw fit to refer it. If we had referred it to the Committee on Banking and Currency, that committee would have taken jurisdiction or might have taken jurisdiction and reported it. But the point I am making is that the fact that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry actually received the bill and reported it is not any justification for committing or referring the bill to another committee.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has had much more experience than I have in these matters, but does he recall any legislation which established a bank, as, of course, this bill does, that has ever been presented to this body except with the approval of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think this measure establishes a bank any more than or quite so much as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act established a bank. The corporation proposed to be established by this measure would not receive deposits, and that of course is the test of a commercial bank. It would buy and sell real estate and take mortgages.

Mr. BYRD. May I ask the Senator another question, and then I shall not interrupt him again?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator suggests it is not a bank because it would not receive deposits. The Federal land bank does not receive deposits, and yet everyone recognizes it as a bank.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it has not that characteristic; but the Federal land bank has other characteristics which are usually found in banking institutions and which this proposed corporation would not have.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Even if the bill does provide for a bank, it does not provide for a bank any more than it did when it was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry without objection, does it? Nor does it provide for a bank any more than it did when it was reported by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry without objection.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think it provides for a bank in any proper sense of the term "bank."

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I rest my argument on that conclusion. I know that when a Senator introduces a bill usually he determines the committee to which it shall be referred, and the Senate under normal conditions has little opportunity to pass judgment on the question of which committee shall have jurisdiction.

Mr. BLACK. They would have ample opportunity before the bill is brought up and before numerous amendments have been offered if they really wanted to object to it on that ground, would they not?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. The jurisdiction of this bill more properly lies in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry than in any other committee of the Senate. Concededly it might have been referred to another committee. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry having considered it and acted, I do not believe the bill should be committed or referred to another committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if I thought there was any chance at all that the provisions of the bill would be reasonably or honestly administered, I would help to pass it. I do not mean that I would require a preponderance of proof that it would be honestly administered. I mean if I thought there was any chance at all that the provisions of the bill would be honestly administered, I would support it. I have not any belief at all that it would be in any respect or in any degree whatever honestly administered in my State.

I have only one light to guide my feet, and that is the lamp of experience. There has not been one single thing administered in my State, which has been examined, to my way of remembering, that the head of the Department has not himself admitted to be crooked, rampant, and rotten to the core. I start with the home-loan bank and Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The record was not quoted by Mr. John Fahey when he was before the Committee on Finance that he knew to be true, or at least he was not prepared to dispute that it showed rampant fraud and rottenness from top to bottom in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but he was not allowed, even if he desired, to make any changes in it. It has continued under the same magnificent management with no pretense of honesty, but with admitted fraud, with flaunted corruption, that institution has continued to operate, and I want to show how low they have descended. I want to show you just how low, publicly, outwardly, a board of this Government can be. Why, it is against the principles of that Board to make any pretense of honesty. They would be dismissed for lack of efficiency if they were honest. Even though they were appointed by themselves, even though they were sent into a State by Federal appointment from New York to Louisiana, from California to Alabama, if there were proof of honesty they would be dismissed.

I need go no further than my own State, the examples I have already cited, to show that wherever there is any degree of honesty the board will be dismissed.

If anyone would like proof of that matter, if you will appoint a committee to investigate it, I shall be glad to ask that you single out any board on earth that has operated in my State that is allegedly half honest, and I will go into the proof immediately that according to its own records it will not pretend to be honest.

This crookedness and this rottenness and this fraud is going to descend to where it is going to undermine the characters of men. It has gotten down to the point that a man dealing with institutions must get on a crooked basis in order to get anything. He realizes that he must deal with crooks according to crooked rules.

Down in my little State—and we are a happy people down there; we are a happy, contented people—down in my State we had a Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They put in charge of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation a set of men who do not deny, who cannot deny, and who will not even undertake to say now—there have been two investigations, and neither of them will say to the contrary from the floor of this body, I think—that they took the Home Owners' Loan money when they loaned a man a thousand dollars, and swindled him out of anywhere from $400 up to $750 of that money. They would take a loan of a thousand or two thousand dollars, and they would run that loan through a homestead, and back through a broker, and then to a stock purchaser, and they would wind up with that man borrowing a thousand dollars and signing the note for a thousand dollars and signing a check giving $700 of it over to somebody who stood in with the clique that had made the selection to run the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Now, they have got worse than that. They make no pretenses; they make no answers; and if there were any chance at all that this act were going to be honestly administered, I should vote for it and take the chance. In other words, if I had the lottery chance of drawing 1 out of 76,000 of an honest administration, I should be inclined to do it. The higher it gets, however, the less chance there is.

Here is the proof. I have here a letter from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation down in New Orleans, La. I will read you their letter:

MARCH 26, 1935.

MRS. ZELDA SCARBORO,
1452 Magazine Street, New Orleans, La.

DEAR MRS. SCARBORO: At the time of your visit to this office today you stated you had obtained State moratorium relief, and that this State moratorium had the approval of the State deputy, Mr. Christenberry, effective for 1 year. In view of the fact that you obtained this moratorium relief, and the fact that you showed us receipts of payments made to moratorium department, we are obliged to rule that your application with this Corporation is ineligible.

We are sending a copy of this letter to your mortgagee, Greater New Orleans Homestead, and are placing your file in the suspended category.

This is signed by C. J. Butterfuss, review clerk. I guess the name indicates that there is always a fuss where there is any butter left in the country. [Laughter.] I do not know what the name means.

I went back and got a letter on the subject, and here is the state of facts: They seized a widow's home to sell it, and she went to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and asked them for a loan, so that she might pay off this debt for which her home was at that time under a seizure; but they dillydallied with the loan so long—she was not on the inside of the second-story working situation down there, Mr. President; she could not get enough money so that she could give from 40 to 50 to 70 cents on the dollar to some pigeon-hole skyrocketer to make the loan, because she could not pay off the debt—so, therefore, they dillydallied with that poor little old widow's loan until the sheriff was going to sell her home. So she ran up to the debt-moratorium relief agency of the State banking department, and she asked them to suspend the collection under that fieri facias administration of the sheriff, so that she could get the loan. They gave her a suspension so that she might get the loan; and what did they rule? They told her that applicants for moratoriums are ineligible for loans, for the reason that "If we grant one, it is proof that the applicant is not able to pay; and if we do not grant one, the applicant does not need the loan and is not in distress."

Is not that a nice situation for you, gentlemen of the Senate? Here it is in writing that if they grant an application, the applicant is not in distress; and if they do not grant the application for moratorium relief, that is proof that the applicant is not in distress. Therefore, this bunch of self-confessed riggers, who are taking all the way from 40 to as high as 80 cents on every dollar, and do not deny it—that kind of crooks and thieves are to be given another billion dollars. God save the State from the crooks and the thugs and the thieves having another billion dollars down there! If there were any chance whatever that one scintilla of honesty would be permitted from this squandering, debauched sect——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. LONG. I am very sorry it has.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think any student of government giving attention to the present economic situation of the country must be alarmed at the fact which is undisputed, shown by statistics, that in round numbers, taking our country as a whole, one-half of the farm lands of the country are cultivated by tenants. To my mind, when we look further and see that the percentage of tenancy has been increasing for 50 years, we should be all the more alarmed at the condition.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has just stated that one-half the farm lands of the country are operated by tenant farmers. Has he any figures as to the number of tenant farmers and the total number of farmers in the country?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I think they are all in the RECORD. I have not now the figures before me, but they have been referred to several times. I myself have examined them. I do not think there is any dispute about the matter. I think it is agreed that the percentage of tenant farmers has been rapidly increasing for 50 years.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator if the statistics which he is now quoting include what are called share-croppers, operating under a system which prevails throughout my section, and renters, and what are known as "contract" or "day laborers"?

I desire to call the Senator's attention—and in my own time I wish to make some further remarks on the bill—to the fact that throughout the section which I in part represent, those who own the farms, the landlords themselves, work a part of them with what is known as "contract labor." A majority of those workers in the past 15 or 20 years have refused to work at what is known as "contract labor", but they demand to be share-croppers, getting a share of the crop for their wages. Then there is a diminishing number of what are known as "renters"; but in the statistics which are given to the public, the contract hand, the share-cropper, and the renter are all known as "tenants." I dare say that if we should compute throughout the Cotton Belt the percentage of share-croppers in relation to the landlords, it would be found to be two or three to one. I said the other day, and I now repeat, that there are those who own small tracts of land who would prefer to share-crop on some landlord——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will recognize the fact that my time is limited.

Mr. SMITH. Oh! I had forgotten about that. What I have said in enlightening the Senator can be deducted from my time, because I know he desires to know the facts in the district which I in part represent.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield the floor and let the Senator from South Carolina continue, and then I will take it afterward.

Mr. SMITH. No; I want every minute of my time.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether I have any time left. I hope Senators will remember that we are now laboring under a unanimous-consent agreement; and, while I welcome interruptions, I hope Senators will not take my time.

Mr. SMITH. No; I will give that much out of my time so the Senator from Nebraska will not lose any of his time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have before me some of the hearings on this bill. On page 72 of the hearings it is shown by the statistics that in the United States there are 6,288,648 farms, of which 2,604,305 are operated by tenants. All tenants in the United States are 42.4 percent of the whole. Of that number 31.1 percent are white tenants and 11.3 percent are colored tenants. I think those figures practically bear out my statement. I have a map before me which shows that 47 percent of the farms in the State of Nebraska, for instance, are operated by tenants. I also have a statement, to which I referred the other day, showing the number of tenants in Nebraska in other years. In 1880, 18 percent of the farms were cultivated by tenants. The proportion gradually increased, until in 1930, 47 percent of the farms in my State were operated by tenant farmers.

Mr. President, I think that is an alarming condition. The ideal condition in every country such as ours, dependent, in the main, on agriculture, would be a condition where all the farms of the country were tilled and operated by the men who owned them and lived on them as homes. We cannot expect to reach the ideal, but as we approach the other extreme we find a most deplorable condition, if all the farms are to be tilled by men who do not own them. It is unnecessary to comment on the terrible blow to civilization such a condition would present. I am alarmed at the rapid increase in the last 50 years in the operation of farms by tenants. An examination of the records shows that more and more our farms are being tilled by men who are tenants, and are owned by people who are not farmers or who do not live upon the land.

Mr. President, the pending bill has for its object changing that condition. Its primary object is to enable tenant farmers and others who are not on farms to become owners of farms. We ought to encourage such legislation.

It is said that in the management of the corporation there could be a great deal of corruption; that much of evil could creep in. I concede that. I do not think anything is made in an argument by denying what seems to be palpably true. I have said before on the floor of the Senate that the success of the bill, if it shall become a law, will depend more upon its administration than upon anything else. It can be made an abject failure, or, in my judgment, it can be made one of the greatest successes it is possible to imagine.

If we can stop the tendency toward tenant farming and have our land cultivated by men who own the farms and live on them, we will have better farms, we will have better production, we will have better homes, we will have a better civilization all through. It would be a terrible condition if our land were all tilled by tenants.

When we come to the question of limiting the number of acres, referred to the other day, it seems to me such a thing would be impracticable. What would be a good-sized farm in New Jersey would not be a good-sized farm in Iowa, or Montana, or Nebraska, or Kansas. We have to depend upon the administrators of the law. If we shall enact this measure, we will have to place our confidence in them. They can make it a great success or a dismal failure. It seems to me the only theory upon which we can legislate is the theory that our laws are to be honestly, fairly, and economically administered. That is the only theory upon which one can favor this kind of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Nebraska on the motion has expired.

Mr. NORRIS. I shall speak now on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 30 minutes on the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand a motion is pending to refer or commit the bill. Should this bill have gone to the Committee on Banking and Currency, to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry? I concede it might have gone to any one of several committees, such as the Committee on Banking and Currency, perhaps, or one of several others. I believe some reason could be advanced for referring it to the Committee on Commerce, because if the law should be successful, it would greatly increase commerce. However, the most appropriate committee of the Senate, in my judgment, to take charge of a bill like this is the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which deals with the abstract things about which we are legislating, namely, farms, land, homes in the country—not homes in the city but farm homes. Where could we find a committee more appropriate for the consideration of such legislation than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

It therefore seems unreasonable to ask that some other committee consider the measure or that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry consider it again. After all is said and done, the whole thing can be stated in a nutshell, it seems to me. We are confronted with the fact that the farms of our country are gradually being driven into the hands of absentee landlords. Is that a good thing, or is it a bad thing? If it is a good thing, then this bill should be defeated. If it is a bad thing, as I think every man must admit, then some legislation of this kind ought to be enacted.

If there is a better way to handle the matter, I should be glad to support the appropriate measure. If any improvement can be made in the bill I shall be glad to support the proper amendment. But it seems to me that at least we should put the proposed law into operation and see how it will work. It will be a new law. We will find, perhaps, after it has been on the statute books a while, that we ought to change it here or there. That is generally the experience with all legislation of this kind. This is the first step. It is a step in the right direction. It seems to me we ought not to hesitate to take it. Eventually some such step must be taken in this country if we are to sustain and uphold that great portion of our population which comes from the farm and the farm homes.

There is a great deal of difference between a farm being operated by its owner, where he lives and has his home, and one being operated by a tenant, who has no interest whatever in the upbuilding of the farm or the preservation of the natural things which always go with a farm.

It seems to me, therefore, that we can well afford to take this step. In a way it is an experiment, I concede. As I look at it we must perform some experiments, and we never can get a system that will suit every one of us. We will never get one that will be administered with perfection. There will be fraud here and there. I think it is impossible to avoid it. But our aim is toward an ideal, and when we find that it ought to be changed in this particular or that particular we should not hesitate to amend the law. It may be that some of the necessary amendments can now be proposed and added to the bill. It must be conceded, however, it seems to me, that those who are behind the proposed legislation are moved by the very best of motives; and if they attain their object they will greatly assist in producing permanent prosperity in our country, something which has not heretofore existed.

It has been stated as an objection that this is a bill to enable men who own large tracts of land to sell it. Of course, land will have to be sold. There may be fraud somewhere in the operation of the law along those lines. I do not see how that can be avoided. The proposed law could not operate if we could not buy land in order to provide homes for the people we are to put on the land.

If men now own large tracts of land which is unprofitable, and they want to get rid of it, is not the present a good time to start with the experiment? That is just the kind of situation of which we ought to take advantage. If the owners of large tracts of land have been unsuccessful financially in operating the land, and desire to sell, this is the time when we ought to buy. If there is the right kind of administration, the law could be operated with much less money than if we tried to take the land by condemnation. No man could be compelled to sell his land. If a man wants to sell, we shall have to buy, if we carry out the provisions of the proposed law. So instead of being an argument against the bill, it seems to me to be one in favor of it, as it all works harmoniously together, if properly administered, for the benefit of all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no desire to take this bill away from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry ought to deal with the measure. I do feel, however, that the bill ought to go back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I am satisfied that there are provisions which ought to be incorporated in it, so as to put some limitation, some check, some supervisory power over those who are to expend this money.

This is a measure which will naturally lead, unless great caution shall be exercised, to looseness of expenditure of money, and possibly to favoritism. Those possibilities must be carefully guarded against in the bill itself; and even at the best we shall not be able, perhaps, to avoid everything we should like to avoid.

However, Mr. President, I have no desire to send the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I do not think it belongs there. Possibly there are some features of the bill which might be dealt with by the Committee on Banking and Currency, but it is a measure which really belongs to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. However, if a motion is made to send the bill back to the committee for further consideration I shall vote for that motion, not in enmity to the principle involved, but with the desire to see that the measure is more carefully worked out.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, with deference to the Senator from Idaho, I withdraw my motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is there a motion to recommit?

Mr. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Does it specify any particular committee?

Mr. BYRD. I first moved to refer the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I now withdraw that motion and move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I submit to the Senate that the proposal to recommit the bill is intended to kill it. I do not mean that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is engaged in that kind of effort. I know he is not; but the program originated with and was sponsored and is being pressed by those who do not want any revised bill, who do not want any reconstructed bill, but who are opposed to a bill along this line.

Mr. President, this bill has been under consideration by the Senate for practically a week. Many speeches have been made upon it. A number of amendments are pending to it which, in my judgment, are helpful and constructive. Those amendments are yet to be acted on. One of the amendments puts limitations upon the amount to be expended. There are other really helpful amendments. After having directed our thoughts and attention to the bill for almost a week, having these questions fresh in our minds, and being almost ready to deal with each amendment which has been proposed at the end of a week not only by those who wanted to be constructively helpful but by those who want to destroy the bill, and who have introduced amendments which, if adopted, will destroy it, we have the whole program before us.

Why send the bill back at this time simply, forsooth, to write into it in the committee room certain amendments which are pending here in print upon the desks of Senators and a majority of which probably will be accepted without opposition? Why recommit it to the committee simply because there may be one or two amendments which seek to destroy the bill and which will not be incorporated in it by any committee friendly to the bill?

If the majority of the Senate are in accord with this humane and progressive program, if the majority of the Senate are willing to embark upon this new homestead venture, then I submit, Mr. President, that the thing for us to do is to proceed to final action now upon the bill. Suppose it is recommitted, as those who are opposed to the principle of the bill desire, and then there should develop a legislative jam growing out of the pressure of the N. R. A. bill, the social-security bill, the bonus bill, and other controversial measures of that sort which will require day after day and week after week of the time of the Senate. In that event, in view of the opposition which has already developed here against this measure, what chance would there be to have it again considered by the Senate?

We now have the time necessary for the consideration of the bill. We have spent a week in considering its various phases. I appeal to Senators who are friendly to this program and do not want to defeat it to vote down the motion to recommit. We know its purpose. We know its effect. We know that it means killing this bill in an indirect way instead of doing it openly and manfully, if a majority of the Senate wish to kill it.

So I appeal to those who wish to have orderly consideration of this measure upon its merits to vote against the motion to recommit.

If Senators vote to adopt the motion made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], an ardent opponent of this whole program, we may as well say good-bye to the bill and tell the great mass of people who are looking to the future with increased hope since the word has gone out that this measure may pass to forget it, to make their arrangements from year to year in the future as they have in the past, to be gypsies roaming here and there and hunting year by year a place to hang their hats.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about this motion. Senators are voting now either to proceed to final action upon the bill or to kill the bill; and every intelligent man here who knows what is behind this program can well realize that situation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my motion.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, as chairman of the committee from which this bill came, I desire to make a statement.

Since the bill has come to the floor, no one can deny that there has been voiced against it opposition based upon very pertinent and compelling reason and fact.

The system of landlordism and so-called "tenantry" comprises, as I have indicated before, three major divisions, the share-croppers, the landlords, and the contract laborers. I frankly admit that I have not had an opportunity to study this bill textually and understand thoroughly the purport of its different terms and provisions. In the section from which I come the relationship of landlord and tenant is not an arbitrary one. It has grown up under conditions where the landlord and the tenant were about equally financially, with the one difference that unfortunately the landlord owned the land, had to provide and keep the houses and all the implements in order, and pay the taxes, while the tenant himself had no such burden. No thrifty, saving, provident individual has ever lacked the opportunity of owning his own farm, until conditions came to such a pass that I feel I can challenge any man on the floor of the Senate who owns farm land to deny that farm lands in the past 20 years have been a liability rather than an asset.

Increased tenantry and the distress of the farmer did not come by virtue of landlordism. The landlords themselves are being dispossessed every day because there is no return from the land with which to pay their taxes, educate their children, and obtain the common necessities, not to say the luxuries, of life. Eighty-five percent of all the farms of America are under mortgage. Taking advantage of that condition a "goat" has been found, and it is said the landlord is the oppressor. Therefore, the Government will step in and give to those who, by the sifting process and the test of time, have perhaps not measured up to their full opportunities, the use of a billion dollars for 60 years. I will read a paragraph from the bill, but before doing so, let me say to my colleagues on the committee and other Members of the Senate that I am going to vote to recommit the bill, not for the purpose of destroying it but in order to assure that whatever advantage may be proper will be afforded to those who are entitled to it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. LONG. How much of this is going to be left to the discretion of those who are to be appointed to administer the proposed legislation?

Mr. SMITH. It is all going to be left to their discretion.

Mr. LONG. Then, God save us from having anything to do with it!

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me read one paragraph from page 9 of the bill. Subsection (c) there provides:

(c) The Corporation may provide for such amortization periods for the repayment of indebtedness owed to it, and may postpone the date when the initial installment shall be due, as it may deem advisable, but in no event shall the amortization period exceed 60 years.

Now I want to read further from the bill. Just listen to this. Amongst the powers granted to this Corporation, to this Board, it is provided on page 8, section 4:

(3) To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

And such loans may run for 60 years.

Now, is it perfectly fair that those who, by the test of time, are in the class of tenants, share-croppers, and contract laborers shall be granted this largess from the Government with the implication that the landlords have been responsible?

Mr. President, the philosophy of this bill in reference to the farmer is like the story of Pat who was riding an old horse that was so thin that every time he took a step he reeled. Someone said, "Pat, why, in the name of the God of mercy, do you not put more flesh on that horse's bones?" "Hell," said Pat, "he can hardly walk with what he has got; what will he do with any more?" [Laughter.]

Mr. President, it is time for us now to legislate in the light of the facts before us. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] read a list showing the percentage of farm tenants in this country, and he made use of the expression that the landlord, the man who owned the land, should be the one to cultivate it. By the same token the man who owns a factory should be made to run it and all the machinery in it. Why make fish of one and fowl of another? Why invoke the impossible in the case of the farmer, when it is likewise impossible in the case of the industrial plant?

The idea has gone forth that the number of tenants is increasing. Yes, we have tenants right now under the Federal land banks. I know men who are renting from the banks the farms they owned, but which they lost under mortgage to those banks. If we are going to do something constructive here, in the name of reason and common sense, let us get together and make farming profitable. Then we will solve the tenant problem and we will put an end to the weeping and wailing for the laborer and the tenant. Let us make farming profitable. As I said here the other day, $2.50 is paid for a shirt that contains 5 ounces of the simplest kind of white goods. As a result of the manufacturing process, 5 ounces of cotton made into a shirt brings $2.50, while the raw material out of which the shirt is made brings 8 cents a pound. The very material for which he received 8 cents for producing is sold at the rate of $7.50 a pound in a form to go on the farmer's back. Under the magic touch of the loom in a short time the shirt is manufactured, whereas 12 hours a day and 12 months on the farm are required to make a pound of cotton. The fault does not lie here. It lies in the maladjustment of our financial and economic system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from South Carolina on the motion to recommit has expired.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, let me say, in conclusion, that I am going to vote to recommit this bill, not for the purpose of killing it, but for the purpose of affording every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an opportunity to study the bill and to bring back something which will be helpful to the agricultural interests and not be a gift to a certain class.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to respond briefly to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. There was some suggestion—I do not know how far it went—that since the purpose of the bill, as declared on its face, was to arrest and, perhaps, to cure the evil of increasing farm tenancy, those of us who should not support the bill might be considered as not in sympathy with that purpose. I wish to say that I am thoroughly in sympathy with any sound measure, and I will go as far as will anyone else to correct the evils attendant upon the growth of farm tenancy; I should like to see a situation in which every man dwelt under his own vine and fig tree; but, Mr. President, my position in this matter is based on a very simple fact, which is this: We have already provided $500,000,000 to arrest and, so far as we can, to cure the evils of farm tenancy. In order to make that clear, I am going to read from page 3 of the joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes known as the "relief-works measure" carrying $4,880,000,000. This is the language:

Funds made available by this joint resolution may be used, in the discretion of the President—

And the pending legislation also submits the matter to the discretion of the President—for the purpose of making loans to finance, in whole or in part, the purchase of farm lands and necessary equipment by farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers. Such loans shall be made on such terms as the President shall prescribe and shall be repaid in equal annual installments, or in such other manner as the President may determine.

Mr. President, the language I have read makes provision, according to the statement of the author of the pending bill, for the expenditure of $500,000,000 for precisely the same purposes set out in his proposed legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought I made clear the fact that rural rehabilitation as now understood is conducted along temporary relief lines, and is totally distinguishable from a long-range plan covering a 50- or 60-year amortization period.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, granting that the Senator has made that clear, let us read again the language.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to observe to the Senator from North Carolina that, in my opinion, if the President saw fit, he could use every dollar appropriated by the joint resolution for the purposes set forth and described by the language just read by the Senator from North Carolina. I was the author of the amendment to the bill just read by the Senator. There is no limitation on the amount of money the President may allocate from the $4,880,000,000 appropriated for the purpose of financing the purchase of farm lands and equipment for farmers, farm tenants, and croppers. I think a careful reading of the language of the clause, which is very brief, will show that there is power to use more than $500,000,000 for this purpose if the President should see fit so to use it.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator. I am fully in accord with his view, but I thought I would be straining the argument if I should undertake to say that the entire $4,880,000,000 would be made available for this purpose. I know that at least $1,000,000,000 might be made available under the terms of the bill; but, for the purposes of the argument, I am taking the smallest sum, $500,000,000, and saying that we have provided that amount, and that is enough for the present. If the $500,000,000, properly expended in the course of the year or the next 18 months, should give us some assurance that the expenditure of larger sums would be wise, I should be ready to vote for additional sums.

My present view is that we ought not to go into this matter further than to the extent of the sum of half a billion dollars, and that, even if the bill should pass, the sum of half a billion dollars could not be expended and the effect of the expenditure could not be realized until the Congress should have met not only in 1936, but in 1937. Therefore we should be content with the $500,000,000 which we have already authorized, and then await the outcome of the experimentation before we commit ourselves to the expenditure of an additional $1,000,000,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BAILEY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. In yesterday's Washington Post I observed an article by Stanley F. Morse, who, I understand, is a responsible and able newspaperman from South Carolina, in which he made this suggestion:

> If the Government wishes to try out this idea on a small, practical, inexpensive scale, the Federal land banks have plenty of land they could sell to tenants or croppers on easy terms, supplying supervision and production credits to get 50 or 100 tenants (as a beginning) an opportunity to show their stuff. It would be much wiser and safer to follow this simple, workable plan than to undertake a huge, costly, and probably disastrous experiment in social reform based on the failure of similar schemes in other countries.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The statement just made of record does not appear to me to disclose a grasp of the provisions of the bill or the kind of relief which is sought to be extended. I shall not take the time of the Senator from North Carolina to go into it in great detail. I should like the privilege of saying that the Federal land banks cannot make loans which would meet the requirements of the citizens whom this bill is intended to assist. There are several reasons why that is true. In the first place, the land banks are limited by law to about 50 percent of the value of the land. In the next place the terms of the loan are restricted, including the rate of interest, so that the ordinary tenant would be unable to avail himself of a loan from the Federal land banks.

I thank the Senator from North Carolina for yielding.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the time taken up in colloquy is not taken from my time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; it is. The Senator misunderstands the agreement.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not regret having yielded courteously to my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is very kind of the Senator. I shall not interrupt him further, because the time is limited.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Arkansas knows I do not willingly refuse him any reasonable request on earth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from North Carolina on the amendment has expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAILEY. I live to talk another day on another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. If I spoke even a brief time on the bill, that would consume all my time, and I wish to reserve it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in view of the discussion with the Senator from Arkansas, I ask that the article by Stanley F. Morse, which appeared in yesterday's Washington Post, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 21, 1935]

FARM-TENANT PROGRAM WOULD DISTURB SOUTH—NEW BANKHEAD PROPOSAL, ENDORSED BY SOCIAL PLANNERS, CONTEMPLATES REDISTRIBUTION OF LARGE HOLDINGS; WOULD ESTABLISH PEASANTRY

By Stanley Morse

An attack on the cotton-production system of the South so revolutionary and far-reaching as to arouse an antagonism akin to that of the Civil War is contained in the proposed Bankhead Farm Tenant Homes Act now before Congress. This measure, said to be sponsored by Frank Tannenbaum, of the Brookings Institution, and by social planners in the A. A. A. and the F. E. R. A., has been publicly endorsed by Secretary Wallace. It proposes to provide "a democratic system of land tenure * * * in accordance with the example of many other civilized countries."

Since attempts to improve rural conditions by breaking up large land holdings have been made principally by Russia, Mexico, and Spain, it is presumed that this bill contemplates a similar plan to be applied to the cotton plantations of the South. Yet the agrarian policy of these countries has aggravated rather than improved their agricultural conditions. It is paradoxical that a southern Senator is supporting a measure that would result in the eventual destruction of the South's agriculture which, in fact, developed a cotton industry which is the model for most of the foreign countries (including Russia) now building up their own cotton-production systems.

The Farm Tenant Homes Act (S. 2367) is designed to offset the damage done by the A. A. A. cotton program and the Bankhead Cotton Act in forcing thousands of tenants and share-croppers off farms onto relief, although the South is not specifically mentioned. It is a good example of the usual effect of one economic short cut in leading to another perhaps more harmful. It purposes that the Government, through a "farm tenant homes corporation" to be formed, should purchase farm lands and sell them to tenants and share-croppers on easy terms. It would also make loans to these Government-subsidized farmers for livestock, implements, buildings, and production.

This scheme is based on five false assumptions, namely:

1. That tenant farming is an evil, whereas many tenants find it more profitable not to own farms and pay taxes, insurance, repairs, and other overhead expenses. As a matter of fact, many farmers start as tenants and eventually become landowners; these are the capable ones.

2. That of the tenants and share-croppers it is desired to aid (most of whom are submarginal people), probably about 25 percent would be able to operate successfully farms of their own, whereas in the rest of the cases they probably would fail.

3. That small farm units can produce the major farm commodities economically, whereas numerous Government studies have shown that on small farms the higher per acre overhead expenses and the less efficient management usually result in high production costs, and the gross income of small farms frequently is inadequate to support a family.

4. That this project would not increase the unsalable surpluses of farm products to compete with the production of commercial farmers, whereas better land and more money for fertilizer surely would increase the output of these Government-aided farmers.

5. That "many other civilized countries" have developed systems of land tenure superior to that of this country, whereas the American farming system is thought by many to be the best the world has produced and is being imitated widely in other countries.

Lands sold to the Government under the terms of this act would doubtless be priced at double their value, giving landowners an opportunity to unload on the Government. This plan would create uneconomic small farms, increase the production of high-cost surpluses, decrease the farm-labor supply and increase its cost, make tenants and croppers discontented, result in thousands of unsuccessful tenant homesteaders living off the Government, squander more Federal funds, and increase the number of bureaucrats to be supported by the taxpayers.

It would authorize a minimum of $50,000,000 for capital stock to be paid out of funds appropriated by the 1935 Emergency Relief Act and authorize the issuance of $1,000,000,000 of bonds with principal and interest guaranteed by the Government. It would tend to compete with private individuals and concerns engaged in the real-estate, banking, and farming businesses. It could condemn and seize lands by right of eminent domain.

The net result of this scheme would be (a) to establish a Government-sustained peasantry and (b) to upset, instead of improve, the entire economic system of the South. It would have harmful effects on farming in other parts of the country.

If the Government wishes to try out this idea on a small, practical, inexpensive scale, the Federal Land banks have plenty of land they could sell to tenants or croppers on easy terms, supplying supervision and production credits to give 50 or 100 tenant farmers (as a beginning) an opportunity to show their stuff. It would be much wiser and safer to follow this simple, workable plan than to undertake a huge, costly, and probably disastrous experiment in social reform based on the failure of similar schemes in other countries.

Most dangerous is the veiled but nonetheless real purpose to have the Federal Government once again dictate to the South how it shall conduct its own affairs. Such a move, added to the already serious loss of part of the South's cotton-export market, might produce grave reactions.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in his time?

Mr. DICKINSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The entire premise of the article which the Senator has had inserted in the RECORD is, in my opinion, incorrect. As a further illustration that the Federal land bank could not make loans to tenants of this class, a borrower from the land bank must own the land upon which the loan is to be made and must show title. This is a bill to lend him money with which to buy land.

Mr. DICKINSON: In reply to that statement, I wish to suggest that it would be just as easy to amend the Federal land-bank law to extend the full 100-percent credit which it is now desired to have for the purchaser, as it would be for the corporation proposed to be set up by this bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. It would be impossible for the Federal land bank to do that, because the law forbids it and because the Federal land bank must make a loan on a different basis in order to safeguard the bonds outstanding.

Mr. DICKINSON. But allow me to suggest again that it would be just as easy to amend the Federal land bank law as it would be to pass this bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator from Iowa yield? I hope he will yield in order that I may retrieve myself briefly.

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield to enable the Senator to make the statement which he was denied the opportunity heretofore of making.

Mr. BAILEY. I thank the Senator from Iowa. I simply wish to state that the experiment of looking after the tenant farmer, the experiment with reference to the problem of tenancy, is now going on in this country. There is a very large lay-out in the State of Arkansas—I have the report before me—where there are 700 tenants on one tract under the supervision and ownership of the Government. In my own State there is a small colony, as it is called, for which I believe some $900,000 has been appropriated. In addition to that there are now 150,000 tenant farmers on lands in the cotton States under the supervision of the Government of the United States.

All that is proposed to do here is in addition to the tremendous sum of money we have already provided. For that reason I am in favor of recommitting the bill and letting it be drawn in the light of the circumstances, and also so as to provide that when the money shall be expended there will be some sort of check and some sort of restraint upon its expenditure.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire briefly to discuss the motion to recommit.

It is a matter of great regret to me that at least one Senator on this floor who evidently is not opposed to the bill has seen fit to make the decision that he would vote to recommit it under the circumstances which now face us.

It is plain, I think, to anyone who will open his eyes and look that the moving force behind the motion is a desire to defeat the bill. It is impossible for me to believe that one who has listened to the debate and watched the procedure on this measure could escape reaching the conclusion if he should vote to recommit the bill he would be voting to kill it.

I could not, for myself, find much consolation in the arguments made by several of those who have spoken in favor of recommitting the bill. It was difficult for me to see where they had a genuine sympathy pulsating in their hearts for the passage of this measure. When the statement is made that there is a certain amount provided in the general work-relief joint resolution which will last for 18 months or more, and the statement is made that "that is enough for the present", it is difficult for me to believe it is the intention to send the bill back to the committee with any lurking hope that it will be returned to this body.

Of course, it is perfectly proper to take this means of killing the bill; but I should very much regret to see those on this floor who are honestly, conscientiously not only in favor of the objective, as I think most Senators are, but also in favor of attaining that objective by the passage of a bill which will cover the matter in a systematic way, vote to stick a knife in the measure and destroy it and send it to its death by voting to recommit it.

As I see the matter, a vital question of economics and of governmental policy is involved. More than that, there is involved the age-old question as to whether we actually favor the ownership of land by small farmers or whether we honestly favor the ownership of land in large blocks of thousands of acres by corporations or absentee landlords who have it within their power to stifle the initiative and the aggressiveness and the intelligent work of men who ought to be given the privilege of buying those farms.

There is nothing new in this problem. It is as old as the private ownership of land. It is as old as speculation in land. During the 7 years I have been in this body I have heard few objections raised to increasing the amount appropriated to lend money to landlords. I fail to recall many speeches on this floor against lending money through the Federal Land banks to large landowners, even to the extent of twenty-five or thirty or forty or fifty thousand dollars each. I recall how easy it was to increase the appropriation to lend money to landlords through the Federal Land banks. I do not recall a series of motions to recommit in connection with those measures. I do not even recall any motion to recommit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, which was to lend millions and hundreds of millions of dollars to the landlords who own the insurance companies and the railroads.

This is the first measure I recall which has come before this body, certainly during this session, having as its object the lending of money to the forgotten tenant farmers and share croppers, those little men—few of whom vote in most of the sections where they reside—who live upon the fringe and the border line of subsistence.

Mr. President, what is the fundamental distinction and the fundamental difference?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the Senator just one question. In lending the trust funds of the United States, does he make no distinction as between those who are solvent and those who are insolvent?

Mr. BLACK. I tried to make that distinction when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill came up. On this floor I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the railroads were insolvent; that the public knew the railroads were insolvent. I called the attention of the Senate to the fact that not only were the railroads insolvent but thousands of banks were insolvent. I do not know about trying to draw the distinction. I think eight Members of the Senate voted against that bill, and I am glad to say I was one of them.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Does not the Senator know that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has always required adequate security according to the law as enacted by the Congress?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know what adequate security they have required in all cases. I think I know, and I think everybody else knows, that the Government will not collect all the money it has loaned. I do not think anyone will suggest that it will. I do not think anyone will deny that at the time that bill was passed it was generally recognized on this floor that we were voting to lend money to corporations which were insolvent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Alabama on the motion has expired. He has not spoken on the bill, so he has 30 minutes more.

Mr. BLACK. I do not think anyone will deny that there were corporations which were insolvent and which were known to be insolvent; there were banks which were insolvent; there were railroads which were insolvent. The only way in the world by which they could be propped up was by lending the people's money, taken out of the people's pockets, frequently to pay dividends to stockholders and interest to bondholders instead of actually to operate the railroads. Now, however, when we propose a measure to lend money to the millions of little farmers, the little "one-gallus" fellows, the little men who wear overalls, far from the busy haunts of the city, the question is raised, "Can we afford it? Look what a terrible thing it will be to take another billion."

I will admit, my friends, that it is bad to take another billion that we might later be called on to lend to the railroads and the insurance companies. So far as I am concerned, however, I am more willing to jeopardize the credit of the United States Government, if it be such, to lend money to the little individuals who have not had their chance in life, in order that we may help them to buy some of these farms, even from the landlords to whom money has been loaned by the Federal land banks—I am more willing to jeopardize the credit of the Government for that purpose, if it be jeopardizing it, than I am to extend any more loans to prop up the falling business enterprises of this country, to pay dividends and unearned salaries and bonuses out of all decency and just proportion to the labor which those receiving them have performed.

So, there is a fundamental distinction here. The people of Ireland fought over this distinction for a great number of years, and when the tenants failed to obtain the opportunities and decent privileges which others sought to give them throughout decade after decade, it was frequently true that they exacted their rights from behind the hedgerows by methods which we never wish to see occur in this Nation. We know, however, that for more than a century the people of Ireland were faced with the desperate problem of trying to put the lands of that country into the hands of the little man. In this country, when we find tenancy increasing, when we find land ownership concentrating more and more into larger and larger acreage groups and into fewer and fewer hands, we now actually have the sad spectacle of someone saying that he does not want to vote for this bill because, forsooth, it may not be administered exactly as he wants it administered.

If there has ever been a measure brought on this floor which was intended to bring about a more equitable diffusion of the wealth produced by all the people than this bill, I have yet to see it. We might as well say that we would vote against increasing the income and inheritance taxes and imposing a heavier burden upon those who are best able to pay, because the tax law would have to be administered by this administration, as to stand up and say: "We will vote against this bill because it will not be administered by someone we name."

It is true we are going through experiments. I desire to read here, from an editorial published by the Birmingham News, a short paragraph showing some of the good that has been accomplished by this effort to take care of and aid the little man:

> Without credit, cash, and almost without hope, Joe Glass, of Piedmont, Calhoun County, last year was enrolled in the rural-rehabilitation program. Payments on a mortgage of $100 on his 20-acre farm were 4 years in arrears and foreclosure was threatened. He owed back taxes of $14 and other taxes totaling $85. The rural rehabilitation division advanced him $96.49 for groceries, fertilizer, seed, and other necessities throughout the year. He made 4 bales of cotton, 100 bushels of corn, 132 gallons of sirup, 5 bushels of potatoes, 100 pounds of peanuts, 575 bundles of fodder, and 4 tons of hay. He repaid the A. R. A. $23 in cash, the remainder in labor. He paid the mortgage and all interest. He paid the back taxes and he paid all other debts. He bought some paint and painted his home, thanked the Alabama Relief Administration, and bade good-bye to relief and rehabilitation. This year he will operate his farm without help from any source.

This man happened to have a small 20-acre farm. Hundreds of thousands of others did not. The condition dealt with by this bill is not limited to any one section of the Nation. It exists all over the country. Even in the great, rich State of Illinois, in the most fertile section of that great State, the evidence shows that from 70 to 80 percent of the farms in the best prairie counties are operated by tenants; and yet we are told that it is dangerous to the credit of the Government to provide for an issue of bonds to the extent of a billion dollars to try to give these men an opportunity to stand up as self-respecting, decent citizens, and buy their land and become good citizens of the Republic.

Let us not make any mistake.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] a few moments ago placed in the RECORD an article every premise of which I then stated was, in my opinion, unsound.

One of the statements in that article is:

> The net result of this scheme—

Referring to the bill now before the Senate—> would be (a) to establish a Government-sustained peasantry and (b) to upset instead of improve the entire economic system of the South. It would have harmful effects on farming in other parts of the country.

The article goes on to show that the system which prevails in the South, the one which has been described here, and the one which prevails also in many other sections of the country, including some States of the West, a system under which land tenancy has rapidly increased, is the most admirable system that has ever been worked out.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, that admirable system seems to have caused the farms of Iowa to be operated 47.3 percent by tenants.

Mr. ROBINSON. And in some other States 68 percent by tenants.

Mr. BLACK. Certainly. That may be the best method of operating farms in this country. If a Senator believes that to be so he should vote to recommit the bill. I do not hesitate to say that if I thought the welfare of this Nation could be best served by having all of the land owned by a few people, instead of having all of the land owned by many people with small farms and homes to which they could go at night with the knowledge that even though the land might be poor, it was their land, if they met their obligations, I would vote to recommit the bill. But I subscribe to a different idea. I believe a nation can come nearer achieving a great and glorious destiny if the land as well as the income of the nation is more equitably distributed among those who produce and those who labor. At least in the State in which I live I prefer to have thousands and hundreds of thousands of small farmers interested in preserving the soil, interested in protecting it from the erosion of time, interested in going to little homes they may have built, painting them with what little paint they can buy, interested in making improvements in those homes as there may be additions in their families from year to year, interested in the homes being increased in size with knowledge on their part that those homes are theirs.

I have heard some say that the object we have in mind is idealistic, and simply the thought of a dreamer. Some have said that the people do not have the initiative to take advantage of such a law. How do we know they do not have the initiative? The same comment was made about what was done in Ireland. Yet through lending money there, not for 60 years, but for 80 years, they have brought about a redistribution of the land and have put on the soil of Ireland thousands and hundreds of thousands of small farmers, to work out their destiny, with loyalty to their people and to their ideals.

Mr. President, that is what I want in the State from which I come and in the Nation in which we live. I want to see a stop put to the steady progression toward more and more ownership of the soil in this country by a few people, some of them a thousand miles away. It has even gone to such an extent, I was told by one sitting close to me on this floor several days ago, that a very large area of the land in his State is owned by corporations engaged in the farming business. What we propose to do is to provide a cheap method whereby the credit of the United States Government shall be loaned, not merely, as it has been in the past, to the stupendous business enterprises in order that great dividends may be paid, but to the little man.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator propose that the Government shall lend its funds to tenants in order that they may buy lands from the corporations, which the Senator is denouncing?

Mr. BLACK. I do not denounce the corporations, except as they may engage in farming. I do not believe in corporate farming.

If the Senator can suggest any method whereby the farmers can get land without buying it from somebody who has it, then I shall be willing to subscribe to the other method. Does the Senator want to take the lands away from the corporations?

Mr. BAILEY. I will suggest a method right now.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator want to take it away from them by law?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator asked me to suggest a method, and I will suggest one. Pass the pending bill, and repudiate the bonds.

Mr. BLACK. If the Senator favors that, that is perfectly all right.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that will be the inevitable consequence if we keep on spending money as we are spending it.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, there comes the old objection, "Spending money! Spending money!" Whose money is it, anyway? Who makes the money? The people of this Nation make it. It is to the interest of the people of this Nation that we try to do what will be for the benefit of all the people, instead of for the benefit of a small, select group of people, as was the case under the old, antiquated system from which we are trying to get away, and which caused the complete collapse in 1929.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him once more?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand the Senator's argument to be that the tenant will get the credit, and this small group will get the cash. I think he is making his argument for the small group.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator misunderstood my argument if he understood it to mean what he says he conceived it to mean. I did state that it is easy enough to try to find reasons why one should not favor the little man owning the farm. One of the easiest things to urge, of course, is that they have to buy the land from someone who has it.

How else can a farmer get land? We have ownership of land in this country, and unless we want to abandon the principle of ownership of land, or socialize all the land, there is no earthly chance for a tenant to get the land except by buying it. He himself can either buy the land—which is practically impossible, as has been shown by past history—or he can be afforded governmental assistance. In either instance, the only chance he has to obtain any land is to have it purchased from those who own it, whether they are corporations or individuals.

The pending bill tends toward this objective; it tends toward increasing the number of small farmers in this Nation who will own their land and love their homes. It seems to me a little strange that credit is always safe so long as it is utilized for those who need it least; without hesitation billions of dollars have been appropriated for the benefit of those who have little need, but there is opposition when it comes to those who need assistance and need it desperately, as do these tenants, hidden down on the banks of the creek, behind the canebrake, under the old pine trees. The very moment we propose to provide a method of relief for those who need it most, we find that the last straw has come to break the camel's back.

Mr. President, I am not afraid that such a measure as that before us will strain the credit of the Government, or destroy the Government. Governments are not destroyed in that way. Governments are destroyed by dissatisfaction and discontent and rebellion and revolution among the masses, who find themselves trampled upon and oppressed under conditions from which it is impossible for them to escape.

I do not anticipate that making it possible for millions, or for 500,000, or 200,000, or whatever number we desire to say, to buy land upon which they can live, where they can attach themselves to the land and become real lovers of the soil, will destroy their Government. I hope that the bill will not be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I believe that I am as strongly in favor of a country of home owners as is any advocate of the pending measure. I am in favor of adopting all rational means that will bring about economic conditions under which the tenant farmer can, if he desires, buy a home and pay for a home. I hope that that ideal can be made real.

Oklahoma is for the most part a State of small landowners. We have large estates in Oklahoma. Lands in our State were settled under the homestead laws. This necessitated and insured small holdings, at least in the first instance. Our people have adhered to that plan and that policy.

Oklahoma was settled by pioneers, pioneers who sought homes on the frontier, who builded their own homes. This day is the 46th anniversary of the original opening of Oklahoma Territory. It is a day historic in the annals of the American pioneer. It was dramatized by the historic "run" on the part of the home seekers. It is a day that we still commemorate in Oklahoma and upon which we pay merited homage to the sturdy pioneers who set a new star in that constellation which blazes upon Old Glory.

I think that the pending measure ought to be sent back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry or to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I believe every safeguard ought to be erected to insure a wise and judicious administration of the proposed law, and to safeguard it against possible abuses—abuses which, as I interpret the bill as now drawn, might easily creep into the administration of the law; abuses which might not reflect any particular credit upon the prudence and vigilance of Congress in enacting legislation, appropriating such large sums, even though dedicated to bringing about the ownership of homes throughout the country.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] a moment ago alluded to the Dyess colony in Arkansas, where some 700 homes have been built in furtherance of one of the subsistence homestead or rural rehabilitation projects; I do not recall the exact title of the project.

I have understood, though I may have been misinformed, that Mr. Dyess, in whose honor the colony is named, was at one time in the employ of the owner of the land on which this colony is located. I do not know whether that is true or not. If it is true, I think that fact ought to be developed when the pending measure is sent back to the committee. The project is located in Mississippi County, Ark. Much of the land, as I have been informed, is owned by the largest individual cotton planter on the globe, and Mr. Dyess, according to my information, was formerly in his employ.

Mr. Dyess has 700 houses, some of which, and perhaps many of which, are located on land, according to this story, owned by his former employer. That story may be true and it may be entirely untrue; I do not know as to that; but at least it raises a warning that the pending measure ought to be so safeguarded as to protect Congress, protect the administration, and protect the Treasury against abuses which might creep in as the measure is now drawn. If the measure is sent back, I hope this project and one other project which I have in mind will be looked into, Mr. President.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. If a land-colonization plan of this kind is necessary, I am wondering why it could not be tried out in Alabama. We in Iowa will consent to letting them have an Alabama program or an Oklahoma program, but why involve the credit of the Federal Government?

Mr. GORE. I think if the bill goes back to committee, a study should be made of these subsistence homesteads to see if they give sufficient promise to justify our proceeding with them. Perhaps sufficient experience has not been accumulated, yet some lesson might be learned from the programs and experiences already had. I know of one. Another of these colonizations I should like to see investigated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to recommit the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk called the roll.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and will vote. I vote "nay."

I am not advised as to how the senior Senator from Pennsylvania or the junior Senator from Utah would vote if present.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I also announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]; and I am requested to say that the Senator from Nevada, if present, would vote "yea", and the Senator from Georgia, if present, would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. METCALF (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. METCALF. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. NYE. My colleague [Mr. FRAZIER], who is unavoidably absent, has a pair on this question with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay", and the Senator from Connecticut would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who are paired on this question. If the Senator from Kansas were present, he would vote "yea", and if the Senator from Wyoming were present, he would vote "nay."

I announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays, 44, as follows:

YEAS—37

Adams	Clark	Hastings	Smith
Austin	Coolidge	Johnson	Steiwer
Bailey	Copeland	Keyes	Townsend
Barbour	Couzens	King	Truman
Bone	Dickinson	Lonergan	Vandenberg

NOT VOTING—14

Capper	McAdoo	Norbeck	Thomas, Utah
Davis	McCarran	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Frazier	Maloney	Pittman
George	Metcalf	Pope

So Mr. BYRD's motion to recommit the bill was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 2 to the bill and concurred therein; that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 3, 4, 33, and 34 to the bill and concurred therein, severally with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate; and that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate nos. 23, 24, and 25 to the bill.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, at this time I wish to complete my remarks relative to the letter of September 8, 1934.

Some of my friends on the floor have been led into error due to some remarks made by the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Some of them understood that I was either criticizing or defending one or the other of the administrators of the relief fund in the State of Tennessee. I had not risen for that purpose. I had intended to close my remarks by sending to the desk this letter and asking that it be incorporated in the RECORD, so that Senators and others might read it; but before I could complete my remarks and submit the request I was interrupted by my friend from Tennessee, who had just entered the Chamber and evidently had been informed on the outside that I had made some statement, which I deny the intent of making or that I have made.

What I had done was to read a few lines from a letter. This is not my letter. If the time has come in the Senate that I am no longer going to be allowed to read reports from the new deal without having to fear being assailed as to my motives, or as to the honesty of somebody whom I have never seen and concerning whose honesty or dishonesty I am in no way concerned one way or the other, I feel that I shall be placed at disadvantage which my colleagues do not intend.

When my misinformed colleague from Tennessee returned to the Chamber and took me to task concerning some man down in the bullrushes of Tennessee whom I do not know, I was reading this letter.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The gentleman to whom the Senator refers does not come from Tennessee at all. I was informed that he came from Georgia, but I asked the Senators from Georgia about him and they never even heard of him. I do not know where he came from. Until the Senator resurrected him I thought he had passed out.

Mr. LONG. I did not resurrect him. My friend from Tennessee very honestly gets the wrong idea sometimes. Because he said the horse is 16 feet high he has to be 16 feet high and cannot be 16 hands high. [Laughter.]

I am reading from a report of the "new deal" government or the "raw deal" government, whichever one may desire to call it:

Federal Emergency Relief Administration, Regional Headquarters, Southeastern Area, 10 Forsyth Street Building, Atlanta, Ga., September 8, 1934.

I read the following extract and I am going to offer the entire letter for the RECORD.

Status of reorganization of the accounting division.

Mr. W. M. Duncan was appointed auditor of the Tennessee C. W. A. in December 1933. He was a C. P. A.—

That means a certified public accountant, I understand—and apparently had excellent references and agreed to carry out the policies of the C. W. A.

They do not say what the policies were.

By the 1st of February in 1934 it was apparent that Mr. Duncan was not qualified for the position. It was also ascertained that he was being controlled by the same political ring that controlled Mr. Menzler.

I do not know to what political ring they are referring, but I wish to say that if this is a reflection upon the political ring with which my friend the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is in any way identified, I myself resent it. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, that is very kind of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will suspend. The present occupant of the chair has not cleared the galleries since he has been Vice President. Each guest of the Senate, as he enters the gallery, is handed a little slip on which he is requested respectfully to refrain from laughter, audible conversation, or anything tending to disturb the proceedings of the Senate. I hope our guests will refrain from any aspects of laughter.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Louisiana, but I never heard of Mr. Duncan. I do not know what organization he is for or against in Tennessee. I know no such man as the Senator describes. I myself am not allied with any ring of any kind, nature, or description in Tennessee. I hope I have the backing and good will of the people there. I certainly have very much desired their backing and good will.

I am sure the Senator is misinformed about the matter concerning which he is talking. The Senator, as I understood this morning, said something about a man by the name of Simpson and charged the administration with having removed him. The administration did remove Mr. Simpson, but removed him at my earnest request because I thought he was wholly incompetent, wholly inefficient, and not at all the proper man to have in charge down there. They finally agreed with me and removed him, I believe to the great credit of the administration and to the great benefit of my State.

Mr. LONG. That does not cover the point. I was merely stating that this letter says that two men named Menzler and Duncan, who were in charge in Tennessee, were found to be connected with a very bad political set down there and therefore they had to be removed. I understood that a man named Simpson succeeded a man named Menzler. That is all I know. I am now told that later Simpson was removed and somebody else was taken back, and that with him was put back this man Duncan. Their report states he was not only inefficient, but was hooked up with a dirty ring down there.

The point I am making is this: I want to have it understood that these criminations and recriminations are not alone confined to Louisiana. Notwithstanding the fact that Louisiana never did have anything to do with the appointing or removing of either one of them and does not want to have anything to do with the appointing or removing of either one of them, down in Tennessee, where they appointed and removed them, they have had to start down the list again. From what I understand, Mr. Duncan is back again, notwithstanding the report that he is inefficient, incompetent, corrupt, can be bought, and is mixed in with a worse political ring than the first one.

Mr. MCKELLAR. He must be from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I do not think he is.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I never heard of the man. I have my doubts whether he is a Tennessean, if I may judge from the Senator's description. I do not think there is a "dirty ring" down there.

Mr. LONG. I, too, doubt it.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I myself doubt it.

Mr. LONG. I never saw a bad ring in my life. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have seen them and so has the Senator, but the Senator does not make one simply by saying there is one. I think the Senator has enough to do in his own State without trying to come up to Tennessee and run that State. Frankly, so long as the Senator undertakes to bring in Tennessee, he is going to hear from me right along. I am not in favor of Mr. Duncan, if he is a bad man. I do not know where he came from. I do not care where he came from. If he is not the right kind of an official, I am against him. I am sure the Senator knows I would not stand for any man in public office who did not regard it as a public trust and who did not act honestly.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk this letter both recommending Simpson and condemning Duncan in order that it may be incorporated in the RECORD so that the present employees administering the funds may understand.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY RELIEF ADMINISTRATION,
REGIONAL HEADQUARTERS—SOUTHEASTERN AREA,
Atlanta, Ga., September 8, 1934.

MEMORANDUM

To: Mr. Corrington Gill, assistant administrator.
From: Robert B. Watson, regional field examiner.
Subject: Progress report on reorganization of the accounting and auditing department of the Tennessee Emergency Relief Administration.

You have received this week two wires stating that the accounting and auditing division of the Tennessee Emergency Relief Administration was in process of reorganization. On Thursday we had a lengthy telephone conversation in reference to this situation. In view of the fact that it was impossible to give you a complete picture of the situation at that time, in satisfactory manner, I am presenting this progress report so as to enable you to intelligently answer any questions which may be raised at the Washington office.

INTRODUCTION

The present crisis in the accounting and auditing department can only be viewed intelligently against the background of the past 2 years' experience in Tennessee. The administration of relief never got started properly. The first relief commission in Tennessee, which was organized by the Emergency Relief Division of the R. F. C. in October 1932, was constituted by the State Highway Department of Tennessee. The highway commissioner was chairman of the relief commission. Funds received by the relief commission or the highway department were disbursed by the accounting division of the highway department under the regulations of the State. Using their previous experience in disbursing highway funds they organized a disbursement plan calling for a centralized system. This meant that pay rolls, relief bills, and administrative expenses were all disbursed through the State office. The program itself was never conceived on a decentralized basis, whereas they had county relief committees that had little actual responsibility and at the start were purely political in character. Mr. Roland Haynes, the field examiner of the R. F. C. at that time, succeeded in extending the commission to include other representatives of the State government and the public but the actual administration and the details of the work were carried out by the highway department. This continued until the close of the R. F. C. administration in May of 1933. At that time the accounting division of the highway department was writing from 500,000 to 600,000 checks a month in the State office.

At the start of the F. E. R. A. every effort was made to change the administration set-up, and in the last week of June the Governor appointed the relief commission, to be known as the "Tennessee Emergency Relief Administration", to which commission no representative of the highway department was appointed. Pressure was brought to bear upon the Governor to take away the machinery of the accounting division and statistical division from the highway department, but he successfully resisted the efforts made at that time. In September renewed efforts were made to bring the accounting department over from the highway department to the Tennessee Emergency Relief Administration. By that time the situation was quite deplorable; bills were being piled up, disbursements were unsatisfactory, and there was much friction between the accounting department of the highway department and the officials of the Tennessee Emergency Relief Administration. However, Mr. Johnstone and I obtained an agreement from the Governor that the situation would be corrected, and this agreement was approved by the commissioner of the highway department, and to which the administrator, Mr. Menzler, also agreed. This agreement was obtained about the 1st of October.

When the C. W. A. was inaugurated it was insisted by both Mr. Johnstone and myself that an accounting division must be established in the Tennessee E. R. A. for the accounting and reporting of all C. W. A. funds. It was agreed that along with that should be the accounting and reporting of the F. E. R. A. funds as well. The accountant of the highway department, who was relying upon the staff of his office, which was then doing F. E. R. A. work for his own highway work, resisted all efforts to make this change. Further efforts were dropped during the rush of C. W. A.

In February of 1934 it was apparent that the administrative head of the Tennessee E. R. A. was unsatisfactory and a change would have to be made. As a consequence of the change which took place it was insisted that the disbursing and accounting of F. E. R. A. funds would be transferred from the highway department of the Tennessee E. R. A. and that the Tennessee E. R. A. would disburse all F. E. R. A. funds. After a week's campaign with the Governor and other officials, this was finally obtained, and so the present accounting department of the Tennessee E. R. A. really dates from the 1st of February 1934.

STATUS OF REORGANIZATION OF THE ACCOUNTING DIVISION

Mr. W. M. Duncan was appointed auditor of the Tennessee C. W.A. in December 1933. He was a certified public accountant and apparently had excellent references and agreed to carry out the policies of the C. W. A.

By the 1st of February in 1934 it was apparent that Mr. Duncan was not qualified for the position. It was also ascertained that he was being controlled by the same political ring that controlled Mr. Menzler. So it was felt advisable to make a change in the head of the accounting division as well as the administrator. Mr. Johnstone and I were both in Nashville for a week during the process of the change. Colonel Simpson, who replaced Mr. Menzler, asked Mr. Johnstone to make and approve recommendations for the staff. I agreed to make an investigation as to available accountants. Because the situation had to be handled quickly and knowing that Mr. Duncan was vice president of the Tennessee C. P. A. Association, I asked for his recommendation as to his successor, and his recommendation included that of Mr. C. P. Harris along with others. It was soon ascertained that Mr. Harris was the outstanding candidate in the group, and within 24 hours he was appointed and installed.

I spent some time with Mr. Harris going over the C. W. A. situation and also the F. E. R. A. division. Mr. Duncan agreed to remain for a week or so in order to give Mr. Harris a picture of his work. Right in the midst of this situation I received word from the Washington office to return and get ready to go to Puerto Rico immediately. While in the Washington office it was agreed that Mr. Hickerson, an assistant field examiner, would be assigned to my territory in my absence, with the instructions to go immediately to Tennessee and assist Mr. Harris in his reorganization. I went over the ground thoroughly for an entire day with Mr. Hickerson, with various specific instructions to carry out.

Upon my return from Puerto Rico I went immediately to Tennessee and found that Mr. Hickerson had carried out the instructions to the letter. I spent some time with Mr. Harris and emphasized that the accounting department in the Tennessee F. E. R. A. would never be satisfactory to me until it had been decentralized entirely. I pointed out that Tennessee was the only State which maintained the centralized accounting control, as well as the cumbersome centralized disbursing system. He agreed in general, but felt that the C. W. A. procedure had worked out so satisfactorily that it would be unwise to carry out decentralization at that time. Colonel Simpson, the administrator, was also opposed to the idea. Both men felt at that time that it would be unwise to place any responsibility on the local units, and, furthermore, that there was insufficient trained personnel in the county units to hold up such a system. However, after having Colonel Simpson talk to Mr. Johnstone on the wire, the colonel finally agreed to make an attempt, and specific instructions were given to Mr. Harris to take steps immediately to decentralize his system. I furnished him with copies of all the forms used in the other States and stated to him that by the 1st of April I expected him to be ready to inaugurate his plan, and if he would submit his system to me for approval I would spend some time with him helping him to get started.

Some acute problems arose in my other States during April and May, and I could not carry out the close supervision which I had promised but did keep in touch with the situation from time to time, by wire and telephone. At the end of May, just before my second trip to Puerto Rico, Mr. Harris stated that he was starting to decentralize and so I felt confident that some progress was being made.

I had not been able to return to Tennessee until August 23. On August 24 and 25 I spent the day and a half going over the entire system and as a result of my investigation I disclosed the following points:

(1) No steps had been taken to decentralize the accounting system beyond disbursing the pay rolls in 39 of the 95 countries.

(2) Mr. Harris was still opposed to decentralization although he was willing to follow my instructions in carrying out the plan.

(3) Mr. Scott, his assistant, was also opposed to decentralization.

(4) In spite of trips taken by Mr. Harris and Mr. Scott to survey the Georgia office and also a trip to Washington to consult with you and Mr. Carr, there was a complete lack of understanding as to what was required in the accounting division.

(5) There were 106 employees in the State accounting and disbursing office.

(6) Colonel Simpson reported that he had been able to weed out all employees whom he felt were in any way connected with the political machine of Tennessee with the exception of the employees in the accounting division. On numerous instances Mr. Harris had failed to carry out the instructions of Colonel Simpson in reference to dismissing inefficient employees.

(7) It was very obvious that the personnel of the accounting division were very inefficient and the work was carelessly done, and when I charged Mr. Harris and Mr. Scott with the responsibility of this situation they put up the alibi that they were not responsible for the employees of their division.

(8) On several instances Colonel Simpson had received reports in regard to members of the field auditing staff which tended to definitely show they were playing politics in the field at the behest of the political machine of Tennessee.

(9) Neither Mr. Harris nor Mr. Scott were familiar with the F. E. R. A. accounting manual and no attempt had been made to instruct the field force or the local units as to correct accounting and auditing procedure. No manual for the State of Tennessee was contemplated.

(10) The outstanding commitments of the F. E. R. A. were not ascertainable and could not be obtained as of August 1.

(11) A report had been submitted to Colonel Simpson by Mr. Meiers, the statistician, that apparently Tennessee E. R. A. has run anywhere from $700,000 to $1,000,000 in the red for the month of August.

When this situation was reported to Mr. Harris he had no explanation and stated that he could not ascertain it accurately.

As a result of the foregoing facts, I have discussed the entire situation with Colonel Simpson and recommended that he ask for Mr. Harris' and Mr. Scott's resignations immediately. The situation was reported to Mr. Johnstone, the field representative, and he approved the action.

At this stage of the investigation we were all called into Washington for a conference on August 27–29. In the meantime, I surveyed the personnel of the State offices in the Southeastern States and determined upon Mr. John Tarleton, of Georgia, to take over the accounting division temporarily, if Miss Shepperson and Mr. Johnstone agreed. This approval was obtained during the conference at Washington and I also obtained Mr. J. M. Jordan, former assistant field examiner of the F. E. R. A., to act as Mr. Tarleton's assistant during the process of reorganization. It was agreed that we would meet in Nashville on August 31 to make plans for reorganizing the entire accounting and auditing system for the State E. R. A. in accordance with instructions from the field examiner.

PROGRESS MADE FROM SEPTEMBER 1 TO 6, INCLUSIVE

(1) Colonel Simpson requested the resignation of Mr. C. P. Harris and Mr. Scott on Saturday morning, September 1, to be effective September 15. He instructed both Mr. Harris and Mr. Scott to take 2 weeks' vacation between the 1st and 15th and to have their desks available on Tuesday morning.

(2) The week-end was spent in going over the entire background of the previous history of the accounting division with Mr. Tarleton and Mr. Jordan.

(3) Conferences were held by Mr. Tarleton and Mr. Jordan with two or three division heads in the accounting department relative to the present procedure in the accounting division.

(4) Colonel Simpson appointed Mr. Tarleton and Mr. Jordan as acting State auditor and acting assistant State auditor, respectively.

(5) On Tuesday morning Colonel Simpson, Mr. Tarleton, Mr. Jordan, and the regional field examiner talked to the group of 106 employees of the accounting division with the following results:

(a) Mr. Tarleton requested the resignation of the entire 106 of employees immediately. After receiving these resignations he said the acceptance of the resignations would be determined on the basis of efficiency and asked the employees for their 100-percent cooperation.

(b) The field examiner spoke to the employees and stated the purposes of the F. E. R. A. and the necessity for complete reorganization of the accounting and disbursing division.

Later in the day Colonel Simpson and Mr. Tarleton and Mr. Jordan met with the field staff of 16 or 17, and 7 resignations were accepted in the afternoon. It was discovered that these seven men were not qualified as accountants, to say nothing of their qualifications for field work; had been inefficient generally, and were the ones the colonel knew had engaged in political activities to a greater or lesser degree.

(6) It was mutually agreed by Mr. Tarleton, Mr. Jordan, Colonel Simpson, and myself that Mr. Tarleton would have charge of the entire reorganization and that Mr. Jordan would be responsible for establishing the field work throughout the State.

CONCLUSION

In a process of investigating the qualifications of the employees of the accounting division, some interesting facts were disclosed.

One field auditor presented as his sole experience, being a timekeeper and blacksmith on a C. W. A. project. His next position was field auditor for the F. E. R. A. The head of the bookkeeping department presented an experience as follows:

Postmaster of a small town in Tennessee; 10 years as head yard master for the L. & N. Railroad yards, in Nashville; cashier of a grocery store. His next position was head of the bookkeeping department of the State C. W. A.

It was also ascertained on very good evidence that the leading bootlegger in Nashville is a member of the disbursing office of the State F. E. R. A. Two members of the disbursing office and one member of the bookkeeping department have definite criminal records. Further analysis of the qualifications of the bulk of the 106 employees discloses a situation, amounting well-nigh to a scandal. Colonel Simpson has exercised every effort to keep the situation from the newspapers and I have given specific instructions to Mr. Tarleton with the 100-percent support of Colonel Simpson to get rid of all the inefficient employees immediately, if it takes the entire 106. It is to be emphasized that throughout the process of this reorganization the colonel is asking for and accepting all resignations on the recommendation of Mr. Tarleton.

I am leaving on my vacation on September 7 and will return to Tennessee immediately at the end of 1 week's time, about September 15. Mr. Tarleton has stated that, bad as the situation is, he feels that he can have his system very well organized by the time of the regional conference and it is my hope that Mr. Tarleton will be able to present an interesting progress report on Tennessee. At that time, you will get first-hand in much more detail some of the disclosures which were made in the investigation.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT B. WATSON,
Regional Field Examiner.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. COUZENS. May the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of subsection (d) on pages 4 and 5 down to and including the word "authority" on line 25, page 5, and line 1, page 6.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like those who are in favor of the bill to understand that this is a very vital amendment, and that its adoption would eliminate from the bill all authorization for a bond issue; and if the amendment should prevail it would, in my judgment, take the very heart out of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Arkansas takes his seat, may I ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Would not the adoption of the amendment still leave available all the money that was made available for the purpose in the work-relief joint resolution, namely, $500,000,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not understand that the adoption of the amendment would strike anything out of the work-relief joint resolution. My statement is that it would take the heart out of the bill, and I think that is correct.

Mr. BAILEY. It would take a billion dollars out of the bill, but it would leave the mechanics of the bill to operate on the $500,000,000 which is available under the work-relief joint resolution. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. ROBINSON. It would leave in the bill the $50,000,000 for stock to be subscribed by the President.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am in full accord with the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas. Whatever the possibilities may be under the work-relief joint resolution, we know as a matter of fact that that money is not going to be transferred to this corporation; so it is simply a question of whether we are going to give them this possible asset, this bond issue which can be made only with the approval of the Treasury Department. We know, as a matter of practical affairs, that the $500,000,000 appropriation for rehabilitation work is to be used along entirely different lines, and the only prospect we have is to get $50,000,000 out of it and no more. So, if this paragraph is eliminated, the heart of the bill is gone. There will be no appropriation.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama answer a question for me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will if I can.

Mr. LONG. How many of these so-called "share-tenant" people is the bill to take care of?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope it will take care of at least half a million of them before we get through; but this is a long-range program. It is not intended to go into operation for a day or a year. It is to be worked out gradually under the authorization proposed to be given.

Mr. LONG. I understood that there was a total of a billion and a half dollars; or is there just a billion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just a bond issue for a billion; that is all.

Mr. LONG. I do not see how very many share-tenant people can be taken care of with that amount. That would be $200 to the man, would it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; $2,000. Half a million people would be taken care of under the bond issue.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before the question is put on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, let me say that while I wish to support the pending bill I think the time has come—indeed, it is overdue—when the Government should cease to issue any more bonds with the tax-exempt privilege. The Federal Government and the States are breaking down, they are bogging down, beneath the weight of tax-exempt securities. I, therefore, move to strike out, in line 20, page 5, beginning with the word "The", the following language:

The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes), now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

The interest on the bonds issued by the Corporation shall be subject to taxation as other income.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if the bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are tax-exempt.

Mr. ASHURST. The bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as I recall, are not tax-exempt, and, in my judgment, they should not be.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bonds are all in the Treasury. There are none in the hands of the public.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Then, I should like to say that, while I am opposed to the issuance of tax-exempt securities, I do not like to start the innovation of taxing the income from bonds which have relation to indebtedness assumed by farmers. Necessarily, if they are taxed they will have to bear a higher rate of interest than they will if they are tax exempt, and that means that the farmer will have to pay the tax. He will pay it in a higher rate of interest.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator means that the interest will be added to his total investment, and thereby his investment will be larger, and his debt will be greater.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should be lacking in candor if I failed to say that in my efforts to prevent the issuance of tax-exempt securities I have always had the hearty and able support of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. Of course, no matter where we begin the effort to prevent the further issuance of tax-exempt securities, we are always met with the argument that "this is not the place where the movement should be inaugurated. We have exempted from taxation other securities, why start here?"

We must begin somewhere. All too soon there will come a day when we shall have to commence practicing economy. There will come a day when we shall have to begin to stop the issuance of tax-exempt securities by the Federal Government, and the States likewise will be obliged to take similar action. This bill contemplates a bond issue of a billion dollars. I assert here, and I call upon members of the Finance Committee to bear me out, that the fact that a bond carries the tax-exempt privilege does not promote its sale. Three Secretaries of the Treasury have advised to that effect.

I submit the amendment. I do not wish to take any more time, except to sound a note of warning: The Federal Government will bog down, the States will bog down, stagger, surrender completely under a load of debt if we continue to permit persons and corporations to have their strongboxes rich and plethoric with tax-exempt securities. Tax-exempt securities cannot be defended.

I hope the amendment I propose will be agreed to at this time.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I rise to inquire whether the matter proposed by the Senator from Arizona to be stricken out is not included in the motion to strike out made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and whether it is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is in order to perfect the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona is in order, because it undertakes to perfect the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina before the Senate votes on it. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. DICKINSON and other Senators called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement in connection with the motion made by the Senator from Arizona.

I heartily agree with all the Senator from Arizona says about the impropriety of the issuance of tax-exempt securities as a general proposition. I have supported every measure which has been proposed in the Senate since I have been a Member of this body to change our present national policy of issuing tax-exempt securities.

Mr. ASHURST. I bear witness to that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have done so for the reasons so very ably described by the Senator from Arizona. However, in this bill there is a distinct provision that—

> The rate of interest to be charged by the Corporation upon indebtedness owed to it shall be at as low a rate of interest as the Government can secure the money, and may include a reasonable charge to be applied toward the expenses of administering the provisions of this act.

In other words, Mr. President, if we should make these bonds subject to taxation, and therefore provide a higher rate of interest on the bonds issued to finance the operations of this corporation, seeking, as it will, to provide homes for tenants and those who are least able to pay a higher rate of interest, we would have forced a higher rate of interest on those least able to pay it. We all know that if these bonds alone of the vast amount of Government securities now in circulation are subject to taxation, a higher rate of interest will be required to place them on the market than on issues of other Government securities. We will be providing for a higher rate of interest upon those least able to pay it, the men we are attempting to rehabilitate, and afford opportunities of owning farms.

For this reason, I shall deviate from my policy of voting against the issuance of tax-exempt securities, because I do not intend to see that policy adopted only in providing credit for the most impoverished class of our people, those who have had less advantages in this country than any other class of citizens.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

As I remember the language the Senator undertakes to strike out, it provides, not that the bonds shall be entirely exempt from taxation, but only partially so.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Under the provision as it now reads the bonds are to be exempt only from the normal tax. The bonds will not be exempt as to the surtax, the inheritance tax, the estate tax, or the gift tax.

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. ASHURST. My amendment, if adopted, would simply remove the exemption as to the normal tax.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly.

Mr. ASHURST. That is the way I understand it. It would strike out certain provisions, and then it would read, "the interest on the bonds issued by the Corporation shall be subject to taxation as other income."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that brings up a point to which I want to direct the attention of the Senate. Let no Senator be deceived into thinking that the bonds provided would be totally exempt. The bonds would be exempt only as to the normal tax.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. The bonds would not be exempt as to the surtax. So, after all, the bonds would not be tax exempt. They would be only partially tax-free bonds.

I think every Senator knows that I am opposed, and always have been opposed, to the nontaxation of many bonds which are tax-free. Municipal bonds, State bonds, county bonds, school bonds, all bonds of any particular political subdivision of a State, are entirely free from all sorts of Federal taxation, except as to the inheritance tax.

I favored the attempt that was made when the last revenue bill was before us to insert a provision that the matter of the taxation of bonds should be submitted again to the Supreme Court of the United States. My own judgment has always been that under the income-tax amendment to the Constitution Congress has the power to tax the income from bonds. But the Supreme Court decided otherwise by a divided court. In my opinion, the question has not been as fully analyzed as it might be, and I have thought there might be a fair chance of the Court deciding that Congress had the power to tax the income from bonds under the amendment that was added to the Constitution providing that Congress should have the power to levy income taxes. I have thought a decision might be rendered affirming our power to tax the income from all kinds of bonds if Congress desired to do so.

That amendment failing, I favored, as the Senator from Arizona knows, his proposal to amend the Constitution so that there would be no question about Congress having the power to levy taxes on bonds.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment. The great bulk of tax-free bonds are not covered by the provisions of the pending bill. We are letting the great bulk escape, and have done so for a good while. Now there is an attempt to levy a full tax upon the income from these bonds which are intended to give aid to the farmers of the Nation, or those who want to become farmers and own the land they till, a taxation that will mean an increase in the rate of interest they will have to pay and add to their indebtedness in acquiring homesteads. That does not seem to be fair. If there is a place on earth where there ought to be tax exemption, this is the place for it, it seems to me. This matter goes to the very homes of the people.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield now?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is aware of the fact that the Federal Government can tax its own bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true, and these bonds would be partially taxed. They would be taxed as the Liberty bonds were taxed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator favor levying a Federal tax on State bonds?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; on the income from State bonds, as the amendment to the Constitution provides, "from whatever source derived."

Mr. CONNALLY. At the present time States can tax the bonds of other States. New York State can tax the bonds of Nebraska and does it.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but New York does not levy a tax on New York bonds, and the United States Government levies no tax on the income which may be derived from an investment in New York State bonds, or in the bonds of any other State, any county, or municipality.

Mr. CONNALLY. The reason why New York levies a tax on bonds of other States and does not levy a tax on her own bonds is that she does not want to tax her own credit.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that has been the argument urged.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not have anyone believe, least of all would I have a Senator believe, that I would select the farmer as the first victim, so to speak. It is well known, if Senators have deigned to pay any attention to my humble efforts, that for 2 or 3 years I have been going about the land like a bifurcated volcano seeking, at every opportunity, to have enacted legislation designed to prevent the issuance of any further tax-exempt securities by States or the Federal Government. While I do not at all assume an apologetic attitude for the pending amendment, because it happens to be offered to a bill which it is presumed will affect farmers, I wish it understood that I have, at every opportunity, and I shall in the future at every other proper opportunity, offer an amendment similar to this. It just so happens that many Senators honestly believe that the tax-exemption privilege might aid the farmer in selling the bonds.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will recall that my time is limited.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I wish to assert again that the removal of the tax-exempt privilege will not result in an increase in the interest rate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I was interested in the colloquy the Senator from Nebraska had with the Senator from Texas, and I was surprised to learn that some States, for instance, New York, tax the income of bonds of other States. Is that a general practice?

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is.

Mr. WALSH. I am surprised to hear that. My own State does not follow that practice.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Federal Government does not levy a tax on the income of bonds of any State. The provision of the bill which the Senator from Arizona seeks to amend provides only a partial tax exemption. It does not permit the bondholder to escape the surtax; and that, after all, is the tax collected from those who can best afford to pay it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Would the Senator also provide that the States might tax Federal bonds?

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; I would not. That suggestion is not involved in this question. I should be glad to discuss that subject, but it would involve a lengthy debate. If I, as a Member of Congress, had my way about it, I would not have, unless indeed it should be in time of war, any exemption from tax on the income from Federal issues of bonds. I do not see any reason why an income derived from municipal bonds—and I myself own some of them—should not be taxed the same as any other income. I do not think there is anything unfair about it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, on one day here we vote an appropriation of several million dollars or billion dollars—it does not make any difference; we just use those terms in order to identify the matter—on one day we vote billions in order to take land out of cultivation, and the next day we vote a few billion dollars to get it back into cultivation. One day we vote a few billion dollars to kill all the hogs, and then the next day we vote a few billion dollars to raise hogs.

A bill is brought in here under the provisions of which a man can be loaned $10,000 or $2,000 or $500. Under it, the Government can lend to one man and does not have to lend to the next man. It can make one man put up 10 percent and give him 30 years in which to repay the loan. Another man does not have to put up 10 percent, and is given 60 years in which to repay. Any kind of discrimination can be indulged in, and any kind of terms for loans can be given.

We have two agencies of farm relief, one to hire a man not to raise, and the other to hire him to buy land on which to raise. Where in the hell are we going?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I feel free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. METCALF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. I understand, however, that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON. I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. NYE. I announce that my colleague [Mr. FRAZIER] has a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY].

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to announce the general pair of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. I am not advised how either Senator would vote on this question if present.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—32

So Mr. ASHURST's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, manifestly it will not be possible to complete consideration of the bill this afternoon unless the Senate should remain in session longer than is expected. It is my purpose now to move an executive session.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may we not dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand there will be further debate on the amendment.

Mr. McNARY. The amendment to the amendment was disposed of and leaves the amendment standing as the pending question. If we could get a vote on it at this time, I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. It was not an amendment to an amendment on which we voted. It was an amendment proposed to the text of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment just voted on was an amendment to the amendment. The original Bailey amendment is now pending before the Senate, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair is in error about that. The amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was to the text of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But he proposed to amend the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. ROBINSON. No; he did not.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; he did. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON. He proposed to perfect the text of the bill, and that is the theory upon which the Chair held his amendment was in order, that it was in order to perfect the text to be stricken out before voting upon a motion to strike it out. It is now immaterial as a matter of fact, but if Senators desire to remain in session longer, I have no objection to doing so.

Mr. McNARY. I am certainly conscious of the amendment upon which I was voting. The Chair is perfectly right in holding that the question voted was an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ROBINSON. Since the issue has been raised, we may just as well have it correctly understood. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] moved to strike out a provision in the text of the bill and insert a substitute therefor. The Chair held that he had the right to have it considered before the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was considered, because the latter Senator's amendment was to strike out the entire provision. Under the rule of the Senate it is proper to perfect the text before voting upon a motion to strike it out. I hold in my hand the amendment which the Senator from Arizona offered. It does not matter what the Chair understood, that is the correct status.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Oregon will permit the Chair to do so, he will state just what happened. The Senator from Arizona offered an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Iowa made a parliamentary inquiry as to whether the amendment of the Senator from Arizona was in order. The Chair held that the Senator from Arizona had a right to perfect the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina before the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was voted on.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Chair is in error. I call for the statement of the Senator from Arizona.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona nodded his head indicating that the Chair was correct. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas correctly stated my position. The Senator from Arkansas is a trained parliamentarian, as is the Vice President.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have the amendment marked in the bill. This was not a motion. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina is as follows:

Amend by striking out all of subdivision (d), pages 4 and 5, down to and including the word "authority" in line 25, page 5, and line 1, page 6.

That was the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Arizona moved to strike out certain language in paragraph (d) on page 5 and insert a substitute therefor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. No; not in the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. There is no language in the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina pertaining to the bill. That was a bare motion to strike out. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was to strike out a portion of paragraph (d). The Senator from Arizona, as I stated, moved to strike out a portion of the language in the bill, which was in order, because, as the Chair well understands, it is in order to perfect the language in the bill before striking it out.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator permit the Chair to make a statement?

Mr. McNARY. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood and voted on the understanding that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] was moving to strike out a part of the original text and to insert certain words.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So obviously it could not have been in the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina to strike out the entire text, because the amendment of the Senator from Arizona was to strike out and to insert.

Mr. ROBINSON. Perfecting the text of the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. I know nothing about the rules, and it does not make any difference. We have yet to vote on the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana submits a point of order and states he does not know anything about the rules. The Chair sustains the point of order. [Laughter.] The Senator from Oregon has demanded the regular order.

Mr. McNARY. There can be no doubt on the part of anyone conversant with the rules that the Chair is absolutely correct. It is now a matter of holding an inquest, and I am not going to pursue it further. In view of the statement of several Senators just made to me that they desire further to discuss the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, I am willing to recess at this time.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement in behalf of the pending bill, the Bankhead-Jones farm tenancy bill, by the National Committee on Small Farm Ownership. This committee is made up of outstanding citizens from all over the country who consider it one of the most important and constructive pieces of legislation ever voted upon by Congress.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

STATEMENT ON THE BANKHEAD-JONES FARM TENANCY BILL BY THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON SMALL FARM OWNERSHIP

No greater problem confronts our rural community than the persistent growth of farm tenancy. Nearly one-half of all our farmers are now tilling land owned by others, and if the present tendency toward converting the independent farmer into a dependent and propertyless tenant continues, then we must abandon hope of achieving a stable and progressive rural civilization. No satisfactory rural community can be either developed or maintained on a tenancy basis. In eight of our States farm tenants represent more than 60 percent of all farm operators. Nor is the problem a sectional one. Ten of the Wheat and Corn Belt States show from one-third to one-half of the farms operated by tenants, and even in such Western States as Montana and Idaho one-fourth of the farm operators are tenants. Nor is the problem a racial one. There are three times as many white as Negro tenants in the United States, and even in the South there are twice as many white as colored farm tenants.

In view of all these facts we consider the proposed bill for the gradual conversion of the tenant into a land owner as one of the most important and constructive pieces of legislation ever voted upon by the Congress of the United States, and the National Committee on Small Farm Ownership takes this formal occasion to commend Senator BANKHEAD and Congressman JONES for bringing the problem of farm tenancy in the United States before the American Congress, and expresses the hope that the bill which is now before the Senate will be adopted. If passed, it will make possible the growth of a secure and prosperous rural community that owns the land it tills and that can develop to the fullest its share of the great American heritage.

Adopted at a conference of the committee held in Washington, April 19, 1935.

The National Committee on Small Farm Ownership: George Foster Peabody, chairman; Dr. W. W. Alexander, director, Commission on Interracial Cooperation; Rev. W. Howard Bishop, past president National Catholic Rural Life Conference; Dr. Edwin B. Embree, president Julius Rosenwald Fund; Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Mr. William Green, American Federation of Labor; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, director department of social science, Fisk University; F. E. Murphy, the Tribune, Minneapolis, Minn.; Dr. Howard Odum, the University of North Carolina; Charlton Ogburn, counsel American Federation of Labor; Prof. Frank O'Hara, Catholic University; Dr. Clarence Poe, editor the Progressive Farmer, Raleigh, N. C.; B. Kirk Rankin, editor Southern Agriculturist, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Edgar Schmiedeler, director rural life bureau, National Catholic Welfare Conference; M. W. Thatcher, the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America; Cal Ward, the Farmers Educational and Cooperative Union of America; Benjamin Hubert, president Georgia State College, Savannah; Donald Comer, Avondale Mills, Birmingham, Ala.; Clark Howell, editor the Atlanta Constitution; Frank O. Lowden, of Illinois; John B. Miller, president Farmers' Cooperative Council; Maj. Robert Russa Moton, Tuskegee Institute, Ala.; Rt. Rev. John A. Ryan, National Catholic Welfare Council; Edgar B. Stern, New Orleans; Louis J. Taber, president the National Grange; Gen. Robert E. Wood, president Sears, Roebuck, Chicago, Ill.; J. F. Jackson, general agricultural agent, Central of Georgia Railway; Hugh McRae, president Southeastern Council.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER COURT DECREES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a day or two ago I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of Calendar No. 513, being the bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

There was objection at the time the bill was prepared by the Attorney General's Office. I now renew my request for immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the request was made on Friday last I objected to the consideration of the bill because there was really no emergency demonstrated. The matter has gone over since Friday, and I am now willing that the bill may be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in section 1, on page 2, line 12, after the word "sold", to insert the words "as a whole or in separate parcels"; on page 3, in line 6, to strike out the words "the court, after a hearing, upon such notice to parties in interest as said court may direct" and to insert the words "after a hearing of which notice to all interested parties shall be given by publication or otherwise, as the court may direct, the court"; and in line 21, after the word "value", to insert "Provided further, That before confirmation of any private sale, the terms of such sale shall first be published in such newspaper or newspapers of general circulation as the court having jurisdiction may direct at least 10 days before confirmation; and such private sale shall not then be confirmed by said court where a bona fide offer has been made, under such conditions as said court may prescribe, which offer shall guarantee at least a 10 percent increase over the offered price specified in such private sale", so as to make the section read:

That the act entitled "an act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893 (ch. 225, 27 Stat. 751, as amended; U. S. C., title 28, secs. 847, 848, and 849), be, and it is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. All real estate or any interest in land sold under any order or decree of any United States court shall be sold at public sale at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city in which the property, or the greater part thereof, is located, or upon the premises or some parcel thereof located therein, as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct, said sale to be upon such terms and conditions as said court shall approve: Provided, however, That if said property shall be situated in more than one county, State, judicial district of the United States, or judicial circuit of the United States, whether in one or more parcels, said property shall be sold as a whole or in separate parcels at public sale at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city in which the greater part thereof is located or upon the premises or some parcel thereof as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct: And provided further, That if at the time said property is offered for sale it is in the possession of a receiver or receivers, or ancillary receiver or ancillary receivers, appointed by one or more district courts of the United States, said property wherever situated shall be sold at public sale in the district of primary jurisdiction at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city situated therein in which the greater part of said property in said district is located or on the premises or some parcel thereof located in such county, parish, or city therein as the court having primary jurisdiction by such order or decree of sale may direct, unless said court shall order the sale of the properties or one or more parcels thereof in one or more ancillary districts. The United States court having primary jurisdiction shall be deemed to be the court first appointing any such receiver.

"After a hearing of which notice to all interested parties shall be given by publication or otherwise as the court may direct, the court may order and decree the sale of such real estate or interest in land or any part thereof at private sale for cash or other considerations and upon such terms and conditions as the court directing the sale may approve, if it finds that the best interests of the estate will be conserved thereby: Provided, That before confirmation of any private sale, the court shall appoint three disinterested persons to appraise said property or, if the court deems advisable, different groups of three appraisers each to appraise properties of different classes or situate in different localities, and no private sale shall be confirmed at a price less than two-thirds of the appraised value: Provided further, That before confirmation of any private sale, the terms of such sale shall first be published in such newspaper or newspapers of general circulation as the court having jurisdiction may direct at least 10 days before confirmation; and such private sale shall not then be confirmed by said court where a bona fide offer has been made, under such conditions as said court may prescribe, which offer shall guarantee at least a 10 percent increase over the offered price specified in such private sale. The provisions of this section shall apply to sales and proceedings now pending in the courts of the United States as well as those commenced hereafter. The provisions of this section shall not apply to sales and proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States, submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LONERGAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Dr. Harry C. Knight to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first business in order on the calendar.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, April 23, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, APRIL 22, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of life and light, tarrying in the afterglow of the greatest day in the calendar of men, we would learn more of the earthly life of our Savior. Today thoughts and themes are stirring and thrilling the finest spirits of earth. Around His brow, so pure, chivalrous, and holy, are the sparkling suns of eternity. We rejoice that in Him is life eternal and that He lives above the clouds of sorrow and the gorge of death. Give us, blessed Lord, a courageous sense of Thy presence and an appreciation of the royalties that belong to the sons of God. So often in the midst of responsibilities and problems unsolved, touch the strongest chords of our natures. Help us to always hold the truth in all earnestness and eagerness of mind. Keep us tremendously aware that to love self to the neglect of others is a wicked and a woeful mistake. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, April 19, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has not been my policy to object to Members on the other side speaking whenever they desired, but the other day when the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] wanted to address the House, someone on that side objected, and it has always been that way. Whenever someone on this side wanted a few minutes, someone on the other side objected. If that policy is going to be followed, I shall have to object to my good friend the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], even speaking for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I objected.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman object? The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. Objection is heard.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Virginia, as he probably knows, the Chair made an announcement some time ago that in the future the Chair would not entertain requests to address the House prior to one day preceding the time at which the address is to be delivered. The Chair therefore hopes the gentleman will withdraw his request and make it tomorrow, and the Chair hopes that the request will then be granted.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request and serve notice that on tomorrow I shall renew it.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Forty-six years ago today my State was opened by a "run." I would like to speak on that subject for 5 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to all such requests. I have told the reason, and I am sorry.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I never objected to such a request in my life.

Mr. SNELL. I know that, but the sauce that is served to the goose is going to be served to the gander, and if you are not going to allow us to speak, we are not going to allow you to do so by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. May I say it is embarrassing enough to ask for a chance to speak here—I surely shall not argue for it.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, although more than half of the farms in the Eastern States, as well as certain extreme Western States, have electric lights and power, not more than 5 percent of the farms of South Dakota enjoy these facilities. Why should not South Dakota have as complete electric service as any State? Why should not all farms have such service everywhere?

This is shown in interim report, Power Series No. 1, of the National Power Survey of the Federal Power Commission.

Development of the Missouri River can provide energy for the rural electrification that my State and several nearby States so greatly need. I have frequently urged such development, and at this time I wish to repeat my recommendations that early action be taken.

The prospect of farm homes equipped with electric lights and power for the operation of threshers, washers, and other machines necessary to take care of the work of a farm has been placed before us in recent months, especially in connection with the Tennessee Valley Authority project. It is a prospect that appeals to every citizen to see life made happier, freer, and more comfortable for the average man and woman. Those who know my own sympathy with this average citizen—this "forgotten man" (and woman)—will have no uncertainty as to my position on this point.

The question has sometimes been raised as to the possibility of selling electric energy and there has been the implication that the field would be a very limited one. I believe this is an incorrect view. If a real program of rural electrification is put on, there will be no question about the sale of the energy. Naturally it would have to be cheap electricity. That is what we are seeking. If the electricity is not cheap enough, certainly our people are not going to buy it—could not afford to; but if it is sufficiently cheap, there will be an abundance of purchasers.

The Federal Power Commission, in a report that is on the surface dry and uninteresting, but which is really laden with vital facts, furnishes me with better arguments than I could personally advance in favor of an extensive program of electrification in South Dakota.

The report is accompanied by a detailed map of undeveloped power areas, showing the Missouri River Basin in South Dakota, also the Cheyenne River Basin, as among the sections which, in the Commissioner's opinion, merits development.

The estimated annual output of the upper Missouri region is placed in the report at 4,788,000,000 kilowatt-hours.

The reference to sparsely settled territory is natural, although with sufficient hydroelectric development, it is a certainty that the territory will be more densely settled. People gravitate into sections in which they can live with satisfactory conveniences. The way to build up a section is to electrify it. I quote from the portion of the report dealing with this point:

> Many of the undeveloped water-power sites are located in sparsely settled territory and, in general, will require relatively long transmission lines, unless certain industries find it more economical to construct their new plants at or near the water-power sites rather than to expand their existing plants or locate at present industrial and commercial centers. Water-power plants must be located where streamflow, head, topography, and geological conditions are found favorable.

Electricity is the key to modern progress. It must, however, be electricity that is in the hands of the people and that is available at cheap prices. It must not be electricity that is monopolized by selfish private interests and that is turned over to the public only after it has paid exorbitant rates through coercion.

THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NEEDS ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the distinguished Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], for agreeing to present an amendment to S. 2035 permitting the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to borrow $100,000 for the purpose of making a loan to the Children's Hospital for necessary alterations and enlargement of the buildings of the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Fiscal Affairs of the Committee on the District of Columbia, it was my responsibility to consider S. 2035. By direction of the subcommittee, the bill was favorably reported at the last meeting of the full Committee on the District of Columbia last Wednesday.

Subsequent to the meeting of the committee I was approached on behalf of the Children's Hospital and was informed of the conditions which have developed at the Children's Hospital. It appeared that the amendment which has been adopted by the House was not only appropriate but necessary. I immediately contacted the gracious Chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], and found a ready response to the needs of the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia. As ever, Mrs. NORTON has displayed a fine humanitarian spirit—a spirit of understanding and appreciation of the needs of sick children, and particularly of the needs for separating tubercular children from other children who are ill.

TUBERCULAR CHILDREN OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Much progress has been made in the care of tubercular children in the District of Columbia in the last years. The establishment of a home for tubercular children, at Glendale, Md., has been a favorable forward step. Great care should be exercised, particularly at this time when so many children are suffering from malnutrition, in the separation of these two general classes of cases. To have an undernourished child coming in contact with a tuberculosis sufferer is almost an assurance of adding another to the unfortunate list. All are agreed that a clinical examination for the determination of the condition of children should be made in the community in which they reside and that a definite diagnosis should be made of suspects in some well-established clinic. The Children's Hospital, with all of its clinical facilities and its record department of 66,000 up-to-date case histories of children under 16 years of age in the District of Columbia, not only makes of it the ideal location for such a clinic but it is now, and has for years past, been doing this work for the District of Columbia without charge.

The heating plant of the Children's Hospital has been condemned. It needs a new laundry and it needs additional rooms for nurses. A very careful and economical study has been made of costs of such alterations and installations and it is estimated that about $100,000 will be required. Most of this amount would be expended in labor on the site of the hospital. Owing to the financial condition of the hospital and the existing mortgage, as outlined heretofore, the hospital is unable to finance these necessary repairs, betterments, and alterations.

The amendment gives permission to the District of Columbia by the Congress to enter into a contract with the Children's Hospital for the clinical examination of children suspected of being tubercular, and to pay to the hospital, in advance, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to make the necessary improvements, betterments, and alterations in the buildings now or to be constructed on the property of the Children's Hospital; and that further permission be granted the District of Columbia to borrow such funds as may be necessary out of any appropriation heretofore or hereafter made and available for such purpose.

THE CHILDREN'S HOSPITAL, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia, organized in 1870 as a charitable institution, merits support by Congress. Not to burden you with volumes of statistics, may I briefly summarize its functions by stating that, for the year 1934, 48,727 days' care was given patients in the hospital, 85 percent of which were charitable cases. That 57,784 visits were made by children to the numerous clinics operated in the hospital, from which the hospital received during the year $5,295.42, representing small fees from those able to pay. The most eminent physicians of Washington make no charge for their daily devotion to the wards of the hospital.

Of the total of $230,272.49 expense of operating the hospital for the year 1934, $14,585.87 was paid for administration; $32,779.20 for nurses; $11,029.44 for internes and house doctors; $67,309.78 for dietary; $10,589.67 for maintenance and repairs. Our per patient day cost in 1931 was $4.68. In a continuing descent it reached the figure of $3.60 for the 6-month period ending June 30, 1934. In the last 6 months of 1934 it rose again to $3.83. Later figures are not available but they are on the ascent again. The Board of Public Welfare of the District of Columbia sends indigent patients for hospitalization and during the present fiscal year engaged to pay the hospital at the rate of $2.48 per day, per patient. The difference between the cost of operating the hospital and the amount received from the Board of Public Welfare, and such few patients as can pay for hospitalization, is made up of an insufficient contribution on the part of the community chest, gifts from individuals, income from endowments; the sum total of which, however, have left deficits represented by a bank loan of $70,000 and unpaid accounts with merchants and others.

A mortgage on the property of the hospital amounting to $156,500 makes it impossible for the hospital to make further borrowings for the necessary alterations, rehabilitations, and installations hereinafter outlined.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank the gentlewoman from New Jersey for her readiness and willingness to introduce the amendment on behalf of the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia, and I want to thank the Members of this House for adopting this amendment.

NATIONAL MONUMENTS IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some historical data gathered at the Army War College by Col. R. T. Jaynes, of Walhalla, with respect to certain activities during the Revolutionary War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

I have introduced in the House of Representatives two bills which are to create national monuments of two hallowed and historical spots in the State of South Carolina which I have the honor to represent in this body. One bill, H. R. 7543, is to provide for the establishment of a national monument in Oconee County, S. C., to be known as the "General Andrew Pickens National Monument"; and H. R. 7542, to provide for the establishment of a national monument and cemetery in Greenwood County, S. C., to be known as the "Star Fort National Monument and Cemetery."

In order to acquaint Members of the House with the background of these two measures and the particular localities which they would preserve and perpetuate for all time, I feel that it is proper that I give as briefly as possible the history connected with the old Star Fort, in Greenwood County near Ninety Six, and also take a glance at the life and times of Gen. Andrew Pickens, whose memory and old homestead I propose to perpetuate in H. R. 7543.

In this connection I feel that it is a proper time to take some definite steps not only to preserve the memory of Gen. Andrew Pickens and the battlefield at Star Fort, where Gen. Nathanael Greene engaged the British in a long siege in 1781, but also other men whose memory time has dimmed and other locations where the original glory has been effaced by the elements and time. South Carolina was in the forefront of the battle for American independence. Her people gave generously of their lives and fortunes to create this Nation. Many of the great battles of the Revolution were fought on her soil. I propose in these bills I have introduced to preserve for generations that are to come two of the particular spots that mean so much to the people of my State and that should, in reality, mean a great deal to the people of the Nation. The Daughters of the American Revolution of my State have already marked these two hallowed spots but there remains yet considerable work that can be done to restore these two localities to the conditions existent during and immediately following the periods during which both made history for this Republic.

The Star Fort Battlefield is in Greenwood County, S. C., 3 miles from Ninety Six, by improved road. The fort which is in the shape of a star is yet in a fine state of preservation, although it was built nearly 160 years ago. It has already been surveyed and inspected by the War Department, and it is my opinion that not a great deal of money would be required to put it in fine shape and to keep it that way. The same is true of the home of Gen. Andrew Pickens near Tamassee in Oconee County, S. C., near which is the site of the "ring fight" where General Pickens engaged the Cherokee Indians in 1779 in a battle that made the upper section of South Carolina safe for the white settlers.

STAR FORT HISTORY

With reference to the historical background of old Star Fort I am quoting herewith in part some information which has been prepared on this subject by the historical section of the Army War College.

The siege of Star Fort and Ninety Six is one of the most interesting and spectacular of the operations which occurred during the closing months of the Revolutionary War. The 4 weeks from May 22 to June 19 were crowded with the drama of siege warfare, with novel expedients to secure military advantage, and with examples of chivalrous conduct on the part of all the combatants, somewhat exceptional in the southern campaign. After Lord Rawdon burned and abandoned his post at Camden, S. C., on the 8th and 9th of May, 1781, the ruins of the town were immediately occupied by the Continental Army, commanded by Gen. Nathanael Greene. Plans were at once made by the Americans to press the advantage gained over the British by the latters' evacuation of the strong frontier posts of Augusta and Ninety Six. At this time Lord Charles Cornwallis was operating in Virginia at the head of the main British Army in the South.

Upon abandoning Camden, Lord Rawdon fell back in the direction of Charleston for the purpose of receiving expected reinforcements, to cover the lower country, and to give protection to Charleston itself. Several expresses were sent by him to Lt. Col. John H. Cruger, commanding at Ninety Six, to withdraw his garrison and join that of Augusta, about 60 miles to the south, on the Savannah River. None of the several messengers sent with these dispatches for Cruger succeeded in reaching their destination.

Ninety Six derives some celebrity in the annals of this country from having been the scene of the first conflict in South Carolina of the Revolutionary War. At that place commenced, on the 19th day of November 1775 the sanguinary conflict between Whig and Tory which never ceased during the entire period of the war. The settlement of Ninety Six was surrounded by the stockade as a defense against incursions of Indians who were not far removed from it. The stockade still stood when the British subjugated the province of South Carolina in 1780, and Ninety Six was garrisoned by them and made a principal point in the chain of their military posts. Its situation on the Cherokee Trail rendered it peculiarly important and of great strategic value to the British. It maintained communication with the Indians, kept in check the Whig settlements to the west of it, and covered those of the loyalists to the north, east, and south. It was the most advanced post occupied by the British, and by its approach to the upper parts of North Carolina and Georgia, supported Camden and Augusta in their influence upon the population of these two provinces. It was also a depot for recruits, and it was here that Major Ferguson made his headquarters in 1780 as organizer and inspector of Tory militia recruited in the adjacent country.

Ninety Six was garrisoned by about 550 loyalists at the time General Greene marched from Camden to lay siege to it. Of this number 350 belonged to the Provincial Corps, made up of troops recruited in the United States. In Delancey's battalion of New York Loyalists there were 150 men, and in the Second Battalion of New Jersey Volunteers 200 men. These corps had been raised in 1776, were well disciplined, and from the active service in which they had been engaged ever since their first landing in Georgia, had become equal to any troops. The remainder of Cruger's command consisted of about 200 South Carolina Tories, under Colonel King. These were given an opportunity to quit the garrison when it became known that Greene's Army was approaching, but they preferred to remain. The entire garrison of Ninety Six was composed of Americans, Colonel Cruger being a native of the State of New York.

When Cruger learned that the British had abandoned Camden and fallen back on Charleston, it appeared quite probable to him that a strong force of Americans would be sent against Ninety Six to effect its subjugation, and energetic measures were at once put into effect to strengthen the post. The entire garrison was set to work to throw up a parapet outside the stockade, and slaves were called in from the neighborhood to assist in the work. Beyond the ditch, created by throwing up the parapet, abatis was constructed. To the left of the stockaded village was a ravine, through which ran a rivulet that supplied the troops with water. Lying contiguous to the village, between it and the rivulet, and within the confines of the stockade was the county prison. This was fortified, and its cannon and musketry fire covered the valley of the rivulet on the side next to the village. On the opposite side of the valley, and within reach of the gun posted at the prison, there was constructed a strong stockade fort with two blockhouses, which covered the communication with the rivulet in that quarter. A covered way led from the village to the rivulet, and by this passageway water was obtained during the siege. Within the village blockhouses were erected, and caponiers prepared by which communication was maintained between the several parts of the works. Traverses were thrown up to prevent the execution of shells and ricochet shots.

On the right side of the village was located the only part of the works that constituted a strong defensive position. This had been planned sometime before by Lieutenant Haldane, of the engineers, aide-de-camp to Lord Cornwallis. It consisted of a work of 16 salient and reentrant angles, with a dry ditch and abatis, and was called the "Star." One hundred and fifty of the Provincial Corps and 50 militia, under the command of Major Greene, of Delancey's battalion, were selected to occupy the Star. A captain's party and some militia were placed in the stockade beyond the rivulet, and a subaltern's guard in the prison. The remainder of the troops was held by Cruger under his immediate command in the village. There were only three 3-pounder cannon in the garrison, and but a very small quantity of ammunition. Food had been stored within the stockade surrounding the village in anticipation of a siege.

General Green appeared in front of Ninety Six on the 22d of May 1781. His effective force, exclusive of militia, was about 1,000 men and a park of artillery. His command included the Maryland and Virginia brigades and the Delaware and North Carolina battalions. Reconnaisance was made of the position by Greene and his engineer officer, the Polish count, Kosciusko, and it was decided to demolish the Star, the strongest point in the enemy's defenses, rather than to attempt to secure the rivulet and cut off the water supply. This latter plan was rejected as it was believed at the time that the besieged could obtain water within the stockade by sinking wells.

Breaking ground close to the Star, Kosciusko labored with diligence during the first night, but by daybreak only very little headway had been made. Cruger hastily completed platforms for his guns in the Star and moved them into the salient nearest to the besiegers and opened fire on the working party, not more than 70 paces distant. Under cover of the gunfire, supported by musketry, 30 men debouched from the Star about noon on the 23d and rushed the working party, putting every man they could reach to the bayonet. This raiding force was followed by a detachment of militia, who quickly demolished the works and carried off the intrenching tools. So judiciously was this double sally planned and so rapidly executed, that although Greene promptly sent a detachment to support Kosciusko, the object of the raiders was accomplished before the supporting troops could arrive. Taught by this essay that the enemy was of a cast not to be rashly approached, Greene ordered Kosciusko to resume his labors under cover of a ravine at a more respectable distance. Kosciusko broke ground again on the night of the 23d at a distance of 400 paces, still directing his approaches against the Star, and by the 3d of June completed the second parallel.

In the meantime General Pickens and Lt. Col. Henry Lee besieged and captured Forts Cornwallis and Grierson at Augusta, and then hastened to the assistance of Greene. Lee arrived on the 8th of June, and Pickens soon afterward. In this connection I would like to add that the General Pickens referred to is the same one whose home and memory I propose to perpetuate in H. R. 7453.

As soon as the second parallel was completed Greene summoned the garrison to surrender, but Cruger replied that "My duty to my sovereign renders inadmissable at present such a step." The temporary truce entered into to conduct the parley thereupon ceased and Greene opened fire with his batteries, which enfiladed some of the works. The cannonading was continued at intervals for several days, and at the same time a sap was pushed against the Star, and the batteries advanced as the work progressed. One of the saps, constructed of fascines and gabions, at no greater distance from the abatis than 35 paces, was elevated 40 feet from the ground and upon it a number of riflemen were stationed, who, as they overlooked the British works, did great execution. The garrison crowned their parapet with sandbags, leaving apertures through which to fire their rifles. African arrows were thrown by the besiegers on the roofs of the barracks within the stockade to set them on fire, but this design was immediately counteracted by Colonel Cruger, who directed that all the buildings be unroofed. These arrows fitted into the bore of muskets from which they were discharged. They were armed at the end with a barbed spear, entwined with flax, dipped in combustibles, lighted, and shot into the wooden buildings.

With the intention of burning a battery position of the assailants, constructed of crib work, attempts were made by the British to heat shot, but these efforts were frustrated for want of furnaces. The personnel in the Star now found themselves unable to continue firing their guns from the platform in the daytime, so withdrew them through the day and used them only at night.

When on the 8th of June the command of Lieutenant Colonel Lee joined from the successful siege of Augusta, the garrison of Ninety Six had the mortification of seeing their comrades in arms from Augusta marched by them as prisoners of war. With the British standard reversed, drums beating, and fifes playing, the exhibition, instead of producing a depressing effect upon the besieged, had quite a contrary effect. The regular soldiers were convinced by their officers that death was preferable to capitivity under such humiliating circumstances, and the Tories within the works felt more certain than ever before that each was "fighting with a halter around his neck."

On the evening of the 9th of June two parties made a sortie from the works to obtain more definite information relative to the nature and progress of the siege operations being conducted by the Americans. One party from the Star penetrated to one of the four-gun batteries, but was unable to damage the guns for want of spikes and hammers. This party discovered the mine designed to be carried under a curtain of the Star, and inflicted a wound upon Count Kosciusko, who was engaged at the time in examining it; the other party from the left of them to the bayonet, capturing the officer in command. On the 12th of the month, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, a sergeant and nine privates from Colonel Lee's command advanced with lighted combustibles to set fire to the abatis on the left of the works. This bold enterprise was conducted under cover of a concentrated fire from all the batteries and during a heavy storm. Just as the sergeant was in the act of applying the fire his party was discovered, and he and five privates were killed. The remaining four men succeeded in reaching their lines.

Work on the approaches was being pushed by both Greene and Lee. Several batteries for cannon, one more than 20 feet high, had been raised within 140 yards of the Star. A rifle battery was constructed within 30 yards, to prevent the British from annoying the workmen of the besiegers. On Colonel Lee's front, approaches drew nearer and nearer to the stockade on the left of the stream from which the besieged obtained their supply of water. Firing along the front was almost incessant day and night; not a man could show his head without being fired upon.

About this time a countryman was seen riding along the American lines conversing familiarly with the officers and soldiers on duty. He was not regarded with suspicion, and was permitted to go wherever his curiosity led him. At length he reached the main road leading to the village, and putting spurs to his horse rushed with full speed into the town, receiving the ineffectual fire of the American sentinels and guards nearest to him, and holding up a letter in his hand to attract the attention of the garrison within the works. The demonstrations of joy with which this messenger was received made it evident to General Greene that he was the bearer of good news, which could be nothing other than that relief was being sent to the beleaguered force.

On the 2d of June a convoy of ships carrying three regiments from Cork had reached Charleston, and the newspaper of that date, announcing that a large fleet with powerful reenforcements for the Royal army had just anchored off the bar, was dispatched to General Greene, who received it on or before the 10th of the month. Now, that Greene interpreted the joyful demonstrations within the works as due to the promise of early relief for the garrison, it became necessary for him to strike a decisive blow without further delay. The message which had been received by Colonel Cruger was in fact from Lord Rawdon, giving information that he had passed Orangeburgh and was marching to raise the siege. This comforting information came none to soon to the beleaguered garrison, for on the 17th of June Lee's guns brought a concentrated fire upon the stockade beyond the rivulet so intense as to render it untenable, and that night the British evacuated this portion of the works. A well was dug in the Star, but no water was obtained, and naked Negroes, their black bodies indistinguishable at night from the fallen trees, were sent to the rivulet to secure an inadequate supply.

On the 18th of June the third parallel was completed close to the abatis in front of the Star. The Americans turned the abatis, drew out the pickets, and ran forward two approach trenches within 6 feet of the ditch surrounding the Star. On the American right, where Lee commanded, the trenches were now within 20 yards of the enemy's ditch. The siege operations had progressed to the point where an assault could be launched with every hope of success and delay could no longer be countenanced, as Greene knew definitely by this time that Rawdon was en route with superior numbers to raise the siege.

Dispositions were accordingly made by Greene to take the works on the 18th, and at noon of that day the assailing columns advanced on signal from the center battery. Colonel Lee, with his legion infantry, and Captain Kirkwood's light infantry, made the attack on the right. Colonel Campbell, with the First Maryland and the First Virginia Regiments, attacked the Star. As the parapet of this work was about 12 feet high, with an additional 3 feet of sandbags, a detachment under Lieutenant Duvall of the Maryland line, and Lieutenant Selden, of the Virginia line, was sent against it to pull down the sandbags by the use of hooks, to enable the Americans to make a lodgment. American riflemen were posted upon the elevated battery to pick off the enemy wherever they appeared, while the Maryland and Virginia troops sustained the action by platoon fire from their trenches.

A furious cannonade was soon followed by the assaulting columns rushing to their respective tasks. The troops on the right were exposed to the fire of a three-pounder and to musketry fire from the blockhouses in the village, but the British were driven out of their works on this front and Lee's men took possession. On the left the initial operations by Lieutenants Duvall and Selden did not meet with success. Their detachments entered the ditch surrounding the Star at different points, and Colonel Campbell stood prepared to support them. When the detachments succeeded in lowering the height of the parapet by pulling down the sandbags, Campbell's men were to rush through this partial breach and gain the interior of the fort.

The command of the Star was intrusted to Major Green, who well justified the confidence placed in him by Colonel Cruger. Not only had careful preparations been made to meet the assailants should they reach the parapet, but his men were impatient to sally from the works and meet the enemy on his own ground. Two parties of 30 men each were therefore organized, one under Captain Campbell, of the New Jersey Volunteers, and the other under Captain French, of Delancey's corps. These officers led their men from the sally port in the rear of the Star, and upon entering the ditch separated, one party passing through the ditch in one direction, the other taking the opposite direction. With their bayonets projected well to the front, they encircled the ditch until the Americans working on the sandbags were encountered. Here ensued a desperate conflict with Duvall's and Selden's men. The Americans, fighting not only with the enemy in the ditch but fired on by those overhead, gallantly sustained the unequal contest until both leaders became disabled by wounds, when they yielded and were driven back, with great loss, to the point of entry into the ditch. Finding the British defending their works with great obstinancy, and seeing but little prospect of succeeding without heavy loss, General Greene ordered a cessation of the attack.

The American losses during the entire siege amounted to 185 killed and wounded. The losses in the final action on the 18th of June, which lasted three-quarters of an hour, were about 40 killed and wounded. General Greene raised the siege upon the afternoon of the 19th, and on the morning of the 21st the reinforcements under Lord Rawdon made their appearance. The chivalrous conduct of all the participants in these siege operations gives a glamor to Ninety Six and Star Fort that is quite a happy contrast to the needless cruelties generally practiced by Whig and Tory partisan groups throughout the southern Provinces.

GEN. ANDREW PICKENS' MEMORIAL

It is proposed in H. R. 7543 to establish a national monument near Tamassee, in Oconee County, S. C., to be known as the "Gen. Andrew Pickens National Monument", in honor of the memory of one of South Carolina's greatest soldiers during the Revolutionary War. For 27 years General Pickens lived and died where it is proposed to erect this memorial, and where it is proposed to reconstruct and rebuild his old home for a museum. He came to this particular spot in 1794, after many turbulent years in command of Colonial soldiers in the war against the British for independence.

In securing information regarding the life and deeds of General Pickens I am deeply indebted to my friend, Col. R. T. Jaynes, of Walhalla, S. C. Colonel Jaynes, a gentleman and a scholar of the old school, is an outstanding authority on General Pickens, and is one of the best-versed men in South Carolina on the history of the upper section of the State.

In order to acquaint those who may be interested in General Pickens and this memorial, and with the permission of Colonel Jaynes, I am going to quote from an address made by Colonel Jaynes in March 1932, at which time he was the principal speaker on a program dedicating a small monument to Gen. Andrew Pickens at the site where it is proposed to erect a national monument. This monument was erected by the Daughters of the American Revolution. On this occasion Colonel Jaynes said in part:

The lineage of him whose memory we honor here today (Gen. Andrew Pickens) traces back through the centuries to that sad procession of half a million of French Protestant refugees leaving France in the time of Louis XIV, exiles for liberty of religious opinion. Some found a temporary resting place in Scotland. Then came another sojourn in the north of Ireland, where his parents were born. Then an earnest longing for absolute liberty brought the Pickens family across the Atlantic to a settlement at Paxton, Pa., where on September 13, 1739, our hero first saw the light.

About the middle of the eighteenth century long wagon trains made their way southward to the Piedmont section of South Carolina. These overland settlers were what might be designated "Scotch-Irish." The Pickens family settled first at Old Waxhaws and later came to Long Cane, in what is now Abbeville County. Here Andrew spent his youth and early manhood in farming and hunting, in building up his physique and becoming a skilled marksman and frontiersman, in laying the practical foundation for the great career which was destined for him.

On March 19, 1765, he married Miss Rebecca Calhoun, daughter of Ezekiel Calhoun. During the War for Independence her devotion and fidelity to the patriot cause cheered her gallant husband through all those terrible years. What Marion was in the low country, and Sumter in the middle country, Pickens was in the upper country. When British troops had overrun the colony and held possession practically from Charleston to the mountains, these leaders kept alive the spirit of liberty, and their names will forever shine out in our history with increasing luster. It is a just criticism of historical writers that they have failed to give to General Pickens due credit for his service to his country. It is not possible to go into details on this occasion. As an instance, however, mention might be made of his part in the Battle of Cowpens, on January 17, 1781, justly regarded by historians as the second link (Kings Mountain, Oct. 7, 1780, being the first) in the chain of events that led to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown on October 7, 1781. He was second in command to Gen. Daniel Morgan. At a critical moment he reformed the militia, thereby turning apparent defeat into probably the most brilliant victory won on any battlefield during the war. He thus enabled General Morgan, known as the "Old Wagoner", to crack his whip over Tarleton, who barely escaped capture and fled the field with the shattered remnant of his army in dismay and despair. The Seventy-first British Regiment surrendered as prisoners of war, its commander, McArthur, delivering his sword to Colonel Pickens. In recognition of his services he was raised to the rank of brigadier general by Governor Rutledge and voted a sword by Congress.

Mention should also be made of the Battle of Kettle Creek, in what is now Wilkes County, Ga., February 14, 1779. Here Colonel Pickens was the commanding officer. By a forced night march he overtook Colonel Boyd with superior forces and by a surprise attack won a decisive victory. These two battles alone show the mettle of which he was made and prove him to have been a military tactician of the highest order. He was also one of the leaders of the siege of Ninety Six, old Star Fort.

In 1794 General Pickens removed here with his family, where he acquired an estate of 1,237 acres. In the primeval forest he selected this site on which to erect his dwelling. Here he made his home for 27 years as a country gentleman, dispensing a gracious hospitality. This place was peculiarly interesting and attractive to him. Near by, in 1779, he fought the most desperate battle he ever engaged in with the Cherokees. But for this signal victory, South Carolina might have suffered a bloody Indian invasion far more terrible in its consequences than British or Tory warfare. But so completely subdued were they and brought under his control that in 1794 this was a safe and delightful retreat. The Indians, in their devotion to him, would bring their first offerings to him adorned in the highest style of Indian costume. Cannot we in imagination reconstruct here today one of these kindly visits, as these Red Sons of the forest came to pay homage to him, whom they delighted to call "Ski-Agunsta" (Great Chief)? Can't we hear the echo of their cry, as they came up this valley shouting, "Ski-Agunsta, Ski-Agunsta, Ski-Agunsta"?

Peace being restored, he helped to make secure the freedom which he had so signally helped to win in war. He was continually called to serve his country in various capacities. He was a member of the convention which framed our first State constitution. He served three terms in the legislature and one term in Congress. He was appointed by the United States Government to make the Treaty of Milledgeville, also the Treaty of Natches, and, indeed, almost all the treaties made with the southern Indians. When the crisis of 1812 with England arose, he was solicited to accept unanimous nomination as Governor of our State, which honor he declined on account of advancing years, believing that a younger man should serve.

He was also a surveyor. Probably his greatest task with the compass, tripod, and chain was the surveying of the boundary line between the States of North Carolina and Tennessee.

It is the enduring honor of these early patriots that more battles for American independence were fought on South Carolina soil than on that of any other State of the Union. Of the 137 battles and engagements fought in South Carolina, 103 were by South Carolinians alone; in 20 others, South Carolinians fought with troops from other States, leaving 14 in which troops from other States fought without assistance from her soldiers. These figures are taken from the list prepared by McCrady. Her sons lost by disease and in battle were 4,000 or more.

A northern historical writer has passed this judgment on South Carolinians in the Revolution: "To the women of South Carolina and to Marion, Sumter, and Pickens, who kept the field without the promise of men, money, or supplies, it was owing that the spirit and name of liberty did not become utterly extinct."

Of the character of Gen. Andrew Pickens little need be said. He was a farmer turned soldier and not a soldier turned farmer. From youth to age he was a firm believer in the Christian religion and an influential member of the Presbyterian Church. He loved his church and was an humble worshiper. In short, it can be truly said of him that he had courage without rashness; dignity without pride; religion without austerity. He had an abiding faith in an overruling Providence and carried the spirit of piety with him, both in his private life and in his public service. He was not narrow-minded nor bigoted. He was tolerant and his attitude toward all religions was one of broad sympathy.

Here in the red house, on this gently sloping eminence, he lived until August 11, 1817, when, full of years and honors, he laid his earthly armor by, sustained by the simple faith of the Christian religion, and passed on in the hope of a glorious immortality. His memory being revered for his long and distinguished service in both war and peace, it was most fitting that when the new district embracing this territory was founded in 1828 it should be given his name; and when Pickens district was divided in 1868 Pickens County took his name, which it will perpetuate as long as the flag which he followed on many hard-fought fields floats over the land of the free and the home of the brave.

HYDRO IN TROUBLE

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the New York Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial from the New York Sun:

HYDRO IN TROUBLE

The cause of public ownership of electrical utilities in the United States receives a genuine set-back as the American public begins to understand what is happening to the blue-ribbon baby of public ownership, the Hydro-Electric Commission of Ontario. That is the largest municipal supply system in the world, often held up as an example of what governmental operation can accomplish in the utility field. But its record indisputably shows that political management and an unsound economic basis can get the strongest of such institutions into trouble.

Theoretically the corporation exists for much the same purpose as that proposed for various "yardstick" enterprises in the United States—that of furnishing electrical current at low rates to consumers through public management and control. Actually it has added hundreds of millions of dollars to the public debt of Ontario which, on a per capita basis, scarcely can be said to compare favorably with that of New York or Quebec, where private management is the rule. To make things worse, its enemies offer to demonstrate that its rates for service are, on the average, higher than those of Quebec.

A crisis in its affairs came last week when the Provincial Legislature passed Premier Hepburn's bill declaring "illegal, void, and unenforceable" contracts for the purchase of power between the commission and certain private producers. Prior to 1929 the commission had contracted for 260,000 horsepower to meet increased demand which its own facilities were unable to supply. In that year it entered into contracts with three companies for 570,000 horsepower. But about that time demand began to fall off and the power load started down.

Since then the commission has found itself with an unmarketable surplus on hand and has been compelled to face heavy annual deficits. Critics of the commission assert that power on the Niagara part of the system alone costs the commission considerably more than it receives for it. Although consumption in Toronto, for instance, actually declined, cost there increased by around $2,000,000. Rather than risk unpopularity by raising rates the commission began to dig into its reserves.

But this did not affect the mounting annual deficits which, according to Attorney General Roebuck, seem likely at present rates to reach $4,000,000 in 1935 and $7,000,000 in 1938. Meanwhile communities in Ontario using municipal power on which no tax is paid have found their burdens of debt steadily growing heavier. These would gladly use tax money from electrical services if they only could devise some means of collecting it.

As one way to help the commission out of its difficulties the Hepburn government, declaring that Hydro has been a "political tool", which was "nearly ruined by mismanagement and inefficiency", has resorted to the drastic expedient of repudiating contracts negotiated by an agency of the Government. Our own repudiation of the gold clause in Federal bonds estops us on this side of the border from raising any question as to the morality of this procedure. There are hints that Ontario may continue to take power at present prices from the companies affected, but the bondholders of those companies are greatly worried. Their main hope seems to be that some way may be found to export power to the United States.

This seems unlikely if the Power Authority and the Federal Power Commission see them first. Those bodies are committed to the theory that what the United States most needs is to develop new sources of electric power. It would not accord with this notion to find Canada eager to get rid of surplus power now available without necessity for developing the St. Lawrence seaway.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to place in the RECORD a statement by Henry P. Fletcher to the Associated College Press on the Republican Party's Stand for Individual Opportunity and Security.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where was the gentleman a moment ago when the gentleman from New York submitted his request?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman to say that he desires to extend his remarks by including a large quantity of Republican campaign material, and for that reason I shall have to object. I feel that we should not permit the RECORD to be encumbered by that kind of material so far in advance of the next campaign; and I hope someone will object to Democratic statements of that kind being put in the RECORD.

Mr. RICH. I am sure we will meet that request.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 16, 20, 22, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18, 19, 21, 26, and 27, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Salaries: For Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, $285,920.

"DIVISION OF DISBURSEMENT

"Salaries and expenses: For personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, stationery, travel, rental of equipment, and all other necessary miscellaneous and contingent expenses, $710,700: Provided, That with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget there may be transferred to this appropriation from funds available for new activities or for the expansion of existing activities such sums as may be necessary to cover the additional expense incurred in performing the function of disbursement therefor."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$261,668, of which $8,000 shall be immediately available for the suppression of an epidemic of typhus fever"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "540 inspectors, $2,112,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 28: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$12,825,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 29: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,650,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$575,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "hereafter" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "during the remainder of the fiscal year 1935 and during the fiscal year 1936"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 23, 24, 25, 33, and 34.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference as to each of such amendments, namely:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

On no. 1: The Senate consolidated into a single appropriation unit the separate appropriations made by the House for the Office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits, the Division of Disbursements, and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants and increased the consolidated total by $16,960 over the aggregate of the separate items passed by the House. The conference agreement retains the Division of Disbursement as a separate appropriation unit in the amount and in the phraseology as passed by the House and consolidates the Office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits and the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants in a single appropriation increased by $16,960 over the total of the two separate appropriations for these activities as passed by the House.

On no. 5: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the limitation in the House bill on the number of passenger motor vehicles that might be maintained by the Coast Guard.

On nos. 6, 7, and 8, relating to the Secret Service Division: Increases from $25,000 to $57,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended for purchase of automobiles.

On no. 9: Makes available $8,000, instead of $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, of the appropriation for prevention of epidemic diseases by the Public Health Service, for the suppression of typhus fever.

On no. 10: Strikes out the appropriation of $22,000, inserted by the Senate, for reestablishment of the Helena, Mont., assay office.

On no. 11: Makes a typographical correction.

On no. 12: Inserts the word "and", as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of the phrase "and/or" as proposed by the House.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

On no. 13: Appropriates $192,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $191,000 as proposed by the House, for salaries, Office of the Chief Inspector, Post Office Department.

On no. 14: Appropriates $39,260 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $35,760 as proposed by the House, for salaries in the office of the purchasing agent of the Post Office Department.

On no. 15: Appropriates $94,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $92,380 as proposed by the House, for salaries, Bureau of Accounts, Post Office Department.

On no. 16: Appropriates $875,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $900,000 as proposed by the Senate, for printing and binding for the Post Office Department.

On no. 17: Provides for 5 additional postal inspectors instead of 15 additional as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 18: Appropriates $55,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $50,000 as proposed by the House, for payment of rewards for the detection, arrest, and conviction of post-office burglars.

On no. 19: Appropriates $75,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $65,000 as proposed by the House, for unusual conditions at post offices.

On no. 20: Appropriates $1,595,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $1,600,000 as proposed by the Senate, for village delivery service.

On no. 21: Appropriates $52,500,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $52,400,000 as proposed by the House, for salaries of railway mail clerks.

On no. 22: Appropriates $3,250,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $3,325,000 as proposed by the Senate, for travel allowance of railway postal clerks.

On no. 26: Provides, as proposed by the Senate, that the appropriation for balances due foreign countries shall be available for the payment of such balances during "prior fiscal years", instead of confining the appropriation to the fiscal year 1936 as proposed by the House bill.

On no. 27: Inserts the word "and" as proposed by the Senate, in lieu of the phrase "and/or" as provided in the House bill.

On no. 28: Appropriates $12,825,000 for operating force of public buildings under the Post Office Department, in lieu of $12,650,000 as proposed by the House and $13,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On no. 29: Appropriates $4,650,000, instead of $4,700,000 as proposed by the Senate and $4,600,000 as proposed by the House, for operating supplies of public buildings under the Post Office Department.

On no. 30: Appropriates $575,000, instead of $550,000 as proposed by the House and $600,000 as proposed by the Senate, for furniture, etc., for public buildings under the Post Office Department.

On no. 31: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, providing for payment of traveling expenses and the transportation of household effects of employees of the Division of Disbursement from one official station to another, modified so as to confine the effectiveness of the amendment hereafter to the remainder of the fiscal year 1935 and to the fiscal year 1936.

On no. 32: Strikes out section 4, inserted by the Senate, providing that no part of any appropriation contained in the bill should be used for personal services unless specifically authorized by law.

The committee of conference report in disagreement the following amendments of the Senate:

On no. 2: To provide authority for the Bureau of Internal Revenue to pay the cost of acquisition and maintenance of automobiles seized for violations of internal-revenue laws.

On no. 3: Relating to the concentration of distilled spirits in bonded warehouses.

On no. 4: Relating to the payment of certain employees in the Bureau of Customs, Bureau of Internal Revenue, Bureau of Narcotics, and Secret Service, who were deprived of pay commencing December 1, 1934, under the provisions of the so-called "McKellar amendment" to the appropriation for the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935.

On nos. 23, 24, and 25: Increasing from $8,575,000 to $10,575,000 the appropriation for foreign mail transportation and making the additional $2,000,000 available for the transportation of mail across the Pacific Ocean between California and China.

On no. 33: Prohibiting the use of any money in the bill for the payment to any person for the filling of any position for which he or she has been nominated after the Senate upon vote has failed to confirm the nomination of such person, or for the payment of an acting official whose name has been submitted to the Senate and withdrawn.

On no. 34: Correcting a section number.

WILLIAM W. ARNOLD,
LOUIS LUDLOW,
JOHN J. BOYLAN,
WILLIAM J. GRANFIELD,
EMMET O'NEAL,
CLARENCE J. MCLEOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 24, after "services;" insert: "Cost of acquisition and maintenance of automobiles seized for violations of internal-revenue laws delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury for use in administration of the law under his jurisdiction."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 5, after the word "violation", insert the following: "Provided further, That for the purpose of concentration, upon the initiation of the Commissioner of Industrial Alcohol and under regulations prescribed by him, distilled spirits may be removed from any internal-revenue bonded warehouse to any other such warehouse, and may be bottled in bond in any such warehouse before or after payment of the tax, and the Commissioner shall prescribe the form and penal sum of bond covering distilled spirits in internal-revenue bonded warehouses and in transit between such warehouses."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 7, page 16, strike out the words "industrial alcohol" and insert in lieu thereof "Internal Revenue."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

"That the proviso to the paragraph under the heading 'Bureau of Internal Revenue', contained in the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, approved June 19, 1934, be amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That from and after May 15, 1935, no part of the appropriation made herein, or heretofore made, shall be used to pay the salaries of persons who were dropped from the service under the Executive Order Numbered 6166 of June 10, 1933, and reinstated, transferred, or promoted to positions in the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, or in the Alcohol Tax Unit upon certificates issued by the Civil Service Commission between January 30, 1934, and May 10, 1934, unless such persons shall have passed an appropriate open competitive examination held by the Civil Service Commission after June 19, 1934, such persons being those who were separated from the service by Executive order of June 10, 1933, and who, under the terms of such order, were ineligible for reappointment unless such reappointments were made before December 10, 1933: Provided further, That inasmuch as the Treasury Department, under the advice of the Attorney General, has given the proviso referred to above a construction including other employees not intended by the Congress to be included in that proviso and advising the Treasury Department that it could retain such employees without pay, there is hereby appropriated for salaries from December 1, 1934, to May 15, 1935, both dates inclusive, in the offices as follows: Bureau of Customs, $2,357.14; Bureau of Internal Revenue, $1,367,006.91; Bureau of Narcotics, $8,642.85; and Secret Service Division, $7,857.14; in all, $1,385,864.04; to pay all of said employees up to and including May 15, 1935: Provided further, That the employees, other than those heretofore designated, may be retained by the Treasury Department, but those designated in the first proviso hereof shall not be retained after May 15, 1935, by the Treasury Department unless they have passed an appropriate open competitive examination held by the Civil Service Commission after June 19, 1934, and, if retained, shall not be paid out of this appropriation or any other appropriation made by this act.'"

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"That the proviso to the paragraph under the heading 'Bureau of Internal Revenue' contained in the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, approved June 19, 1934, be amended to read as follows: 'Provided, That from and after May 15, 1935, no part of the appropriation made herein, or heretofore made, shall be used to pay the salaries of persons who were dropped from the service under the Executive Order No. 6166 of June 10, 1933, and reinstated, transferred, or promoted to positions in the Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, or in the Alcohol Tax Unit upon certificates issued by the Civil Service Commission between January 30, 1934, and May 10, 1934, unless such persons shall have passed an appropriate open competitive examination held by the Civil Service Commission after June 19, 1934, such persons being those who were separated from the service by Executive order of June 10, 1933, and who, under the terms of such order, were ineligible for reappointment unless such reappointments were made before December 10, 1933: Provided further, That inasmuch as the Treasury Department under the advice of the Attorney General, has given the proviso referred to above a construction including other employees not intended by the Congress to be included in that proviso and advising the Treasury Department that it could retain such employees without pay, there are hereby made available for salaries from December 1, 1934, to May 15, 1935, both dates inclusive, from the unexpended balances under the following titled appropriations, the sums, respectively, enumerated after each: "Collecting the revenue from customs, 1935", $2,357.14; "Collecting the internal revenue, 1935", $1,367,006.91; "Salaries and expenses, Bureau of Narcotics, 1935", $8,642.85; and "Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes, 1935", $7,857.14; in all, $1,385,- 864.04, to pay all of said employees up to and including May 15, 1935: Provided further, That the employees, other than those heretofore designated, may be retained by the Treasury Department, but those designated in the first proviso hereof shall not be retained after May 15, 1935, by the Treasury Department unless they pass an appropriate noncompetitive examination to be held by the Civil Service Commission and, if retained without having passed such noncompetitive examination, shall not be paid out of this appropriation or any other appropriation made by this act.'"

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the House that this amendment deals with the controversial McKellar amendment that was placed on the deficiency bill of June 19, 1934, in the Senate. The amendment I now propose accepts the Senate amendment with some clarifying language and also with the provision that the pay of these employees in the Revenue Service shall be made out of the 1935 Appropriations. The Senate amendment makes a new appropriation for 1935 in the 1936 bill.

There is sufficient money in the 1935 appropriation to take care of all those employees who went off pay on the first of December, and it is not necessary at all to make a new appropriation.

You doubtless will recall that under the McKellar amendment a great many employees were separated from the service by reason of a very unusual open competitive civil-service examination. Each and every one of these men had a civil-service status which had been acquired by an open competitive civil-service examination prior to that time. Something like 500 of them who had civil-service status failed to qualify in that new examination. Those men have been in the service and have been performing their duties since the 1st day of December 1934, but have not been receiving any pay for the services performed by them. What we propose to do in this amendment is to pay these men who have been working since the first of December 1934, without salary, out of the 1935 appropriation. As to those who did not qualify in that open competitive examination—and I think it is generally conceded by everyone that that was a very unfair examination; more of an intelligence test than a test of qualifications for the particular service—they will be cut off the pay roll on the 15th of May unless they qualify by a noncompetitive examination, which the Civil Service Commission will conduct, with a view to ascertaining their fitness and their ability to perform the services in which they are engaged.

Those who do qualify under that noncompetitive examination will continue in the service of the Government and draw their pay as usual. The amendment was not intended to and does not apply to any employees who are not now on the rolls without pay. Those who do not qualify in that noncompetitive examination will naturally go off the pay roll. I make this statement so that the Membership here may understand the situation.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. This is the group of people who were recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury to be continued in their status without any kind of examination? In other words, this is an agreement with the administration.

Mr. ARNOLD. This meets the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. If I caught the date correctly, they will automatically go off the roll unless they requalify as of the 15th of May, 1935?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is only 3 weeks from now, and assuming that another week will be consumed in getting this bill through conference and having it finally signed at the White House, that will leave the Civil Service Commission only 2 weeks in which to call that examination. Is it not likely that they might be foreclosed in their chance to stay on the pay roll?

Mr. ARNOLD. The time is rather short, as the gentleman says, but I have discussed this matter with the Civil Service Commission and also with the Treasury officials. They are already making arrangements for this examination, and they do not have to advertise ahead of time, as in an open competitive examination. They tell me that they can hold these examinations within the time set, and permit those to qualify who are able to, without having to go off the pay roll after the 15th of May.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Would there be any particular objection to giving them an additional month, making it June 15, so that nothing would intervene to prevent their qualifying?

Mr. ARNOLD. We have had all kinds of difficulty with this matter and I do not think the waters ought to be muddied any more than they are. The Civil Service Commission say they can handle the situation by the 15th of May, and I think it would be much better to let the matter stand as it is.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, what was the result of the civil-service examination that took place? Did they obtain sufficient men to fill these offices in that examination?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes; there is an eligible list, but these men have been especially trained and equipped for this work, and to resort entirely to a new civil-service register would bring in new recruits who would have to be specially trained.

Mr. PALMISANO. This amendment is prepared purposely to take care of these men and rule out the men who are now eligible under the civil-service rules.

Mr. ARNOLD. Not necessarily. The noncompetitive examination will go right to the heart of the qualifications, and if they do not qualify they have to go off the pay roll.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. Yes.

Mr. TABER. This amendment has been worked out in the way that the gentleman has presented it here after a long debate with the Senate conferees and it is the best the gentleman could do, everything considered.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman is correct. I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to protest against a Department of Government ignoring the law. I want to protest against a lot of employees treating the law with indifference and ignoring it. This McKellar amendment should have caused 1,300 employees to be separated from the service on December 1 if the law of the United States had been obeyed.

When the McKellar amendment was passed by the Congress it ceased to be the McKellar amendment and became the law of the land, the law of the United States Government, and no Department head should have ignored and overridden it. The Department head said in effect, "Yes; it is true; the law has been passed, but you fellows work on here; we cannot pay you, but work on and I shall get Congress to annul its own law and pay you." That is what has been done. One Department head has seen fit to ignore a law passed by the Congress and has caused 1,300 employees to work for the Government without pay since December 1, assuming that he could get the Congress to annul its action and accord to his wishes. And he is now getting Congress to undo its own law and to obey him. That is what has been done. I am not in favor of doing that kind of business, although just now I am going along with my committee. But in the future Departments of this Government must understand that they cannot ignore and disobey laws passed by Congress.

The Senator from Tennessee, Mr. MCKELLAR, is the Chairman of the Civil Service Committee in the United States Senate. As such chairman he had ascertained that there are six States and the District of Columbia which have more than their lawful quota of civil-service employees, to wit: the District of Columbia is entitled to 133, but in fact has 9,411. Virginia is entitled to 662, but in fact has 2,013. Maryland is entitled to 446, but in fact has 1,888. Massachusetts is entitled to 1,162, but in fact has 1,166. Utah is entitled to 139, but in fact has 143. Iowa is entitled to 676, but in fact has 739. Vermont is entitled to 98, but in fact has 118; and the remaining 42 States of this Nation are below their quotas, and nothing effective and worth while is being done by the Civil Service Commission to correct these inequalities. And they should be corrected. Not another civil-service employee should be allocated to the District of Columbia and these 6 States having more than their lawful quotas until all of the other 42 States are treated justly and receive their lawful quotas.

Do you know how many civil-service employees have been employed here by the Government from the State of Tennessee? Four hundred and twenty-eight. From the great State of Tennessee only 428 have been able to get civil-service positions here with the Government, while Tennessee is entitled to 715 as its quota. Yet here in Washington, the District of Columbia, only 10 miles square, is entitled to only 133 employees as its quota, but in fact has 9,411 employees, or 9,278 more employees than it is entitled to, as against only 428 from the great State of Tennessee, the Speaker's State, if you please.

Over in Maryland, right next door, they did not get just 428 allotted to Tennessee, but the State of Maryland got 1,888 employees here through the Civil Service Commission, when it was entitled to only 446.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I cannot yield at this time, as I do not want to use over the 5 minutes allotted to me.

Mr. KRAMER. How many are there from California?

Mr. BLANTON. California is entitled to 1,552, but has only 410, yet the District of Columbia here has 9,411. Please let me go ahead. I will print an authentic table for all States which I have just gotten from the Civil Service Commission, The chairman of the committee has been very kind to me, and I do not want to waste his time in discussing the number each State has received just now, but you can read it in the RECORD tomorrow.

Let me tell you about the other State that adjoins the Nation's capital, the great Commonwealth of Virginia,—my father's native State. Virginia is entitled to 662, but in fact has 2,013 employees, nearly 5 times as many as are from the Speaker's State of Tennessee. Let me read you this letter just received from the Civil Service Commission, and attached to it is a report showing exactly what has been done for each State——

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not time to yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. What is the Speaker going to do about it?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not have time to yield for frivolity, but if he does what I am going to do about it, he is going to raise cain with the Civil Service Commission, until these inequalities are stopped.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from the Civil Service Commission, a short letter consisting of just 1 page, dated April 18, last Friday, giving some of these inequalities, attached to which is a 1-page report on all of the States. I ask unanimous consent to put the whole letter and report in the RECORD in connection with revising and extending my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The following is the letter from the Civil Service Commission:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1935.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I am glad to acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 10, and in compliance with the request contained therein I am forwarding herewith copy of a report on the condition of the apportionment at the close of business Monday, April 15, 1935. The States listed are entitled to apportioned appointments in the amounts set after their names on the basis of the total number of appointments as of the date of this report (Apr. 15, 1935), which total is 34,107. The following tabulation is given in connection with your inquiry regarding the particular States listed:

Appointments under the apportionment

	Entitled to—	Received
District of Columbia	133	9,411
Maryland	446	1,888
Virginia	662	2,013
Texas	1,593	500
Oklahoma	655	260
North Dakota	186	153
Utah	139	143
New Hampshire	127	117
Tennessee	715	428

As you will note from the report, there are 7,249 employees from the several States occupying apportioned positions who are excluded from the apportionment under section 2 of Civil Service rule VII and the Attorney General's opinion of August 25, 1934. This total includes those persons entitled to military preference and those appointed through Executive order, or who have been exempted from the quota provisions by such order; also persons formerly in the apportioned service who have been reinstated.

If you desire any further information on this subject, the Commission will be glad to be of aid.

Very sincerely,

L. A. MOYER, Chief Examiner.

The following is the report accompanying the above letter:

NOTE.—Number of employees occupying apportioned positions who are excluded from the apportionment figures under sec. 2, rule VII, and the Attorney General's Opinion of Aug. 25, 1934, 7,249.

Mr. BLANTON. The foregoing letter will show you that there was some reason for this so-called "McKellar amendment." When the Congress passed that law to correct some of these inequalities the Civil Service Commission called for an examination, which was Nation-wide. It called for an examination to be held in California, in Texas, in New York, and everywhere else in the United States, and there were worthy people, efficient people, capable of holding these jobs, who had not had a chance at them before, who took that examination expecting employment when they passed it, and not a single one of them has been recognized by being placed on the eligible list. That examination was annulled. They do not have a chance to compete in the noncompetitive examination that under this bill is to occur between now and May 15. Your people out in California will not be given a chance to compete with these 1,300 employees here in Washington.

Mr. KRAMER. We do not have an opportunity.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly not.

Mr. KRAMER. It is a lot of hokum.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. What chance have the constituents of my great Irish friend from New York, Mr. BOYLAN, to get any of these positions? Not a bit. It is a closed proposition to all but these 1,300 employees who are being cared for by this bill, and 500 of them failed to pass the examination.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman knows that unless a course was followed, which was followed, the Government would have lost millions of dollars in revenue. There would be nobody with experience to collect it.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have heard that before. But I have plenty of my constituents in Texas who could efficiently do the work.

Mr. BOYLAN. Furthermore——

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I cannot yield further. I have only 2 minutes, and I do not want to use any more time.

Mr. BOYLAN. But the gentleman should wait until I finish. The gentleman said there were many who could not pass this examination.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not want this interruption taken out of my time. I do not yield further. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] is an able, distinguished, and valuable Member, and has been here a long time, and he and I have worked hard here together, but if we should pass out tomorrow somebody would take our places and we would be gone and forgotten.

Mr. BOYLAN. We could never forget you. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but in all of our districts back home we can find just as worthy and efficient civil-service employees in New York, and in California, and in Texas, and in Tennessee, as you can here in Washington, Virginia, and Maryland. And an injustice is done all of them when we do not give them a competitive chance at these positions.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment, I will. I am one of those here who is going to make a real fight from now on to see that the people back home in the 48 States away from Washington get a chance at these civil-service positions, so that the District of Columbia will not get 9,411 employees when it is entitled to only 133.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I just wondered if the gentleman's figures also showed the division between Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no. That is impossible, because some change overnight. Here is the State of Texas, 900 miles across it east and west and 900 miles across it north and south. The State of Texas has only 500 employees as against 9,411 in the little District of Columbia, only 10 miles square. If you Members want to stop these inequalities, give me a little help, and we will stop it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has again expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that amendments 23, 24, and 25 may be considered together. They all deal with the same subject matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 23: On page 57, line 6, after the figures "1928" and the parenthesis, strike out "$8,575,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,575,000."

Amendment no. 24: On page 57, line 7, after the word "exceed", strike out "$7,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,000,000 (of which $2,000,000 shall be available for the transportation of mail, including mail for island possessions and Territories of the United States, across the Pacific Ocean between California and China)."

Amendment no. 25: Page 57, line 14, strike out "$7,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$9,000,000."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mrs. KAHN moves that the House recede and concur in Senate amendments nos. 23, 24, and 25.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, these three amendments have to do with the additional amount of $2,000,000 that was inserted by the Senate from the floor by Senator McADOO, of California. We took this matter up very carefully. We went over it and tried to work the matter out from the standpoint of the merits of the proposal. During the last few days there has been quite a little in the press about this experimental trip by air from San Francisco to Canton, China, first going to Honolulu, then to the Midway Island, then to Guam, and then to Manila, from where they will fly to Canton. There has been no estimate on this appropriation by the Bureau of the Budget. I contacted the Bureau of the Budget and asked them to give me such information as they could as to the merits of this proposal. They tell me that they have had no opportunity whatever to study the matter, and that it would take 2 or 3 weeks to make an investigation before they could determine whether or not they would make a recommendation for this additional amount.

I think perhaps the House generally understands that the greater portion of this amount for this new project of air mail from San Francisco to Canton, China, will be largely a subsidy. Your committee feels that we should not appropriate money for this purpose at this time in view of the fact that there has been no study and no investigation made of any consequence either by the Post Office Department, the Bureau of the Budget, by the House Committee on Appropriations, or by the Senate Committee on Appropriations; and no discussion of any consequence on the floor of the Senate at the time this amendment was offered and adopted.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. In just a moment. When this amendment was proposed in the Senate it was said they would let it go to conference, and no information on the subject was there developed.

Now, here is what we propose to do—and I think it is the only proper thing to do under the circumstances: There will be another deficiency appropriation bill before this session of Congress adjourns; as a matter of fact, there will be two of them, I am informed by the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee. The money carried in this amendment is not available until the 1st of July. So we will have ample time between now and when the next deficiency appropriation bill is reported to this House to get some additional information and to enable the Post Office Department to make some further study of the problem and to enable the Bureau of the Budget to make their decision and recommendation to the President for his consideration. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. If we make this additional appropriation of $2,000,000, it will not be used until the Post Office Department studies the situation. All we are doing is making it available for the Post Office Department to use if, after investigation, they see fit to go ahead with it. That is all we are doing by our action at this time; we are simply making it available for the Post Office Department to use if and when after proper study they so decide.

Mr. ARNOLD. But may I say to the gentleman from New York that it is entirely too big a proposition for this Congress to put $2,000,000 in this item, two-thirds of which appropriation will be subsidy, without having some study made of the matter.

Mr. BACON. But they will be able to make the investigation before using any of this money.

Mr. ARNOLD. The Congress, however, ought to have something to say about this question of subsidy. I am not willing to impose this responsibility entirely upon the Postmaster General or on any one individual when it comes to a question of subsidy such as is involved here. The matter ought to be determined by Congress itself; and then if the Congress, after having all the information it is able to get in the meantime, decides to go ahead and make the appropriation, it will be entirely agreeable to me, and we shall have something on which to base our action. As it is now we do not have sufficient information.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me some time on this amendment?

Mr. ARNOLD. I will a little later. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], who is also a member of the Appropriations Committee, make the suggestion he has made of appropriating money without any investigation, without any research or hearing by the Bureau of the Budget or by any subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. I think the chairman of the subcommittee has made a very fair and reasonable statement; and, furthermore, at the conference we permitted one of the Representatives from California [Mr. DOCKWEILER] to make a statement. At the conclusion of his remarks the House Members expressed themselves to be sympathetic to his views. We explained to him, however, that we would have the Bureau of the Budget go into the matter and, if they reported it favorably, we would be very glad to take it up in the next deficiency bill. This course was satisfactory to the gentleman from California, and he agreed with the procedure and thought it was correct.

Now, if we are going to make appropriations of two and more millions of dollars just by amendments from the floor, what is the use of having an Appropriations Committee? What is the use of having a Bureau of the Budget? These committees are your committees; you are not able to pass on these questions; you delegate to your committees who act as they feel the circumstances warrant, and submit their findings to you for your action. You all know, especially the Members of experience, that an appropriation bill cannot be written on the floor of the House, and written properly, any more than a tax bill can be written from the floor. They must have consideration, we must have orderly procedure, otherwise the result will be a hodge-podge instead of well-thought-out legislation.

So I say, therefore, the plan proposed by our chairman is eminently fair not only to the people of California, but to all who want this service, and we would be glad to give it to them if the circumstances show it should be inaugurated.

Mrs. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. KAHN. Does the gentleman seem to think this service is going to be exclusively for California? Does he not presume that the merchants of the city of New York are going to take advantage of a 5-day service from New York to Canton?

Mr. BOYLAN. Absolutely, and we want it, but we are satisfied to try and get it in an orderly way.

Mrs. KAHN. Does the gentleman think this is of benefit only to California?

Mr. BOYLAN. No, indeed; the whole country would benefit. We are glad to see the gentlewoman agitate this matter, but let us do it in a proper manner, and not try to pull it out of the air.

Mrs. KAHN. That is where we want it—in the air.

Mr. BOYLAN. We are in agreement, being both air-minded.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN].

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word in reference to what this air line will mean to the whole of the United States? We know that the Postmaster has the right to call for bids for foreign mail under contract, but the appropriation without this extra $2,000,000 will not allow him to consider new plans as promulgated by the Pan-American Airways for service across the Pacific.

Mr. Speaker, a route from San Francisco to Honolulu, to Wake, to Midway, to Guam, and on to Manila is now being considered, all under the American flag. From Manila to Canton there is a line controlled by the Pan American Airways. At Canton there is a Chinese Government-owned airway line controlling 3,000 miles of air lines into China. This is also being operated, manned, and run by Americans under a private contract with the Pan American line. So we will have an air line practically from San Francisco to Manila to Canton and all through China operated, owned, and run under the American flag and by Americans. What this will do to trade in this country is almost beyond belief.

Mr. Speaker, may I read a paragraph from the magazine Aviation of March 1935.

> Planted unobtrusively in an introductory paragraph of one of Pan American's traffic estimates for the project is a phrase worth rescuing from prospective oblivion. It might well serve as a motto on a division's insignia "The Orient'" so runs the phrase, "need not be 3 weeks away." And, indeed, it won't be when the new division is under way—a convenient overnight service between San Francisco and Honolulu; a further service from Honolulu to Manila, of four daylight flights from Honolulu to Midway, Midway to Wake, Wake to Guam, Guam to Manila, respectively; connections with Hong Kong or Canton, with Java, with Japan will put the teeming markets of Asia within a week by air from any part of the United States, and make Hawaii in fact the southwest corner of the country. What the route will mean to the future of our trade relations, our tourist habits, our importance as a world power are generally beyond the scope of this present treatment. Needless to say, the potentialities are almost limitless. It takes 6 to 7 days to reach Hawaii from California on the average steamer, 14 days to Japan, 3 weeks to Manila, longer to the coast of Asia. Simply from a postal point of view, consider the gain to our commerce from substituting a 2-week mail and reply cycle for the 2 months it now takes for the average letter to reach China and the answer to return. American industry has been offered no such advantage in the China trade since the days when our sailing clippers dominated the trade routes of the world.

To show you that other countries of the world are not unmindful of what this oriental trade means, may I read what they are doing with reference to air lines?

> The Imperial Airways now are operating from London to Paris, and Brindisi to Melbourne, via Singapore, and they have a projected extension from Singapore to Hong Kong.
> France is operating from London to Marseilles to Saigon, via Italy, Greece, and India, and have a projected extension from Saigon to Canton.
> All of the countries are making a bid for this enormous new oriental trade.
> The Royal Dutch Air Lines are operating from London via Amsterdam to Rangoon and thence to Java and have a projected extension from Java to Manila, thence to China.
> Russia is operating from Vladivostok to Moscow, clear across Asia. Their projections are unknown.
> Germany is making a bid for the South American trade and is practically paralleling the Pan American Air Line which starts at Miami and goes down into South America.

These countries appreciate fully the advantages of this trade. As a means of national defense it is also invaluable, but my limited time will not permit my going into that phase.

Why put off this legislation? It is not mandatory, it leaves it to the discretion of the Postmaster General. Let us encourage these pioneers with more than words. Let us get behind them 100 percent, and give them the support to which they are entitled.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, we have heard for a long time that the Orient is destined to become the next great theater for American trade. Now comes the proposal to span the Pacific by airplane. May I say that in developing this air line the Pan American Co. itself is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars in developing landing places alone the route. In order to get the project going the Senate added an appropriation of $2,000,000 to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, the objection is made that this is a subsidy. When we started our railroads back in the early days we subsidized them. When we started our steamship lines we subsidized them, and we are still doing so. When we started air lines down into South America we subsidized those lines, and we are doing that today. I ask in the name of common sense, with an opportunity to grasp one of the greatest trade opportunities that was ever presented to this Congress, that you appropriate this $2,000,000 and give American business men an opportunity to develop their trade with the Orient on an equal basis with other countries. Here is an opportunity for this Congress to aid in a pioneering effort to take advantage of a tremendous trade-building opportunity. I trust you will vote for the appropriation of this $2,000,000 in order to make it possible for this line to be started immediately so that other nations, eager to get a foothold, may not get established first.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, the question of this being a subsidy has been developed in general debate. A number of years ago Congress passed on this question by approving subsidies for air mail service. This is not a new venture; it is already covered in existing law by a broad, liberal statute pertaining to the development of foreign air mail service.

There is merit to the suggestion advanced by the committee that this matter be reserved at least temporarily for further study; but I make the point that it is an essential, necessary operation and should receive the approval of this Congress before we adjourn.

The reason for haste in this connection is that the nations of the world are engaged in a race for trade, and Germany, with her Zeppelins, Italy, with her squadrons, and France, with her flying boats, are already in competition with us for South and Central American trade.

America's foreign service began in 1927 with a ferry service from Key West to Cuba. In later years, by reason of our encouragement, it developed into a service that reached the West Indies and Central America. Today it puts us in touch with South America and brings us not only the good will that always results but business and commerce as well.

This is the only air line that has been constantly reducing its cost to us and at the same time increasing its revenues as a result of its operations. Pan American, a few years ago, acquired the Alaskan Air Line; recently it acquired control of the Chinese Air Line; and only a few weeks ago it sent a giant steamship, equipped with men and material, to acquire landing space and to build hangars, radio stations, and other facilities in Hawaii, in the Midway Islands, Wake Island, Guam, and Manila. This work is now under construction and the hangars and bases will be ready for operation on July 1.

This $2,000,000 will be merely an authorization given to the Post Office Department, whom we can trust, and trust implicitly, because of its interest and concern about air mail, and unless the service meets with the Department's approval this money will not be spent.

However, I want to make this additional point: Before Congress adjourns this legislation should be adopted, because unless we acquire these rights in foreign countries our competitors in the air, including Germany, France, and Italy, as well as other nations, will acquire them before we do. Just as the American clipper ships traversed the seven seas to the glory of the American sailor in the past, we should let the genius, the skill, and the courage of America's intrepid aviators conquer the skies and bring us commerce from the various nations of the Orient.

I think this is a movement in the right direction; I know the committee is in sympathy with it; and before the termination of this Congress it will become a reality. It is a splendid thing and something that should be accomplished.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. Does not the gentleman think it will be better to put the matter over until the next deficiency bill comes in, so we may have an opportunity to study it further?

Mr. MEAD. With the cooperation and support of the gentleman who represents the Subcommittee on the Post Office in the Appropriations Committee, realizing he is intensely interested in the matter, I feel that would be a safe proposition; but my attitude is that this plan should be adopted before the end of this Congress, so that America may become the pioneer in flying in China and in other sections of the world yet unconquered by any nation on earth. [Applause.]

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to support the motion of the gentlewoman from California to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the able speech made by the Chairman of the Post Office Committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD]. The gentleman correctly states that this action should be taken before the Congress adjourns. The Senate Committee on Appropriations has given this matter consideration and they have adopted it in the Senate.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman certainly is in error, because the matter was never presented to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I am informed, though, that they considered it before the conference committee met.

Mr. ARNOLD. The gentleman is in error. It was not presented to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. The amendment was offered from the floor of the Senate and there was very little discussion of it.

Mr. BACON. Whatever the situation may have been in another body, they have acted with great vision, looking toward a future of peace and increased trade with the Orient.

The company that is now pioneering the trans-Pacific route is spending from $1,500 to $2,000 a day in this work. On the 15th of June there will be delivered to this company three large Martin planes, larger than the Sikorsky plane that went from San Francisco to Honolulu the other day in the record time of 17½ hours. I think every real American must have been thrilled by the monumental flight of this plane the other day, arriving as it did in Honolulu 55 minutes ahead of its schedule.

These three planes are to be delivered on the 15th of June. They are larger and faster planes than the pioneer plane that made this trip the other day. With these three planes delivered on the 15th of June, there is an excellent possibility and probability that by the first of July a weekly service can go out of San Francisco across the Pacific to Canton, China.

In addition to these 3 new Martin planes that will be delivered, there will also be delivered 3 new Sikorsky planes, shortly to be followed by 2 additional Sikorsky planes, all made and developed in this country. These new Martin planes and the Sikorsky planes are the finest commercial planes in the world today. This company is going ahead with courage and vision. Increased trade with the Orient means as much to the State of New York and the East as it does to the State of California. This proposal will mean a lot to the United States. Anything we can do to help our export trade is worth doing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield gladly to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR. What I cannot understand is why the matter should be delayed if only this $2,000,000 is to be made available and the Post Office Department would determine what to do in reference to a subsidy, if anything. I cannot understand why it cannot be done now just as well as later in the deficiency bill.

Mr. BACON. I think the gentleman is entirely right. This money will not be spent until after the Post Office Department has made a thorough investigation of the matter, until after bids have been called for and contracts let, and the amount involved is a maximum of only $2,000,000 and if they go ahead with the proposal the amount that will be used will probably be less than $2,000,000. The Senate is willing to act and it seems to me the House ought to have courage and vision to act now and should leave the matter with their own Post Office Department.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Is there not this difference between acting now and postponing the matter? The postponement will give Congress a chance to review the merits of the report of the Department's investigation instead of leaving it to their discretion.

Mr. BACON. There may be something in that, but I hope we can act now because these pioneering Americans who are at this time developing this new air route will then have some encouragement and will know that their own Government will be behind them. If we delay the matter, there is always the chance that in the long run the plan may fail entirely.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, there is no lack of sympathy in the Committee on Appropriations for this proposition. We have no prejudice against it, but we have no information on which to base a conclusion because no information has been brought forth. Why should we go into the subject blindly, half-cocked, as it were? Why should the House rush into a commitment about which it knows nothing?

This proposition was popped into Congress in another body out of a clear sky, without estimates, without any evidence, without any investigation, without anything whatever to back it up. Never before was such an important proposition advanced without any official report or official information of any character to support it.

This is not an inconsequential matter. These contracts run for 10 years. Are we going into them and bind our Government to this annual subsidy without giving the Post Office Department an opportunity to investigate all of the facts and all of the elements involved so that a decision may be reached that will be in the public interest?

I understand the Post Office Department is agreeable to the postponement of this matter until they can investigate and decide by the time the deficiency bill is considered whether this proposed mail subsidy is advisable or not.

Congress has been trying to get out of subsidies. I do not know whether this one has merit or not. Owing to the utter lack of information no one knows whether or not it is advisable. I do know that in the case of the South American air mail they have been running 6 years at a total expense of $7,000,000 per annum, and yet we have not been able to get away from a subsidy of about $5,000,000 a year in that service.

I say that this proposition has not been adequately considered—in fact, it has not been even approximately considered, because the estimate is for $2,000,000, and when you come to make a close calculation you will find that it would only require $1,820,000 a year on a basis of 52 round trips per annum. This shows a lack of the mature consideration that should be given to a matter of such importance.

The proposition, as already stated, has not had the slightest consideration, and no prejudice can be brought against it by letting it go over according to the understanding of the Post Office Department that it have a little more time for consideration. Let us not be rushed into a commitment for an air mail scheme that has not been digested and thought out to a conclusion, a scheme that may be all right but which at this time nobody really knows anything about. The wisest policy is to look before we leap.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] are now in accord with me on the proposition that we should have estimates from the Budget before we act on the appropriation.

This is a little different from the ordinary situation. I think I should tell the House what I know about the situation so that it may pass on it intelligently.

This matter came up as the result of an amendment by Senator McADOO in the Senate on March 26, 1935—almost 1 month ago.

Personally, I do not like to see any appropriation made without an estimate from the Budget. I do not care to see any appropriation until we have a statement from the Department as to what is and what is not necessary before we act.

Notwithstanding 25 days have elapsed since this matter was put up to the Department, the Department has taken no action in passing on it, and there has been no submission of an estimate from the Budget.

I called up the assistant in charge, Mr. Harllee Branch, this morning and asked him what the situation was and what the Department's opinion was.

He told me that the Department had taken no position upon it, that it is a service that probably should be inaugurated, that the cost of it, based upon other items, on a mileage basis, would probably be $35,000 a round trip, and once a week, 52 trips, would amount to $1,820,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. TABER. He further stated that the postage that would be realized from it, provided they used what he called prohibitory rates, running up to $1 for service to China, 25 cents for Hawaii, and 50 cents or 75 cents for the Philippine Islands, would be $600,000.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I want first to finish the details. Further, that if the rates were fixed upon the same basis as South American rates with a maximum of 60 cents, the revenues would run up to about $300,000. Frankly I believe we always should have an estimate from the Budget, but I believe that when an amendment comes up as this has come up, for a month, the Department ought to take some action upon it and give us the benefit of its advice as to what we ought to do. I have felt I ought to give the House the benefit of the information that I obtained from the Department this morning.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. In the event the Senate disagrees with the action taken by the House, would the gentleman look with favor on a compromise that would appropriate $1,000,000, because $1,000,000 would be more than enough for a semimonthly service rather than a weekly service. That would amount to about $900,000, and a very liberal estimate of revenues resulting from that service would be around $300,000. Therefore, at an expenditure of $600,000, we could inaugurate this service if it was approved by the Post Office Department. I offer that as a suggestion.

Mr. TABER. I am not sure but that I would approve this just the way it stands, but I believe that as a general rule we should have budgetary propositions. However, I do feel that the Department ought to move in a month's time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE].

LET US SHOOT SQUARE WITH THE TAXPAYER AND REQUIRE EACH DIVISION OF THE POSTAL SERVICE TO PAY ITS OWN WAY

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I think the committee is taking the correct attitude regarding the $2,000,000 amendment added in the Senate for foreign air mail. I read the debate at the time the amendment was offered in the Senate. Very little, if any, debate was had upon it. No reason was given for its adoption. We have just now heard the only reasons that have come to light as to the necessity for an extension of this air mail service from San Francisco via Hawaii to Canton, China. We all know that second- and third- and fourth-class mail is being carried at a net loss, as shown from the following reports from the Post Office Department for the past 4 years:

	Revenue	Expenditure	Excess of apportioned expenditures over revenues	Excess of revenues over apportioned expenditures

I hope the proper committees of the House will go into that matter and see if we cannot readjust those rates so that these rates can be taken care of and that this air mail subsidy will stop. Our losses on domestic and foreign air mail the past 4 years is as follows:

	Revenue	Expenditure	Excess of apportioned expenditures over revenues	Excess of revenues over apportioned expenditures

I think the committee has taken the proper attitude and I see no reason why we should extend further the losses to the American people in subsidizing big business to the Orient, to people who cannot pay their debts to us now. I do not see any reason why we should spend our good money in going after this character of business. [Applause.]

At this point, under the permission to extend my remarks, I insert the following:

First-class mail as shown from the above schedule of the Post Office Department has year after year shown a tremendous profit and it is the only service the Post Office Department renders that does not show a loss. Yet we find postal rates on first-class mail have been increased from 2 cents to 3 cents and although a gesture has been made toward returning first-class mail from 3 cents to 2 cents by the last Congress, in granting that privilege to local first-class mail, I believe that this Congress should not adjourn without reducing first-class mail rates from 3 cents to 2 cents.

SECOND-, THIRD-, AND FOURTH-CLASS MAIL

It is not treating the American taxpayer fairly in allowing rates on second-, third-, and fourth-class mail to remain as they are and thus to place this tremendous loss upon the poor people of the United States. If this Congress had the internal stamina to do its duty it would see to it that these rates are properly adjusted. Why should the large mail-order houses, chain stores, large daily newspapers, magazines, and so forth, of this country be allowed to retain their subsidy as above shown amounting to millions of dollars annually. The already overburdened taxpayer is not able to bear this expense.

DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN AIR MAIL

The same arguments that apply to losses suffered in carrying second-, third-, and fourth-class mail apply to the losses in carrying domestic and foreign air mail. Rates should be adjusted for these services so that those using these services pay the expense, otherwise the services should not be rendered. It is unfair to sandbag the employees of the Federal service, including those of the Postal Department, and reduce their salaries through consolidation and elimination, which has been going on at a rapid rate and yet permit these extravagant losses to be suffered as above shown without making proper adjustment in the rates charged for the services rendered.

THE REMEDY

If we will adjust our tariff schedules and will correct our medium of exchange we can deal fairly and justly with all people at home and abroad. We should meet this issue fairly and squarely, and not apply a poultice plaster when major monetary legislation is necessary.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I am asking the House to vote down the motion offered by the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. KAHN], and I am doing that simply for the purpose of getting some additional information on the matter and having that information in time so that it can be considered when the next deficiency appropriation bill is before the House. Personally I am friendly to the proposition. I do not want to get this matter in such shape that it might cause us serious trouble in the future. I suggest to the Membership of the House that they vote down the motion of the gentlewoman from California, and then that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentlewoman from California that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FORD of California) there were—ayes 45, noes 70.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 33: Page 69, after line 18, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 5. That no part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid to any person for the filling of any position for which he or she has been nominated after the Senate upon vote has failed to confirm the nomination of said person, or for the payment of an acting official whose name has been submitted to the Senate and withdrawn."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 33: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 4. No part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid to any person for the filling of any position for which he or she has been nominated after the Senate upon vote has failed to confirm the nomination of such person."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 34: Page 70, line 1, strike out the figure "4" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement with the Senate amendment no. 34 and agree to the same with the following amendment:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POWER PLANT PROJECTS, THE P. W. A. AND THE POWER TRUST

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, electric power, its production, cost, and use, is the most vital as well as volatile question that is before us for solution; and whether we want to realize it or not, that question is now very much before us.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ON MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP OF POWER

President Roosevelt, in his many references made to this matter before and since his election to the Presidency, indicated our course; but for some reason we have not made the progress on P. W. A. power projects that we should have made.

While Governor of the great State of New York, Mr. Roosevelt sent many messages to that legislature about needed corrections in the matter of power rates as well as public statements made by him during that administration. In his book, Looking Forward, published March 1, 1933, at Hyde Park, N. Y., President Roosevelt says:

Let us be clear at the outset that the liberty of individuals to carry on business should not be abrogated unless the larger interests of the many are concerned. It is the purpose of government to see that not only the legitimate interests of the few are protected but the welfare and rights of the many are conserved.

Following that statement he says:

This, I take it, is sound government, not politics.

Further, on page 140, he says:

Power should be discussed in simple, honest terms so it could be understood by millions of our citizens, because, as the Federal Trade Commission has shown, a systematic, subtle, deliberate, and unprincipled campaign of misinformation, of propaganda, and if I may use the words, of lies and falsehoods.

On page 146 is found this statement:

In 1931 the electric, gas, telephone, and telegraph utilities collected from the people $4,000,000,000.

I want to repeat that amount "$4,000,000,000", the exact amount that this Congress voted to President Roosevelt for work relief.

On page 151 is found this purely democratic statement by President Roosevelt:

Where a community or district is not satisfied with the service rendered or the rates charged by a private utility, it has the undeniable right as one of its functions of government, one of its functions of home rule, to set up, after a fair referendum has been taken, its own governmentally owned and operated service.

In the Washington Star for December 19, 1934, in connection with the New York City municipal light project, the President is quoted as having said that the power question was largely a question of mathematics—a question of whether it is cheaper to buy from the private companies or construct one's own plant. In the same article Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS said the Executive already had the authority under existing public-works laws to loan money for construction of municipal power plants but that the fund was almost exhausted. Senator NORRIS is quoted further:

"I don't think this is a bluff either", Senator NORRIS added; "I think the President really means what he said."

Mayor LaGuardia was asked that if the municipal plant were authorized and the private companies then reduced their rates, would that affect his plans. His reply was:

I have heard those promises before, and I am not as gullible as I used to be.

PRESENT POWER RATES EXCESSIVE

Mr. Speaker, what I have said thus far is only a preface for what I now want to lay before this body in the interest of the vast majority of our people, something that is in direct line with the major program confronting this Congress, relief of distress resting so heavily upon our people.

Up to October 1929 the American people were taught by cunning, adroit propaganda to believe many fallacious things about the false prosperity they were then witnessing, one of which fallacies was that we should look up to the so-called "captains of industry" as the sole creators of that prosperity, and those so-called "captains of industry" threw out their chests, accepted the credit, and said, "Look what we did." One year later, when the depression was well under way but by no means at its height, these same so-called "captains of industry" could hardly be found, much less heard of, with their advice to young men about how to succeed in business and all such salubrious verbosity. And ever since then they have almost to a man closed up like clams and crawled into their shells. At least, they have not attempted to tell us until just recently how to get out of the depression. All they are now doing is criticize President Roosevelt, the House, or the Senate, but not a word about a constructive, definite, tangible program to get out of this mess that they and their kind brought upon the people. It is true they and their kind do offer some things that they say should be done, but those things are simply measures that will help them to hold their death grip of profits, with which they have now almost strangled the very life out of American business.

POWER TRUST RECOGNIZES NO PARTY

We Democrats have for several generations accused the Republican Party of being the party of the predatory rich, but recent administrations have proven that the predatory rich have no party. They use all parties and play all ends against the middle, and this statement is not a criticism against the present administration; in fact, it is a warning to good Democrats in this Congress and out of it to come to the rescue of our President, and not only the President but our party, before it is prostituted, ruined, and taken over for the private profit of such "big business" interests as the Power Trust utilities.

President Roosevelt has stated his position, as I have quoted from his book, Looking Forward, where he said, "Let us be clear at the outset." He is perfectly willing and anxious that business, both large and small, shall have their just and legitimate rights fully protected, but he has with equal force stated that the rights of the many must be conserved, and this cannot be done if these gigantic combinations are to continue thwarting the plans of our President, this Congress, and the various departments and administrations set up for relief.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP THE ONLY WEAPON THE POWER TRUST FEARS

Almost every city in America should own its own electric light and power plant. If there is a man in this Congress that does not know that this is a fact, I think the people of his district have made a mistake in sending him here. One may have been denied the opportunity of receiving, or for some other reason may not have received, these facts, and he is excusable for not being in possession of those facts, but he is not excusable if he continues to stay in ignorance of them, because they are all readily available if he will take the time to read the reports of the Federal Trade Commission or other reports on the findings of that very valuable Commission.

Before going into the matter of how the people are bilked and plundered by these Power Trust pirates with their holding company, false bookkeeping to fool the public, and various other means of fraud, I want to make known a few things that have been going on in the Public Works Administration that may have escaped your attention. It did mine until only recently.

I refer particularly, specifically, and directly to the manner in which the Public Works Administration has handled applications for P. W. A. funds filed by municipalities for the purpose of constructing light plants. I insert at this point a letter just received from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, including the list of municipal power-plant applications in which I believe we are interested:

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1935.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCFARLANE: Attached herewith is the list of municipal power-plant applications which you requested in your letter of April 16. You will note that the projects are arranged according to the following headings:

Non-Federal approved applications for power projects—completed or under construction.

Approved applications for power projects—construction not started.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—under study.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—rejections.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—rescinds.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—transfers.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—withdrawals.

Non-Federal applications for power projects—superseded.

In connection with the rejected applications, we have analyzed each project and indicated by code the grounds on which it failed of approval by the Public Works Administration.

Sincerely yours,

LEONA B. GRAHAM,
Special Assistant, for the Administrator.

Attachment.

[Division of Economics and Statistics]

Tabulation no. 635. Description: Applications for power projects; seven parts; through date of April 20, 1935; date tabulated, April 24, 1935; non-Federal projects; copy A standard wiring no. special.

I believe that in my opening remarks, with the quotations from President Roosevelt, I have shown that by his statements he is for the principle of municipal ownership of light and power plants wherever and whenever the municipality can profit by the operation of their own plant as against private ownership and operation. If I am wrong or if the papers have misquoted him, I am sure he will correct me; but until he does we must assume that this is a fact.

Of all the municipalities that have made application to the Public Works Administration, surely many of them met the requirements as laid down by President Roosevelt that would make them eligible for P. W. A. loan and grant, but when I found that out of the several hundred applications filed, totaling more than $612,935,380, that only $3,292,100, not taking into consideration $20,482,000 allotted for water power, had thus far been completed or under construction, I determined right then to look into the matter further, for I believe in municipal ownership of light and power for my own home town and for all other towns and cities.

Many of our cities have taken our President at his word early in his administration and applied for P. W. A. funds with which to build a municipal plant, not simply for the benefits to be derived in reduced rates only, but in the greater matter of keeping the thousands and millions of dollars spent for legitimate costs of electricity at home, rather than having those millions sent to New York City to the national offices of the power holding companies. Let me illustrate what I mean by this statement.

WHAT ARE REASONABLE POWER RATES?

In Fort Worth, Tex., the electric operating company charges a top rate of about 6 cents per kilowatt-hour, which, unreasonably high as it is, is much less than is charged by other companies in other places. The reason I say "unreasonably high" is because it has been definitely and conclusively proven that under anything like normal or average conditions throughout America electricity can be produced in almost every town at approximately three-quarters of 1 cent per kilowatt and can be distributed under reasonable or average conditions at a total cost of 2 cents per kilowatt. In proof of this, the city of Cleveland, Ohio, has been selling electric current at a top rate of 3 cents per kilowatt-hour for nearly 20 years, paying for its plant out of earnings and making a big profit besides. And the Cleveland plant has always operated in sharp competition with a big private company and had but part of the business in the city.

THE TEXAS ELECTRIC SERVICE CO.

This Texas producing company, which charged 6 cents top rate in 1932, made a net profit of approximately $1,740,000, and out of that sent approximately $1,350,000 to the Electric Bond & Share Co. and its intermediate holding companies. This shows that only about $300,000 stayed in Texas out of the net profit to appease the preferred stockholders and the bondholders of the operating company.

Please be reminded that the common stock of these utility companies is all that participates in the profits. The preferred stock and bonds are nothing more than a representation of money advanced or loaned to the company on a specific guaranty of 5- or 6-percent interest return, "if the company makes that much." Those who bought the preferred stock and bonds of these legitimate operating companies have done nothing more than loaned them the money with which they have bought the existing properties and paid for the operation of them so the holding company common-stock holders could make these outlandish profits. The Texas Electric Service Co. in my State has six million common stock, of which 5,998,000 shares are owned by the holding company. In that same operating company there is about six million of obligations in preferred stock and bonds. So you can see the people who have been inveigled into buying the preferred and bonds pay for the whole thing and get 5 and 6 percent, maybe and the New York Shylocks get from 15 percent to as high as 96.8 percent—see page 905, parts 23 and 34, Federal Trade Commission Reports—on their actual investment. And this is how that comes about: The Texas Electric Service Co., which made nearly $2,000,000 profit in 1932, was purchased about 13 years ago by the American Power & Light Co., which is owned by the Electric Bond & Share Co., for about $3,000,000, and is now valued at over $68,000,000.

The purchase price at that time, we must assume, was actually put up by these holding companies and covered all of the properties that existed in that territory at that time. The additions and extensions since then have been paid for by the "suckers" who bought the preferred stock and bonds. Do not ever think these New York boys use their money to buy anything but "profits"; they let the "dear people" buy the properties for them.

I do not know what this company now values their properties at, because they even increase their values annually by claiming their expense account is added capital, but a year or so ago they valued them at about sixty-eight million. These properties that they had paid three million for only about 13 years ago, and the dear people had built onto and added the increased values for them, showing an increase in values of about 2,250 percent profit.

All through the Federal Trade Commission reports one finds that the annual profits from the monthly light and power bills paid by the public run from reasonable returns to most unreasonable rates of profit, as illustrated by the following:

[From the Federal Trade Commission reports, pts. 23 and 24]

Profit of the American Power & Light Co. derived from subsidiaries:

	Percent
Kansas Gas & Electric Co	3.76
Portland Gas & Coke Co	43.3
Southwestern Power & Light Co., Inc., New York	51.86
Florida Power & Light Co	54.00
Minnesota Power & Light Co	10.6
Nebraska Power & Light Co	96.8
Average	26.00

There is no excuse for anyone remaining in ignorance of the facts regarding this most gigantic of all swindles perpetrated upon the American people, which has now reached the proportion that will make this Congress and this administration the laughing stock of the Nation if we do not remedy the situation.

MUNICIPAL POWER PLANTS HAVE MADE GOOD RECORD

In the United States there are some 65 municipalities that are free of taxes for local government expenses as a result of owning their public utilities and about half the cities in this country now own their own light and power plants. About the only cities in this country that are in excellent shape financially are those who own their revenue-producing utilities.

POWER TRUST LOBBY ACTIVITIES

The Wheeler-Rayburn holding-company bill furnishes a good example of the limits to which this power octopus has its tentacles wrapped around our governmental affairs. Every Congressman and Senator, as well as the President, has received thousands of the Power Trust propaganda letters opposing that bill, and I regret to say that from the weakening support that is coming out for the bill it looks like the Power Trust propaganda is convincing some committee members that they should do what their own conscience surely tells them they should not do.

The President's stand on that bill is again in line with his previous commitments on this power issue, and again I say that there is no excuse for any Member of this or future Congresses being ignorant of the facts in this issue as disclosed in the findings of the investigation carried on by the Federal Trade Commission.

POWER TRUST PYRAMIDS

I have prepared some extracts from the Federal Trade Commission report, Senate Documents No. 92 and 213, Sixty-eighth Congress, second session, that I will refer to briefly. This shows the pyramid of ownership vested in the Electric Bond & Share Co., the biggest of all the holding companies, which owns, or did at that time, about eight other holding companies, who in turn owned numerous operating companies, but these ownerships change rapidly, due to stock juggling, tax dodging, and various other "high-financing methods" to swindle the public. They change, however, in form only, not in principle for the basic object of holding companies is to swindle and deceive.

No. 1, owned by Electric Bond & Share is American Power & Light Co., which in turn owns the following: Citizens Power & Light Co., Council Bluffs, Iowa; Central Arizona Light & Power Co., Phoenix, Ariz.; Consumers Water Co., Miami, Fla.; Crystal Ice & Cold Storage Co., Dallas, Tex.; Eagle Pass Water Co., Eagle Pass, Tex.; Florida Power & Light Co., Miami, Fla.; Fort Worth Power & Light Co., Fort Worth, Tex.; Helena Gas & Electric Co., Helena, Mont.; Kansas Gas & Electric Co., Wichita, Kans.; Miami Beach Railway Co., Miami, Fla.; Miami Water Co., Miami, Fla.; Minnesota Power & Light Co., Duluth, Minn.; Missoula Public Service Co., Missoula, Mont.; Montana Power Co., Butte, Mont.; Nebraska Power Co., Omaha, Nebr.; Northern Power Co., Superior, Wis.; Northwestern Electric Co., Portland, Oreg.; Pacific Power & Light Co., Portland, Oreg.; Portland Gas & Coke Co., Portland, Oreg.; St. Augustine Co., St. Augustine, Fla.; Texas Electric Service Co., Fort Worth, Tex.; Texas Power & Light Co., Dallas, Tex.; Texas Public Utilities Corporation, Dallas, Tex.; Washington Water Power Co., Spokane, Wash.

THE GOLD DUST TWINS

There are 24 companies listed by the Federal Trade Commission as being owned by the American Power & Light Co., which is in turn owned almost 100 percent by the Electric Bond & Share Co. This is worse than it might appear to just look at this list, for the "Gold Dust Twins" in my State—the Texas Electric Service Co. at Fort Worth and the Texas Power & Light Co. at Dallas—supply several hundred communities in central Texas; and, as previously illustrated in the case of one of these twins, these two sets of producing properties were purchased about 13 years ago from the Southwestern Utilities Corporation for less than $7,000,000, and are now valued at and the people pay rates based on a valuation of about $150,000,000.

So much for company no. 1 owned by this powerful holding company. No. 2 is the Electric Power & Light Corporation, which owns Arkansas Power & Light Co., Pine Bluff, Ark.; Dallas Power & Light Co., Dallas, Tex.; Dallas Railway & Terminal Co., Dallas, Tex.; Idaho Power Co., Boise, Idaho; Inter-City Terminal Railway Co., Little Rock, Ark.; Louisiana Gas & Fuel Co., Shreveport, La.; Louisiana Power & Light Co., New Orleans, La.; Mississippi Central Power Co., Jackson, Miss.; Mississippi Power & Light Co., Jackson, Miss.; Nevada Power Co., Boise, Idaho; New Orleans Public Service, Inc., New Orleans, La.; Salmon River Power & Light Co., Boise, Idaho; Texas Interurban Railway, Dallas, Tex.; Utah Light & Traction Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; Utah Power & Light Co., Salt Lake City, Utah; Western Colorado Power Co., Durango, Colo.

Then no. 3, the National Power & Light Co., owns companies at Birmingham, Ala.; Raleigh, N. C.; Rogersville, Tenn.; Houston, Tex.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Memphis, Tenn.; Newport, Tenn.; and Jackson, Tenn.; several companies in some towns.

Then no. 4, Lehigh Power Securities Corporation, owns companies at Allentown, Pa., and Lancaster, Pa.

Then no. 5, American & Foreign Power, owns operating companies in Argentina, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Ecuador, Guatemala, Mexico, Panama, Venezuela, China, and India.

Then no. 6, American Gas & Electric Co., owns Appalachian Electric Power Co., Ohio Power Co., Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., the Scranton Electric Co., Atlantic City Electric Co., Kentucky & West Virginia Power Co., Wheeling Electric Co., Indiana General Service Co., and Kingsport Utilities, Inc.

Then no. 7, Commonwealth & Southern with its subsidiaries.

No. 8, Electric Investors, Inc., owns investments in various banks, insurance, industrial, and so forth.

THE REMEDY—MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP AND WHEELER-RAYBURN BILL

In the face of this giant, this selfish giant, the Power Trust, I say we have an issue that is now demanding our honest attention, and I say honest because I mean the consideration of the people who elected us and sent us here to look after the interest of the majority and not the favored, rich, selfish minority. I am not going to burden this body with statistics that are available to every Member and every American citizen as to how the wealth of our Nation has rapidly sifted into the hands of a menacingly few people, for again, I say, if any Member does not know this trend, and that if not checked it means revolution and ruin for this Nation, his constituents made a mistake in sending him here.

These public utilities have combined capital that probably amounts to the equivalent of the wealth of the Nation. This, coupled with the unrestrained selfishness that has been exhibited by them constitutes a menace to our Government that demands the immediate enactment of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill at this Congress.

Passage of the Wheeler-Rayburn bill will permit proper supervision of the holding companies, which are now used as a smokescreen for sandbagging operating companies who in turn, because of this tremendous holding-company expense, are required to charge the consuming public exorbitant rates. The only real remedy any local community has left to force down unfair rates is the construction of their own municipal light plant. This administration is the first administration within my memory that has shown a sympathetic attitude toward municipal light-plant construction. With the above information furnished, I trust that all cities and towns within the United States interested in owning their own utility will immediately file or refile and/or push their applications now pending under the new public works relief bill for construction of their municipal utilities.

THE PROGRESS OF RECOVERY

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, better times are undoubtedly ahead for the people of this Nation. This is not just a good-sounding sentence to bolster up an uncertain hope. This is a statement of fact, backed by conditions that are plainly visible, as you may note by the following letter I have just received:

THE UNION NATIONAL BANK,
Wichita, Kans., March 22, 1935.

Hon. JOHN M. HOUSTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Five years this Nation has bowed to fear. Dire predictions as to the future have been freely indulged by men whose fortunes were built on courage and enterprise, not on fear and dismay.

Some still indulge this pessimism. Some still doubt the genius of the American people to rise above a crisis. Some criticize the administration as too radical, some condemn it as too conservative. And foolish people, listening to ghost stories, shuddering at their own shadow, permit opportunities of a lifetime to pass them by.

Today business is showing a steady advance all over the United States. Black breath curls upward from long-listless smokestacks, long-idle factories begin to hum, transportation lines are increasing their loads, farmers are paying their debts, and building construction is struggling to rise from its debris. Annual statements for 1934 coming to our files show substantial gains in varied lines.

Business is on the upgrade. The depression is history, with important lessons for all. America is still the leading nation of the world, her people the most intelligent, her resources incomparable, her future better than her past. If the United States bonds outstanding should reach forty billions they would still be the best security in the world.

Kansas has varied resources, three of which top the list—wheat, livestock, and oil. Wheat has recovered from a low of 25 cents in 1932 to 90 cents today. Cattle, hogs, horses, mules have all reached prices several times their recent low levels. Oil is being produced profitably, conditions of production are more stable than ever before, and the State's petroleum fields are attracting the attention of the oil world.

The unemployed, those willing to work but deprived by an unbalanced economic system of their rightful opportunity, see hope in the new social program for which the sufferings of the past 5 years opened the way. This Nation today answers the age-old question, "Am I my brother's keeper?" with "I am", and is preparing to perform the natural duties of a fortunate brother to one less favored.

One year ago this bank announced that recovery was beginning. Today we state it is well under way. Tomorrow it will be in full swing. Ups and downs will be travelled, like valleys crossed on the road to higher peaks. Honesty, industry, judgment, thrift, courage, vision, and their allied virtues will ever continue to be essentials of success. No nation can legislate its people into permanent prosperity. The people must do that themselves by their own conduct.

In few, if any, parts of this great country are natural conditions more favorable today than in Wichita and Kansas. Is it not time to pierce the cloud of gloom with the sunshine of better days? Is it not time to banish fear and to go confidently forward?

Sincerely,

W. B. HARRISON, President.

SUDDEN & CHRISTENSON, INC.—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 164)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the enclosed decision rendered on December 22, 1934, by the arbitrator, John Clark Knox, judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, to the end that legislation may be enacted authorizing an appropriation of the sum of $78,025.83 for the payment to Sudden & Christenson, Inc., John A. Hooper, Emil T. Kruse, Edward Kruse, Gilbert Loken, and G. W. McNear, Inc., or their successors in interest, as recommended by the arbitrator, upon receipt by the Secretary of State of satisfactory releases from the respective claimants.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 22, 1935.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA LEGISLATION—LOANS FROM FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATION OF PUBLIC WORKS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the lady from New Jersey.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2035, with Mr. BLOOM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, S. 2035, does not increase the amount of loan previously provided, but merely permits the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to include the Municipal Court, Police Court, Juvenile Court, and Recorder of Deeds Buildings in the list of projects heretofore approved.

When the proper time comes the committee will consider an amendment to this bill for a purpose which I shall take a few minutes to outline. It is to advance to the Children's Hospital in the District of Columbia the amount of $100,000 from this unexpended fund.

This hospital, I may say, is doing a very wonderful work in the District of Columbia for the children living here. A few days ago I was invited to visit this hospital and spent several hours investigating just what is being done by the Children's Hospital. I want to say to you members of the committee that I came away with the feeling that we Members of Congress really know very little about what is happening here in the Nation's Capital. We see our beautiful buildings of marble and stone, and we hear a great deal about beautifying Washington with parks and all the other things to make it attractive to visitors, but we know very little about what is going on in the most important buildings in our District. I am sure you will agree with me that there are no more important buildings than the hospitals of the District. It is an absolute fact that the hospitals in the District of Columbia are inadequate and overcrowded, but none more so than Children's Hospital.

I made a few notes while going through the hospital which I thought would be interesting to you, and I shall submit for your consideration my observations.

There are 9 resident staff doctors engaged in the work of caring for more than 5,000 children. Two of these are women. One hundred nurses for the 24-hour period are employed; each nurse on duty for 8 hours, meaning about 33 nurses to take care of 175 daily bed patients. Remember those are babies and children who require a great deal more attention than adults; also an average of 5,000 out-patients per month brought in to the clinic daily. If you could have been with me to see the marvelous work that is being conducted in those clinics, I am sure you would agree that we certainly owe a very great debt to this hospital. The number of nurses is less than half the number required by the standard of American Hospital Association College of Nurses. Right here I want to pay a tribute to the director of the hospital, Miss Gibson, for the great work she is doing in behalf of these suffering children.

In talking over the hospital with her, I felt that God must love her for the wonderful work and the personal care that she is giving to His little ones. These children, of course, have all kinds of diseases. It is a general hospital. There are more than 100 doctors in the District who are giving specialized free service, and if it were not for these it would be utterly impossible for the hospital to carry on.

I should also like to pay a tribute to the Junior League, too, which has undertaken to furnish four full-line qualified social-service nurses to the institution. Three others of these social-service nurses are paid for out of the hospital funds.

Twenty-seven or more volunteer workers are doing a great amount of work to cut down the expenses of this hospital.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. I noticed a statement in the papers the other day to the effect that Commissioner Allen favored some comprehensive plan of consolidation of hospitals. Should we take this consolidation plan into consideration when thinking of this $100,000, or is this to be a separate hospital?

Mrs. NORTON. This is a separate hospital. I sincerely hope that plan will be approved by the House, but it has nothing to do with this particular hospital at this time. Later it may be considered in the consolidation plan.

Three dollars and eighty-three cents per day is the actual cost of a child in this hospital. The average national cost and the cost in my State is about $5. So the cost is really very much under the average cost in a large city. Sixty-seven cents is paid for dispensary care for each child. The Board of Welfare does not pay for any dispensary service. The city pays only $2.48 per child for hospital care, which is much below the actual cost.

Fifty-one nurses must be lodged outside, adding not only additional cost to the hospital but very great inconvenience. If this $100,000 is given to the Commissioners for this work, the new plan will enable much more space for nurses' quarters within the hospital building.

There is no waiting room of adequate size for these children. Much of the time they must remain outdoors until their turn comes to be taken care of in the clinic. At least 200 children a day pass through this clinic, and the space allowed for the care of these children, each of which, of course, is accompanied by its mother, is only about what should be given to 50 patients; so you can understand how inadequate it is. On pleasant days it is not so bad, because they can stay outside, but on stormy days it is very pitiable to see these children waiting their turn, suffering as they are with all kinds of diseases.

There is a heating plant in this building that has been condemned and which is absolutely unsafe for the children. The pressure has been reduced from 150 pounds to 25 pounds; and for 24 hours during this past winter the hospital was entirely without heat. At any time a very serious accident may develop.

The hospital has made a great many efforts to raise money, and as a result of a recent radio appeal did raise something like $6,000, which made possible a few very necessary improvements. I am mentioning only a few of the outstanding necessities that occurred to me in going through the hospital. It would take far too much time to give you a detailed account.

I come from a city that is not nearly so beautiful as Washington; we have not the elaborate buildings in our city that we have here in Washington, but I want to say to you that we believe it is much more important to take care of suffering human beings than it is to beautify the city. We can point with pride to the finest medical center to be found anywhere in the country. The result is a very greatly reduced death rate. Now, I know it certainly would not be the purpose of Congress to have a hospital here in Washington devoted exclusively to little children and have it as inadequate as this hospital is; and so today I am drawing attention to these facts and asking you to help us secure this $100,000 appropriation from the Public Works funds of the District in order to give these children a chance in life.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

There are very few of us who have not come in contact with little children. Most of us have children of our own, or have had; and we would not want to feel that if we were deprived of the means of giving these children the care they should have that they were going to die or be crippled because we were unable to supply them with the necessities they are entitled to have. Therefore, I appeal to you today when this amendment comes before the House to sustain the committee and help us secure this very much needed improvement. A few days ago we passed an old-age-pension bill for the Nation, a very good bill; and I felt greatly privileged to vote for that bill. But I want to say that it does not seem to me nearly so important to take care of old age as it does to take care of little children, because, after all, children are brought into the world with no consent on their part and they are often obliged to suffer all kinds of ills.

As I went through that building and saw a makeshift pool that has been set up for the treatment of infantile paralysis, the comparison between it and the great foundation in Georgia for the treatment of infantile paralysis came to my mind.

I wish you could see this set-up in the Children's Hospital. It is an example of what can be accomplished with little money but much sincerity of purpose and human cooperation; you would want to send the men and women responsible for that hospital a vote of thanks, for they are doing marvelous work with the most meager kind of equipment and a minimum of cost. It is to help their humanitarian efforts that we are asking for this appropriation today.

Another thing that amazed me was to see an enormous refrigerator, probably sent by some big hotel here in the city, and equipped with home-made machinery installed to supply the necessary cooling refrigeration.

Instead of having an entirely new, fine porcelain refrigerator, this refrigerator had to serve their purposes though inadequately. I am stating these little details to point out the devotion of the staff responsible for the good that is being accomplished at Children's Hospital.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I wonder if the $100,000 which has been requested will be adequate to put the hospital in the condition it should be in to take care of the number of patients they have to take care of?

Mrs. NORTON. Well, I do not think that it will be adequate, but I may say to the gentleman, if we vote this $100,000 it is going to do more good than any $100,000 you have ever voted for any purpose since we came to Congress.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentlewoman that I am in hearty sympathy with the amendment and certainly feel that Congress should not be lacking in its duty toward the youngsters of the District of Columbia, but from the condition which the gentlewoman outlines I was afraid the $100,000 would not be enough, and if the gentlewoman has any figures upon the matter upon which to base an estimate, we might be able to get an additional amount if the $100,000 is not adequate.

Mrs. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that for the present I think $100,000 will be adequate for the improvements that are suggested at this time. May I also say that I believe before long the new director of health, Dr. Ruhland, who has come to the District to take charge of public health will probably have a very comprehensive hospital program to bring before the District and I think at that time we shall be able to add to it.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. NORTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN. I want to congratulate the District of Columbia on having such an able and efficient Chairman of the District Committee. I know the welfare of the District is safe in the lady's hands on account of the splendid welfare experience she has had in her native State. I say that the poor, unfortunate, sick, and afflicted children of Washington are indeed fortunate to have the gentlewoman as Chairman of the District Committee.

Mrs. NORTON. I thank the gentleman, but believe that each and every Member of the House is just as much interested as is your chairman when the question of humanity is being considered.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, may I say for the benefit of those who are interested in this legislation that in June of 1934, after many conferences between the House and Senate District Committees, we finally enacted a measure providing for $10,750,000 to carry on a program of public works in the District of Columbia. This program embraced an extension to the Tuberculosis Hospital, an extension to Gallinger Hospital, an extension to Lorton prison, and the sewage disposal plant. At that time there was no recital in the bill dealing with the juvenile court, the police court, and the recorder's building and all that the pending measure does is to leave the amount intact, namely $10,750,000, and broadens the scope of the expenditure to include these additional buildings, together with that embraced in the committee amendment providing $100,000 for the Children's Hospital.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing controversial about this measure, and there is no reason why it should not pass this House.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the time that has been given to me by both sides of the House.

Mr. Chairman, this is the forty-sixth anniversary of the opening of Oklahoma by a "run." Many of our citizens came to Oklahoma C. O. D. Some of them came from other States P. D. Q. Then, after the first drought, they sent back an SOS, and know they are living on F. E. R. A.

When the State was opened for settlement, its virgin soil beckoned to thousands of homeless men.

Oklahoma's unspoiled beauty attracted men and women from every point of the compass and from every strata of society. As the Indians were driven from Florida, Alabama, Georgia, and the Carolinas, their trail of tears ended there, and as they beheld the natural beauty of that Territory, they said in their own language "Oklahom", which means beautiful land. There the red man hunted buffalo, deer, and wild turkey. The life was easy and happy. There was a plentiful supply of fruits, nuts, and wild game. The streams were full of fish. There were wild plums, persimmons, wild grapes, pecans, walnuts, and hickory nuts. There were rabbits, squirrels, wild ducks, plovers, prairie chickens, and bobwhites in abundance.

But not for long were the Indians to be undisturbed, because Oklahoma history had begun. Then came a chapter crowded with romance and adventure. The most colorful characters that ever crossed the pages of history played their last stand in Oklahoma. The household words of those days tell the story. Buffalo hunters, bullwhackers, pioneers; the gambler, the cattle king, the squaw man; war paint, scalp-lock tomahawk; branding irons, cattle rustlers, six-shooters; rolling plains, sod shanties, gyp water, settlers, nestors, United States troopers; free land, boomers, sooners, camp fires, covered wagons, outlaws; the Jameses, the Jennings, the Daltons, the Doolins; sod plows, milo maize, droughts, Chisolm Trail, Santa Fe Trail; sand storms, cyclones, politics, street fights, saloons, the dugout, the mustang, the coyote, kaffir corn, wheat, cotton, corn; coal, lead, zinc; oil, oil, oil; paved roads, air fields, skyscrapers.

We have made progress from those early days, our desire for speed increasing all the time. In those days when a fellow missed a stagecoach, he just waited a week until the next one came along. But today a guy gets hoppin' mad, if he misses one section of the revolving door of one of our skyscrapers.

The early history of Oklahoma is written in colors as flaming as an Oklahoma sunset, and the thing that made that history colorful was the indomitable spirit of the people themselves. The picturesque cavalcade of Coronado with armor gleaming in the sunlight and plumes dancing in the breeze opened the first chapter with a flash of glory. Then came the trader, the trapper, the trooper, and the missionary. On the headstone of a grave in the Neosho Valley is the following inscription: "In memory of Epaphrus Chapman who died in 1825; first missionary to the Osages." Chapman was typical of those adventurous spirits who left their bones to bleach on the rolling prairies, inhabited first only by red men. There were many great scouts and soldiers and explorers and missionaries. There is a long list of Indians whose names mean dignity and honor, but I do not have time here to call the roll of honor of that proud and haughty race.

We owe much to the red man. In fact, we owe the whole State to them. You know the difference between the Indian and the white man is this: the Indian scalps his enemy but the white man skins his friend.

The red man gives color to the history of Oklahoma. The Indians also gave us the names of most of our streams and mountains and towns and cities. These names all have meaning to Indians, but they do not mean much to us. Sometimes the names of Oklahoma towns recited together have a meaning all their own. For instance, Sallisaw, Henryetta, Wagoner, Bushyhead. The Indians have added some great names to Oklahoma history such names as Chief Sequoyah, General Stanwaite, Senator Owen, Will Rogers, and hundreds of others.

On the morning of the 22d of April 1889, every manner of man and vehicle were assembled on the Kansas line ready for the run. Swarming like bees, they struggled for position. At high noon the shrill notes of a bugle silenced the confusion. A United States cavalry trooper raised a carbine. A hundred thousand hearts leaped to a hundred thousand throats. A hundred thousand hopes hung on that signal. The carbine flashed and Oklahoma was opened with a pistol shot. In a few hours a new territory was populated and cities and towns sprang up with the magic of an Arabian Nights story. That night a hundred thousand campfires twinkled like new stars in the firmament, and the savory odor of frying bacon was rising from every quarter section of the new empire.

Then in 1901, on the 6th day of August, the roulette wheel of chance spun around again, and the Government opened by lottery—Congressman KENNEY would have liked that—the remaining surplus lands of the Comanche, Kiowa, Apache, Wichita, and Caddo Tribes. This ended the last great land opening in Oklahoma.

And, finally, what could be more fitting to climax this stirring episode of Oklahoma history than to have a dashing, rough-riding, two-fisted Teddy Roosevelt himself sign the bill for statehood? Thus in 1907 Oklahoma became the forty-sixth star in the flag.

It seemed very appropriate that the young State of Oklahoma should be opened with a run. The very manner of opening the land to settlement appealed only to the daring, the active, the courageous, the swift, the strong, and the young. Thus did Oklahoma in a unique manner attract hand-picked settlers with the spirit to do or die. Like Gideon's band those best fitted for the stern hardships of pioneer life were sifted out by the nature of the contest.

And even after the "run" people still poured into the new territory. In the old States it was a common thing for the people to sit on their porches and watch a covered wagon go rolling by, the husband and wife sitting on the spring seat and half a dozen children peeping out from beneath the wagon sheet. This American ship of the desert was freighted with the hopes, dreams, and ambitions that made Oklahoma great.

Here they came to Oklahoma, the melting pot of America. The shrewd New England Yankee with his practical business methods, the courteous southerner with his statesmanship, the easterner with his culture, the hardy westerner with his courage, the northern farmer with his superior methods of agriculture—all joined in the common cause of building a commonwealth, each one bringing his pearls of wisdom, culture, and experience to lay as rich treasure at the feet of this young State. Neighbor helped neighbor in the feeling of common unity. The general attitude was one for all and all for one.

The opening was gay and thrilling, but the real test came afterward. It came when the provisions that were brought along gave out. It came with the long stretch of homemaking—securing a water supply, providing a shelter. There were log cabins and dugouts and half dugouts, and there were tents and there were sod shanties. Then again there were the hardships of the weather—the blasting wind and the blazing sun. There were sand storms, cyclones, and droughts.

THE DROUGHT

You remember the year the drought began,
The sky took on a brazen tan,
  And water holes dried
  And cattle half died,
In the time of the terrible drought.

The earth cracked up like sun-baked clay
And the maize was good for naught but hay,
And kaffir corn was all curled up,
  And the sun was hot
  As a blazing blot,
And drank up the ponds at a sup.

So the drought went on from year to year,
And the tough mesquite was sad and sear,
And the sky looked hard as pointed steel,
  And the hot winds blew
  And the whirlwinds, too,
And the earth plowed up as dry as meal.

The prairie dogs deep and deeper went—
The Indians knew what that sign meant
And shook their heads with knowing nod,
  And the dry spell stayed
  And the settlers prayed
"That rain might fall, Almighty God."

Sometimes a cloud in the heat of the day
Would float into view and hurry away,
For the cloud was dust in the droughty days
  And the sky was high
  And the sky was dry
And the sun would set with scorching rays.

It grew so hot that a storm arose
And brought the drought to a tardy close
And cooled those winds so hot from hell
  But we hear
  From the old pioneer
His graphic tale, "the long dry spell."

Western Oklahoma never would have been settled if it had not been for the humble little prairie dog. Now we did not eat the prairie dogs, but they were destructive to the crops. So the counties decided to help the farmers by helping to destroy the prairie dogs. So they offered a bounty for each dead prairie dog we carried in to them. All of those westerners were good shots, so the prairie dogs accumulated faster than the county authorities could dispose of them. So finally Kiowa County told us not to bring the whole dog in, but just to bring the head or tail in so they could tell that we had killed it. Then pretty soon Washita County did the same thing, so we soon got wise to it; and we took the heads to Kiowa and the tails to Washita, and we settled western Oklahoma on heads and tails.

There is another little animal that is a native of the West and that is—

THE JACK RABBIT

I like the jack rabbit
Because of his habit
Of racing the hounds in the clear
  He always runs in the clear.

He leaves the plum thickets
And bramble briar wickets
To wildcats and foxes and deer
  To the elk and the deer.

He chooses his races
In the open spaces
And waits for the hounds to appear
This rabbit they call a mule ear.

When the hounds give chase
He opens the race
By twisting his tail awry
He cocks his tail awry.

He runs off a ways
And stands up to gaze
To see if they mean to try
And when they really try—

He's off with a canter
And makes them a banter
By twisting his tail awry,
He cocks his tail awry.

But like the plover
He spurns the cover
And spreads himself to fly,
He makes the distance fly.

Then there was white gravy, too. I do not want to forget it; I could not forget it if I wanted to. Western Oklahoma never would have been settled if it had not been for white gravy. What mother made it out of I do not know. Our rations would give out but mother would always have plenty of white gravy. It saved thousands of homesteaders from being forced to leave their claims. Every morning there was enough white gravy made in those two counties alone to spread a white blanket over the entire State.

Even with the heads-and-tails life for existence, even with the white gravy and alkali water, I remember those days on a Government claim as the happiest days of my life.

THE OLD SOD HOUSE

I lived on the plains in an old sod house
And played in the sage with rabbit and grouse.
I found the bear grass and gathered its pod,
And lived like a king in a mansion of sod,
For life was free in the early days
Where wild ducks feed and cattle graze.

You see, my father had staked a claim
And brought his family to prove the same.
Oh, the life was rough and sort o' hard
But we went on without regard
To inconvenient western fare
And built a home of gladness there.

Our house was built of the native sod,
But the hearts within lived close to God.
This palace contained a single room
And just one window dispelled the gloom,
But the souls within created the light
And especially so on a wintery night.

With mother and father and Cousin Jim,
Sister and brother, and the rest of them,
Including grandma, who furnished the cheer,
They kept things merry most of the year.
It seems like a dream as I think of it now—
We lived in a house we built with a plough.

The fireplace served as the altar of love,
For which we thanked the Father above.
We gathered there at the end of day
To fast and feast and frolic and play.
The meat was scarce and so was the meal,
But of love and joy we had a good deal.

Grandfather sat in a corner there
And grandma sat in her little low chair.
They'd tell us stories of the long ago
And stop and listen to the flame spit snow,
Then grandma would make some popcorn balls
And we'd make shadows on the old sod walls.

Then father would say he'd bet his clothes
That he could win at dominoes,
And mother would look from her sewing and say,
"And if you lose, you've nothing to pay!"
Then we laughed and had a game,
But he let us win it just the same.

Then from the Book a chapter he read,
And after a prayer we scampered to bed.
I want to go back to those happy days,
And sit once more and stare in the blaze.
I want to go back and chase the grouse
And live once more in the old sod house.

When I think of the spirit of those rugged pioneer settlers, it stirs my soul. They were not daunted by the lack of church buildings or schoolhouses. The organization of many a church took place under a wagon sheet or a brush arbor. As to the schools, some pretty young "school marm" was induced to leave the old home town and come out to this new country to impart knowledge of the three R's to the future farmers, statesmen, and business men of the new Territory. What did it matter to this young schoolmistress that the children gathered around her in a sod house with the flowers nodding gaily from its earthen roof. Those brave spirits never knew the tragedy of the unprepared.

It was this spirit—this pioneer spirit of achievement and progress that made Oklahoma great. It was this spirit that prompted Albert Payne to lead the settlers back into the Territory after they had been twice driven out by the United States troops.

RESOURCES

That same spirit of chance has developed our State. It opened our oil fields and built our skyscrapers. That is the old sooner spirit. That is the spirit of believing in one's self and in the future. That is the spirit of the pioneer who did not know how to quit.

This conquering spirit of the pioneer wrested from the land its treasure. When Coronado and his gold-seeking Spaniards came, Oklahoma opened not the doors to her wealth. But those doors yielded to the compelling hands of the homesteader.

First. There is the wealth of her natural beauty. She has streams, mountains, and plains, fascinating and beautiful. The northwest has the unique and colorful Red Hills. The skyline of the southwest is coxcombed by the rugged Wichitas. The south central is rockribbed by the Arbuckles. The north central has the romantic Osage Hills, while the untamed Kiamichi make southeastern Oklahoma a wild paradise.

Then, again, Oklahoma has every imaginable kind of stream from Big Elk to Little River, from the peaceful Chikaskia to the turbulent Canadian, from the deep Verdigris to the shallow Cimarron, from the muddy Washita to the sparkling Spavinaw.

Yes, we have all kinds of rivers. Not long ago we had a flood-control convention in Oklahoma, and a big, "instutin' engineer" came down there and made a speech to tell us how to control our rivers. He said that we needed drainage experts down there. Drainage experts—why, we invented that term. Why, there are oil-stock salesmen in Oklahoma who have drained every State east of the Mississippi. It is not drainage we need. It is some fellow who can dam up one of our rivers and make it stay dammed.

This big consulting engineer said in his eloquent speech, "I was reared on the banks of the old Missouri, and I learned about rivers from her. In the evening when the sun hung low in the west I watched the long shadows of the trees as they faded into the dark and mysterious vapors that arose from her swift-moving tide, and I learned about rivers from her. And as I watched that current day after day I was mystified; I wondered from whence it came and whither it went."

Now, that engineer might know about the old Missouri. I am not questioning his knowledge of her, but he did not learn about Oklahoma rivers from her. Why, mister, if you never saw the old South Canadian on a tear, "you ain't seen nothing." Why, man alive, that old heifer can run uphill faster than the Missouri could fall over Niagara. And as to mystery—there are farmers along that old river today who spend their time thinking of the mystery of it. Some of them used to have land that they do not have now, and some have land they did not used to have. She is a Biblical old stream. She giveth and she taketh away, and they know not from whence it cometh nor whither it goeth.

Oklahoma not only has mountains and rivers but she has canyons and caves and prairies and plains.

Northwestern Oklahoma is a cattle country, and on farther west are the intriguing plains of the Panhandle. Sometimes the wind blows out there. So those people invented a wind barometer so they could judge the wind. Many of the houses are equipped with these wind barometers. They have a big pole sticking out from the gable end of the house. On the end of this pole is fastened a log chain. When the wind blows hard enough to make that log chain stand out straight it is too windy to work, but if the chain sags a little, they go right on pitching hay.

Coronado came to Oklahoma seeking Quivira, the fabled land with seven cities of gold, but he returned empty-handed for Quivira opened not her gates to this armed force. And then for 400 years afterwards Oklahoma held the secret of her hidden wealth. It remained for the homesteader to find her riches, for they lay in hidden mines of zinc and coal, in secret pools of oil, and fertile fields of soil.

Today Oklahoma has not merely seven cities of Cibola, but 77 cities in 77 counties, each one producing enough wealth in a single year to match Coronado's wildest Spanish dream.

Here in this wonderland, oil volcanoes spout their black gold high over the derrick, and Oklahoma bids high for first place in the production of mineral petroleum. One half of her 77 counties produce either gas or oil, and yet her western oil reserves have not been tapped.

There is enough unmined coal in Oklahoma to turn every factory wheel in the United States for a thousand years. At the present rate of production the Geological Survey estimates that there is enough unmined coal in Oklahoma to last 26,000 years. Oklahoma stands thirteenth among the States in the production of coal.

With her coal and gas together, Oklahoma stands first in the production of fuel which is the very foundation of industrial life.

Oklahoma produces more zinc than all the rest of the Nation together, and stands second among the States in the production of lead.

The building materials of Oklahoma are illimitable. She has enough glass sand to make a glass roof over the entire State and have glass sand left. She has great ledges of limestone, hills of gypsum and mountains of granite. She has quarries of marble and sandstone. She has an inexhaustible supply of clay for the manufacture of brick, tile, and pottery.

Oklahoma has enough asphalt to pave every road in the State; while her salt beds contain the salt of the earth.

Although Oklahoma is considered a prairie State, she has a vast amount of uncut timber, and stands twenty-fourth among the States in the production of lumber. The mountainous southeast has an abundant supply of short-leaf pine and the State produces more different kinds of hardwood than all of Europe combined. So you see Oklahoma has enough building material to last forever.

Furthermore, there are the agricultural resources. Although Oklahoma ranks second among the States in mineral production and first in fuel, yet in her greatest year she produced more in agricultural wealth than she did in mineral products. Oklahoma is primarily an agricultural State, and her greatest treasure lies in the first 6 inches of the soil.

Oklahoma stands first in the production of broomcorn, second in the production of pecans, second in the production of grain sorghum, third to fifth in the production of wheat, third to seventh in the production of cotton, twelfth in the production of corn. In addition to these, her great production of oats, barley, rye, peanuts, and fruits give her first place in diversified crops, which is the most important factor in the agricultural program.

Then, again, Oklahoma is a great livestock State. She is high in the production of hogs, eleventh in cattle, seventh in poultry, and the Oklahoma City stockyards are seventh in the United States in the number of livestock handled each year.

As among the Southern States, Oklahoma stands first in the production of butter, second in the production of turkeys, second in the production of mules, and second in the production of furs.

The fabulous wealth of Quivira is a reality. Where once the buffalo grazed, today blooded livestock fatten on the succulent grasses of Oklahoma and bring wealth to the State.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I would like to invite the gentleman to California. He seems to have the California spirit. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I appreciate that, for California has the spirit of advertising, and that is a mighty good spirit.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I hesitated to interrupt the gentleman's very eloquent address, in which he is painting the glories of Oklahoma. The gentleman has spoken about the oil and gas industry in that great State. It is a fact, and I know the gentleman will allow it to be placed in the RECORD at this point, that it was the pioneer oil and gas man who went from my State of West Virginia into Oklahoma who really opened up that great industry for the gentleman's State.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. You know that when a hen lays an egg she flies up on the barnyard fence and tells the whole world about it. When a duck lays an egg she waddles off from her nest and says nothing about it. The result is that the whole world eats hen eggs and nobody eats a duck's egg. If anybody ever tried to eat a duck's egg, they understand why the duck says nothing about it. If you have nothing to advertise but climate in your State, you should take a lesson from the duck. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I might say before I interject this that I like Oklahoma, and a great many of my people live there. I once worked there on a newspaper; but before there was an opening up of the oil and gas field in Oklahoma there was an oil and gas industry in my State, and you had to have experienced men there. These hardy men brought with them the pioneer spirit from West Virginia, and I know you have been glad to have them as residents and builders of your State.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes; many people came to our State from West Virginia, Georgia, and Tennessee. One neighbor said he had raised his last crop of rocks, and he wanted to come to a country where he could stand on both feet at the same time. [Laughter]

Mr. HOEPPEL. Many people went away from their own State to get away from the sheriff.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Have you raised great corn crops in Oklahoma?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes; Oklahoma stands twelfth in the production of corn when we do not have a drought.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is that corn manufactured into good moonshine? [Laughter.]

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes; in eastern Oklahoma they call it "mountain dew" and out West they call it "canyon rum."

Mr. NICHOLS. We raise about 4 gallons of corn to the acre.

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. May I say that my good friend, Mr. NICHOLS, represents southeast Oklahoma, the land of a thousand hills and thrills and stills?

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that the buffalo all came from Kansas?

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Yes, one time Joe Bailey said that he thanked God for Oklahoma for it separated Texas from Kansas. [Laughter.]

I appreciate the contribution the gentlemen have made from other States, and I am sure you took my answers in the friendly spirit in which they were intended.

Bob Taylor of Tennessee once said, "I do not like sectional hatred and animosity but I do not object to sectional pride and patriotism." "I do not object", said he, "if the easterner believes that the aurora borealis is only the glow in the sky from the factories and furnaces of the East. I do not object if the westerners believe, as they do, that the glow of the setting sun is but a reflection of the grain fields of the West. Then why should they object if I believe, as I do, that the great Milky Way is but a reflection in the sky of the rice and cotton fields of Dixie."

That is the way I feel, Mr. Chairman, as a representative of the forty-sixth star in the flag. Go out there soon and you will see oceans of wheat, wave following wave, as far as the eye can see, while ripening wheat heads billow and surge before the harvest breeze; there the tall corn shoots and tassels in the sun, and the cotton whitens beneath the stars. There you can see the farmer's big red barn and his modern home, his windmill and his silo; his spreading shade trees and his orchard fragrant with blossoms or laden with fruit, cherry-cheeked as are the sons and daughters of the last frontier, Oklahoma, the forty-sixth star in the flag. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, there being no further requests for time, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act approved June 25, 1934 (Public, No. 465, 73d Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to borrow for the District of Columbia from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, created by the National Industrial Recovery Act, and said Administration is authorized to lend to said Commissioners the sum of $10,750,000, or any part thereof, out of funds authorized by law for said Administration, for the acquisition, purchase, construction, establishment, and development of a tuberculosis hospital, a sewage-disposal plant, an extension of or addition to Gallinger Municipal Hospital, a jail or other enclosure for prisoners at Lorton, Va., and a building or buildings for the police court, the municipal court, the recorder of deeds, and the juvenile court, or any of them, said court buildings to be located on such portions or parts of Judiciary Square, or the area bounded by Fourth and Fifth Streets, D and G Streets NW., as shall be approved by said Commissioners and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, or any one or more of said projects as the said Commissioners may determine."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Works", insert "or such other agency."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mrs. NORTON: Page 2, line 16, after the word "determine", strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the words "and to advance to the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia, in compensation for clinical examination of tubercular children, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for alterations and enlargement of buildings, equipment, and accessories."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following: Provided, That whenever the District of Columbia is under obligation by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of said Public Act No. 284, Seventy-first Congress, reimbursement shall be not less than $300,000 in any one fiscal year.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOOM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 2035, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendations that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

APPEALS FROM PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3462) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913", and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from New Jersey that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913", be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking therefrom all of paragraph 52, and all of paragraph 64, after the first sentence thereof, and inserting in lieu of the matter stricken the following:

"That any public utility or any other person or corporation affected by any final order or decision of the Commission may, within 30 days after the publication thereof, file with the Commission an application in writing requesting a reconsideration of the matters involved, and stating the errors claimed as grounds for such reconsideration. The Commission, within 30 days after the filing of such application, shall either grant or deny it. If such application be granted, the Commission shall, either with or without hearing, rescind, modify, or affirm its order or decision. The filing of such an application shall act as a stay upon the execution of the order or decision of the Commission until the final action of the Commission upon the application: Provided, That upon consent of the utility such order or decision shall not be stayed but shall take immediate effect unless otherwise ordered by the Commission. No appeal shall lie from any order of the Commission unless an application for reconsideration shall have been first made and determined."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 7, after the period, insert "No public utility, or other person or corporation shall in any court urge or rely on any ground not so set forth in said application."

Page 2, line 11, after the period, insert "Failure by the Commission to act upon such application in such period shall be deemed a denial thereof."

Page 2, line 14, after the word "Commission", insert "after giving notice thereof to all interested parties."

Page 2, line 19, after the word "upon" where it occurs the second time, insert the word "written."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That said section 8 be, and the same hereby is, further amended by striking therefrom paragraphs 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69 and inserting in lieu of the matter stricken the following:

"PAR. 65. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any appeal from an order or decision of the Commission. Any public utility, or any other person or corporation affected by any final order or decision of the Commission, other than an order fixing or determining the value of the property of a public utility in a proceeding solely for that purpose, may, within 60 days after final action by the Commission upon the petition for reconsideration, file with the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a petition of appeal setting forth the reasons for such appeal and the relief sought; at the same time such appellant shall file with the Commission notice in writing of the appeal together with a copy of the petition. Within 20 days of the receipt of such notice of appeal the Commission shall file with the clerk of the said court the record, including a transcript of all proceedings had and testimony taken before the Commission, duly certified, upon which the said order or decision of the Commission was based, together with a statement of its findings of fact and conclusions upon the said record, and a copy of the application for reconsideration and the orders entered thereon. At the same time the Commission may, if it so desires, answer, demur or otherwise move or plead. Thereupon the appeal shall be at issue and ready for hearing. All such proceedings shall have precedence over any civil cause of a different nature pending in said court, and the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall always be deemed open for the hearing thereof. Any such appeal shall be heard upon the record before the Commission, and no new or additional evidence shall be received by the said court. The said court, or any justice or justices thereof, before whom any such appeal shall be heard, may require and direct the Commission to receive additional evidence upon any subject related to the issues on said appeal concerning which evidence was improperly excluded in the hearing before the Commission or upon which the record may contain no substantial evidence. Upon receipt of such requirement and direction the Commission shall receive such evidence and without unreasonable delay shall transmit to the said court the findings of fact made thereon by the Commission and the conclusions of the Commission upon the said facts.

"Upon the conclusion of its hearing of any such appeal the court shall either dismiss the said appeal and affirm the order or decision of the Commission or sustain the appeal and vacate the Commission's order or decision. In either event the court shall accompany its order by a statement of its reasons for its action, and in the case of the vacation of an order or decision of the Commission the statement shall relate the particulars in and the extent to which such order or decision was defective.

"Any party, including said Commission, may appeal from the order or decree of said court to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which shall thereupon have and take jurisdiction in every such appeal. Thereafter the Supreme Court of the United States may, upon a petition for certiorari granted in its discretion, review the said case.

"Said Commission shall not, nor shall any of its members, officers, agents, or employees, be taxed with any costs, nor shall they or any of them be required to give any supersedeas bond or security for costs or damages on any appeal whatsoever. Said Commission, or any of its members, officers, agents, or employees, shall not be liable to suit or action or for any judgment or decree for any damages, loss, or injury claimed by any public utility or person, nor required in any case to make any deposit for costs or pay for any service to the clerks of any court or to the marshal of the United States.

"PAR. 66. In the determination of any appeal from an order or decision of the Commission the review by the court shall be limited to questions of law, including constitutional questions; and the findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall appear that such findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious.

"PAR. 67. All orders and decisions of the Commission shall remain in full effect, except as provided in paragraph 64, unless and until they are superseded or rescinded by the Commission or are vacated by lawful order of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia: Provided, That if in any petition made to the said court appealing from an order or decision of the Commission it be alleged that substantial and irreparable property loss would be occasioned to the petitioner by the operation of the said order pending the determination of the said appeal, the court may set a time and place for hearing upon the said allegation after not less than 3 days' notice to the Commission (during which 3 days the execution of the order or decision shall be stayed), and the said court may then, upon a clear showing of the irreparable and substantial property loss as alleged, suspend the effective date of the said order. No such suspension shall be for a greater period than 60 days without further hearing by the court. In the event of the issuance of an order suspending the operation of any order of the Commission, the court may include therein such provision as it deems advisable for the preservation of records or accounts and the impounding or otherwise securing of moneys necessary to give effect to the order of the Commission in the event the said order is sustained.

PAR. 68. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, or any justice thereof before whom an appeal from an order of the Commission is pending, may certify to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia any questions or propositions of law concerning which instructions are desired for the proper disposition of the appeal; and thereupon the court of appeals may either give binding instructions on the questions and propositions certified or may require that the entire record in the cause be sent up for its consideration, and thereupon shall decide the whole matter in controversy in the same manner as if it had been brought there by writ of error or appeal.

"PAR. 69. That if, after appeal is filed, the Commission shall rescind the order or decision appealed from, the appeal shall be dismissed; if it shall alter, modify, or amend the same, such altered, modified, or amended order or decision shall take the place of the original order and the court shall proceed thereon as though the late order had been made by the Commission in the first instance.

"PAR. 69a. The method of review of the orders and decisions of the Commission provided by paragraphs 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, and 69 herein shall be exclusive."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 20, after the word "record", insert "including a transcript of all proceedings had and testimony taken before the Commission."

Page 4, line 2, strike out the word "thereon" and the period and insert "thereon: Provided, That the parties, with the consent and approval of the Commission, may stipulate in writing that only certain portions of the record be transcribed and transmitted."

Page 4, line 5, strike out "at the same time the Commission may, if it so desires, answer, demur, or otherwise move or plead", and insert "Within this period the Commission or any other interested party may answer, demur, or otherwise move or plead."

Page 6, line 13, after the word "are", insert "suspended."

Page 6, line 21, strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall."

Page 6, line 23, strike out "3 days" and insert "period."

Page 7, line 3, after the word "further", insert "order after notice or."

Page 7, line 23, after the figures "69", insert "That the Commission may at any time rescind, alter, modify, or amend its order."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word of the committee amendment. It seems to me this is a very worth-while bill, but in going over it I noticed in several instances there are provisions which seem to foreclose the right of appeal. I am just wondering whether the committee has taken into consideration the possibility, and perhaps probability, that if this law is enacted we may go along for a year or two seeking to enforce it and wind up by having the whole thing declared invalid. In that case we would be back where we are, with a couple of years' lost time. I am wondering if the committee would not agree to some slight amendments rather than to take that chance?

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER. I understood the gentleman to say that he understood the bill did not provide for the right of appeal.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is what the bill is intended to provide. The purpose of the bill is to provide a judicial or constitutional appeal. That is the essence of the bill—to provide for judicial review. According to the procedure under the law as at present, the courts in the District of Columbia act in the capacity of legislative bodies. When an appeal comes to the court it is not considered by the court as in a judicial review, but the court acts upon it in a legislative capacity. There is no real appeal or review in the procedure now in force under the statute.

The court can step in on the so-called "appeal" and act as the Commission could in the first instance. Now, we are trying to straighten this matter out and provide that the Commission shall act as the legislative or administrative body. The Commission receives the evidence and makes the findings of fact. Then those findings of fact are presented, if there is an appeal taken, to the court as an appellate body.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. But the bill provides there shall be no appeal on a question of fact, under paragraph 66, and the findings shall be conclusive unless it appears that they are arbitrary or capricious.

Mr. CARPENTER. May I say to the gentleman that this matter was gone over by the committee quite thoroughly. The heart of the bill is in the paragraph that was mentioned by the gentleman, namely, paragraph 66. That paragraph was taken out of the Radio Act almost verbatim, and simply adding the words "including constitutional questions." That act has been passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In addition to that, I cite the gentlemen to the procedure in California, Missouri, South Dakota, and Utah. They have exactly the same provisions.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Does the gentleman have any decisions where the right of appeal on the ground of the reasonableness of the order has been denied? That is what this bill provides.

Mr. CARPENTER. The matter of reasonableness was considered at some length by the committee. Such provision was opposed very strongly by those representing the District of Columbia, for the reason that if you add the word "reasonable" you might as well not pass the bill. You open up the whole field.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is on the question of appeal?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. That is what has been delaying matters so much. There are cases 10 or 12 years old just because of that.

Mr. CARPENTER. In the case of Interstate Commerce Commission v. Union Pacific Railroad Co. (222 U. S. 541)——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. In that case the Supreme Court said:

In determining these mixed questions of law and fact the Court confines itself to the ultimate question as to whether the Commission acted within its power. It will not consider the expediency or wisdom of the order, or whether on like testimony it would have made the same ruling. Its conclusion, of course, is subject to review, but when supported by evidence—

That is, when the findings are supported by evidence—

it is accepted as final; not that its decision, involving as it does so many and such vast public interests can be supported by a mere scintilla of proof, but the courts will not examine the facts further than to determine whether there was substantial evidence to sustain the order.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. May I interpose a question right there?

Mr. CARPENTER. Let me call attention to paragraph 66 of the bill:

In the determination of any appeal from an order or decision of the Commission the review by the Court shall be limited to questions of law, including constitutional questions; and the findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall appear that such findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious.

I believe that should answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is not the question I wanted to ask just at this time. In your committee have you not had considerable doubt in your own mind as to the constitutionality of this act as it is now drafted?

Mr. CARPENTER. Not as to any of these sections. There has been a question of constitutionality raised, I will say frankly to the gentleman, in regard to paragraph 69 (a), the exclusive provision of the bill, and that was the only section of the bill in which the committee had any serious doubt as to its constitutionality.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is somewhat along the same line. It is a question of whether or not, after enacting this legislation and proceeding for a year or two trying to regulate a utility, then having the whole proceeding upset by the unconstitutionality of the act. Do you not have great doubt about it?

Mr. CARPENTER. There is a saving clause in this bill. Section 4 on page 9:

If any provision of this act or the application to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. You have that, of course, in every case of legislation.

Mr. CARPENTER. So that I do not think the question of constitutionality amounts to anything one way or the other.

This body legislating for the District of Columbia as a State legislature can neither give the District of Columbia nor anyone residing here any constitutional right they do not already possess nor can it take away from them any constitutional right. Now, if section 69 (a) is unconstitutional it does not mean anything.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Why not? That is what I want to get at.

Mr. CARPENTER. We have practically the same proposition relating to the United States courts. We passed the Johnson Act at the last session of Congress which prevented the utilities from going into the United States Court in equity and attempting to enjoin any State commission. The Johnson Act, however, does not apply to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman is referring to the act passed last year?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes. I think this bill should be passed as it is. The Senate will take it up for consideration and give it further consideration. I believe we have a fair chance to pass this utility bill which the gentleman says he would like to see passed; and we should keep this provision in the bill at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Irrespective of whether it is constitutional or unconstitutional?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may have 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman thinks it better to pass the bill as it is irrespective of the question of constitutionality?

Mr. CARPENTER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The question I want to discuss with the gentleman is this: The gentleman says it does not make any difference whether the bill is constitutional or unconstitutional. If an appeal is taken from the decision of the board and the court refused to hear it and it is ruled by the Supreme Court that this particular section is unconstitutional then the whole proceeding goes out, does it not?

Mr. CARPENTER. No.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Why not?

Mr. CARPENTER. The bill can stand on its own feet.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The bill could not stand on its own feet if the Supreme Court decided that you could not take away the right of appeal.

Mr. CARPENTER. The only way I know in which that question could come up would be if a utility should appeal through the equity procedure to the courts by way of injection, for instance, trying to circumvent the provisions of this bill and the court should make a ruling based upon this bill if enacted into law they did not have any right to such relief. In such a case the constitutionality of the bill would come up for consideration.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. May I say to the gentleman that as a member of the Subcommittee on Utilities I had the same doubt he has as to the constitutionality of section 66 and section 69 (a), and still have some doubt; but Mr. Prettyman, the corporation counsel, advised us that in his opinion there was no doubt at all, that they made a very careful study of the bill. In view of that opinion we felt that we should proceed with the bill and report it out; that if there were any questions about it we should let the courts decide it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The gentleman also had in mind that the bill would come up for further study and consideration in the Senate, did he not?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. No; we did not have that in mind. We felt that the preponderance of the evidence was in favor of the constitutionality of the measure and that the bill was very desirable. Therefore we reported the bill favorably.

Mr. CARPENTER. The question of the constitutionality of the section the gentleman has in mind has been sustained. It was sustained in the case of the Radio Commission v. Nelson Bros. (289 U. S. 266). I will read the decision or insert it in the RECORD, if the gentleman desires:

That review (of orders of the Federal Radio Commission) is now expressly limited to "questions of law", and it is provided "that findings of fact by the Commission, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it shall clearly appear that the findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious."

That is at page 275. Then the Court goes on:

The limitation manifestly demands judicial, as distinguished from administrative, review. Questions of law form the appropriate subject of judicial determinations. Dealing with activities admittedly within its regulatory power, the Congress established the Commission as its instrumentality to provide continuous and expert supervision and to exercise the administrative judgment essential in applying legislative standards to a host of instances. These standards the Congress prescribed. The powers of the Commission were defined, and definition is limitation. Whether the Commission applies the legislative standards validly set up, or whether it acts within the authority conferred or goes beyond it, whether its proceedings satisfy the pertinent demands of due process, whether, in short, there is compliance with the legal requirements which fix the province of the Commission and govern its actions, are appropriate questions for judicial decision. These are questions of law upon which the Court is to pass. The provision that the Commission's findings of fact, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive unless it clearly appears that the findings are arbitrary or capricious, cannot be regarded as an attempt to vest in the Court an authority to revise the action of the Commission from an administrative standpoint and to make an administrative judgment. A finding without substantial evidence to support it—an arbitrary or capricious finding—does violence to the law. It is without the sanction of the authority conferred. And an inquiry into the facts before the Commission, in order to ascertain whether its findings are thus vitiated, belongs to the judicial province and does not trench upon, or involve the exercise of, administrative authority. Such an examination is not concerned with the weight of evidence or with the wisdom or expediency of the administrative action.

And then the Court proceeds to cite quite a number of cases. Then the Court says:

If the questions of law thus presented were brought before the court by suit to restrain the enforcement of an invalid administrative order, there could be no question as to the judicial character of the proceedings. But that character is not altered by the mere fact that remedy is afforded by appeal. The controlling question is whether the function to be exercised by the court is a judicial function, and, if so, it may be exercised on an authorized appeal from the decision of an administrative body (276, 277).

We are of the opinion that the Commission's findings of fact, which we summarized at the outset, support its decision, and an examination of the record leaves no room for doubt that these findings rest upon substantial evidence.

I call the gentleman's attention also to the Los Angeles case:

No basis is laid for relief under the general equity powers. The investigation was undertaken in aid of the legislative purpose of regulation. In conducting the investigations, and in making the report, the Commission performed a service specifically delegated and prescribed by Congress. Its conclusions, if erroneous in law, may be disregarded. But neither its utterances, nor its processes of reasoning, as distinguished from its acts, are a subject for injunction (314, 315, United States v. Los Angeles R. R., 273 U. S. 299).

The purposes of the proposed bill are twofold—first, to strengthen the arm of the Public Utilities Commission in dealing with public-utility matters, and second, to eliminate the excessive delay caused by the present system of retrying in the courts every appeal case. Under the provisions of the present law, when the Commission acts and there is an appeal, the review is a legislative or administrative review and as such the court sits in such cases in its legislative capacity rather than as a constitutional court. As such, new evidence can be introduced, new findings of fact and conclusions arrived at by the court, the same as can be made by the Commission in the first instance. This causes delay, extra expense, and confusion. In addition the Utilities can independently commence an injunction action. The bill proposed here provides for one review, a judicial review by the courts. All evidence must be introduced before the Commission and its findings of fact are conclusive if supported by substantial evidence, unless it shall appear that such findings of the Commission are arbitrary or capricious. It would be, I believe, proper and helpful to here refer to the report of the committee as to the purpose and content of the bill.

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

H. R. 3462 was transmitted to the committee with the endorsement of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as one of the principal matters of legislation which the officials of the District of Columbia deemed necessary of passage in the present session of Congress. Its principal purpose is to simplify the court review of actions of the Public Utilities Commission and to reduce the duration of litigation arising from such proceedings. The bill was referred to the Subcommittee on Public Utilities and adequate hearings were held thereon. At these hearings there was full participation by the general counsel of the Public Utilities Commission, numerous attorneys for the public utilities which would be affected, civic organizations, and bar associations. The bill was originally drafted, and its passage is strongly urged by the people's counsel of the District of Columbia. The corporation counsel, as general counsel of the Public Utilities Commission, presented the urgent request of that body for the improvement in the appeals law. Unqualified endorsements were presented on behalf of the Federation of Citizens' Associations and the District of Columbia Bar Association, as to both the practicability and constitutionality of the proposed measure.

Testimony and argument were presented and a number of briefs were filed by counsel for the various public utilities in opposition to the change in the method of appeal and to particular language in the bill. Although this bill had been under study for a number of years, certain minor technical defects were revealed by the hearings and amendments proposed by the general counsel and the people's counsel in correction thereof. These amendments have been approved by the committee, together with other minor amendments tending to clarify the statute. Throughout the hearings, the proposed legislation was subjected to word-by-word scrutiny, and extensive briefs thoroughly covered the field of legislative precedent and judicial decision as to the validity of the method of appeal proposed and the constitutionality of the language. The hearings on H. R. 3462 were printed as a House document.

CONTENTS OF THE BILL

Section 1 strikes out certain paragraphs of the act of March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stats. 974), relating to the form of appeal now in effect from orders of the Public Utilities Commission to the courts and substitutes a new section. It preserves a right of appeal to the courts from any final order or decision of the Commission and fixes the time limitations and the conditions upon which such appeal may be had. It provides for a petition for reconsideration so as to afford the Commission an opportunity to modify its order and advise it of the grounds of intended appeal. With the amendments proposed it will afford a certain and prompt recourse to the courts.

Section 2 strikes out paragraph 65 to paragraph 69, inclusive, of the present Public Utilities Act and provides definite time limitations and methods covering the form of application to the courts and provides for the transfer to the court of the complete record before the Public Utilities Commission. It grants precedence to such proceedings over other civil causes and assures prompt hearing. An essential feature is the elimination of the presentation of new evidence before the court. However, the court may direct the Commission to receive additional evidence in the event that pertinent matter was improperly excluded by the Commission or in the absence of substantial evidence upon any relevant point. Full jurisdiction is preserved in the court to either affirm or vacate the Commission's order, and the court is required by this section, as amended, to set forth in full its reasons for its action so that the litigants may adopt remedial measures. This section also provides for appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and for review in its discretion by the Supreme Court of the United States upon petition for certiorari. Additional language is carried, in the customary form, relieving the Commission and its staff of personal liability for costs and damages in such actions.

Section 2 of the bill provides a new paragraph 66 which gives the court the power to review the orders or decisions of the Commission on all matters of law, specifically on all constitutional questions. It provides that if the court, on examination of the testimony and full record taken before the Commission, finds that the specific findings of fact by the Commission are supported by substantial evidence the court shall deem such findings conclusively correct unless it shall determine that they are arbitrary or capricious. It was as to this language that the principal opposition of the utility companies arose. The testimony of all witnesses showed that under the present law without regard to the duration of the hearings before the Public Utilities Commission, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia had jurisdiction to hear unlimited new evidence. Furthermore, the court, at present, is a legislative court in which the judge may reach a separate and distinct decision as a substitute for the order of the Commission and is not limited to the determination of the validity or constitutionality of the Commission's order. Proponents of the measure contended vigorously that it was fully supported by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States and that it is identical to language in the Federal Communications Act which has been sustained by the Supreme Court. They deny any intention of impairing the constitutional rights of the utilities and insist that the proposed paragraph 66, as included in section 2 of H. R. 3462, in terms preserves the full judicial authority of the courts. Utilities contend that since paragraph 69a of the section 2 of the bill makes the review proposed therein exclusive, it deprives them of the right of a new trial in the general equity jurisdiction of the courts at which all facts and evidence could be considered de novo by the court. This, the public representatives contend, is not a constitutional right and would unwarrantedly extend the time of trial. The committee finds that the present procedure has, in the past, resulted in trials extending over a period of several years, and that the judicial review proposed in the bill is constitutionally adequate.

The remaining provisions of section 2 elaborate the method of review in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and provide for expedition of appeals to the United States Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia by the certification of definite questions propounded by the supreme court. They preserve also the right of the Commission to rescind or modify its order at any time and to permit the improved order to take the place of that changed so as to expedite review.

Section 3 of the bill is a restatement of existing law which has been sustained by the courts imposing expenses of investigations and other proceedings of the Public Utilities Commission and legislation arising therefrom upon the utilities.

Sections 4 and 5 are the customary provisions preserving the integrity of the act and denying its application to present pending litigation of a judicial nature.

The committee in reporting the bill is aware of the importance of the constitutional questions involved therein and has given serious and profound consideration to the arguments in opposition to its passage. It is, nevertheless, of the opinion that the bill, with the suggested amendments, should pass as the method of review proposed is unquestionably in the public interest, and while preserving adequate review of actions affecting the rights of utilities will tend toward their more efficient regulation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the said section 8 is hereby further amended by striking all of paragraphs 42 and 42a thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"PAR. 42. That the expenses of any investigation, valuation, revaluation, or proceeding of any nature by the Public Utilities Commission of or concerning any public utility operating in the District of Columbia, and all expenses of any litigation, including appeals, arising from any such investigation, valuation, revaluation, or proceeding, or from any order or action of the said Commission, shall be borne by the public utility investigated, valued, revalued, or otherwise affected as a special franchise tax in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, and such expenses with interest at 6 percent per annum may be charged to operating expenses and amortized over such period as the Public Utilities Commission shall deem proper and be allowed for in the rates to be charged by such utility. When any such investigation, valuation, revaluation, or other proceeding is begun the said Public Utilities Commission may call upon the utility in question for the deposit of such reasonable sum or sums as in the opinion of said Commission, it may deem necessary from time to time until the said proceeding is completed, the money so paid to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the appropriation account known as 'Miscellaneous trust fund deposit, District of Columbia' and to be disbursed in the manner provided for by law for other expenditures of the government of the District of Columbia, for such purposes as may be approved by the Public Utilities Commission. Any unexpended balance of such sum or sums so deposited shall be returned to the utility depositing the same: Provided, That the amount expended by the Commission in any valuation or rate case shall not exceed one-half of 1 percent of the existing valuation of the company investigated, and that the amount expended in all other investigations shall not exceed one-tenth of 1 percent of the existing valuation for any one company for any one year."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 8, line 23, after the figure "69", insert "That the Commission may at any time rescind, alter, modify, or amend its order."

Page 9, line 7, before the word "is", insert "or the litigation arising therefrom."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. If any provision of this act or the application to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 5. No proceeding or litigation, except a proceeding involving solely the valuation of the property of any public utility, pending in any court in the District of Columbia on the date of the approval of this act, shall be affected by any of the provisions hereof.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SMOOT SAND & GRAVEL CORPORATION

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2197) to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to grant permission to the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, the owner of squares 705, 707, and east of 708, and part of square 708, in the District of Columbia, its successors and assigns, to lay down, construct, maintain, and use pipe lines for the carriage of petroleum and petroleum products from any point or points within any such square or such part of square or such part of square, or to the pierhead line of the Q Street, R Street, Potomac Avenue, reservation 246 and reservation 247, to any point or points within any such square or such part of square, or to the pierhead line of the Anacostia River.

SEC. 2. All the construction and use provided for herein shall be under such regulations and rentals as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may make and establish in connection therewith, and all plans and specifications for such construction shall be subject to their approval. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have full authority to designate the location and to cause such repairs or relocation of said pipe lines as the public necessity may require, any such repairs or relocation to be at the expense of the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation, its successors, or assigns.

SEC. 3. No permission granted or enjoyed hereunder shall vest any right, title, or interest in or to the land within the streets or reservations referred to in section 1.

SEC. 4. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, as there seems to be no objection to this bill, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

E. F. DROOP & SONS CO.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 4708) for the relief of E. F. Droop & Sons Co., and ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill for the relief of E. F. Droop & Sons Co.

Be it enacted, etc., That the E. F. Droop & Sons Co., a corporation incorporated under the general laws of the District of Columbia April 27, 1904, shall continue as an existing corporation, and that the term of existence of said corporation shall be made perpetual upon complying with the requirements of section 2 of this act.

SEC. 2. That the said E. F. Droop & Sons Co. shall file with the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia a certificate similar to that required by subchapter 4 of chapter XVIII of the Code of the District of Columbia approved March 3, 1901, as amended, in respect to increase or diminution of capital stock, and pay to the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia the fee to which he would be entitled if such corporation were newly organized.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, as there has been no objection expressed to this bill, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AUTOMOBILE TAGS

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6192) to authorize the issue of certain automobile tags to certain employees of the House of Representatives, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in section 6 (c) of the District of Columbia Traffic Act is amended by inserting after the comma following the phrase "Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives" the following: "the Assistant Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives, the tally clerk of the House of Representatives, the Journal clerk of the House of Representatives."

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this is merely a courtesy that is extended for the purpose of helping the Parliamentarian and his assistants in getting work accomplished through the city. As there seems to be no objection to it, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, this concludes the business of the District of Columbia Committee for today.

FREDERICK N. ZIHLMAN

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I was shocked this morning to read of the death yesterday of former Congressman Frederick N. Zihlman, at Cumberland, Md., as were the other Members of this body who knew him. During the many years I have served in this House I have never met a more lovable character than Fred Zihlman. His outstanding thoughtfulness of others, his desire at all times to help the needy, and especially motherless and fatherless children, cannot more clearly be exemplified than to cite the fact that our former colleague was one of the small committee responsible for the creation of "Mooseheart"—a great home for the aged and orphaned children.

I was privileged to serve for several years as ranking member to Chairman Zihlman on the District of Columbia Committee, which close association brought about a warm and lasting friendship between us.

His work as Chairman of the District Committee was work of the first magnitude in behalf of the people of the Nation's Capital, and the beneficial results brought about by his untiring energy will long be remembered by them.

Fred Zihlman was an outstanding example of a self-made man and was a born leader. At the age of 11 he started out as an apprentice glass blower and at the age of 25 was elected president of the glass workers' union. His entry into politics came in 1909, when he was elected to the Maryland State Senate, and was elected Republican floor leader in that body in 1914. In 1916 he was elected to this body and served here until 1930, during which time he brought credit to himself and the Congress of the United States.

But though he be dead, the sunny influence which his presence lent will always be with those of us who knew him best, while the kindness of his generous heart and gallant nature can never be forgotten. Hundreds of loving friends who in the sunlight of his genial presence had learned to admire and love him, to love him for his manly characteristics, his nobleness of nature, his purity of heart, his deep affection, are overcome with that grief which silence, not language, can alone express.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, as Chaiman of the District of Columbia Committee, having served with the late Mr. Zihlman for a number of years, and recognizing all of the qualities so ably expressed by the gentleman who preceded me, may I add my tribute to the splendid work performed by Mr. Zihlman during all the time I was associated with him on the District Committee. Mr. Zihlman served faithfully on the District of Columbia Committee during 14 years, 6 of which he served as chairman. His service at all times was in the interest of labor. Through his untiring efforts, a teachers' retirement bill was successfully enacted, as well as a mothers' pension bill and many others too numerous to mention. Mr. Zihlman was among the kindliest men I have ever known; thoughtful and considerate of others always. Particularly was this true with regard to children, as was evidenced when he adopted a little child some years ago. May I not offer my sympathy—and it is a heartfelt sympathy—to his family in this great sorrow that is theirs.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I just want to add to what the gentlewoman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Michigan said my appreciation throughout my years of friendship for Fred Zihlman. His congressional district adjoins the congressional district I represent. I knew him personally, and I know the high esteem in which he was held by the people of that section of the country.

AUTHORIZING OFFICERS OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS TO ADMINISTER OATHS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 93) to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in places beyond the continental limits of the United States where the Navy or Marine Corps is serving, such officers of the Navy or Marine Corps as are authorized to administer oaths for the purposes of the administration of naval justice and for other purposes of naval administration shall have the general powers of a notary public or of a consul of the United States in the administration of oaths, the execution and acknowledgment of legal instruments, the attestation of documents, and the performance of all other notarial acts.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMEMORATIVE OR SPECIAL MEDALS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1208) authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That authority is hereby granted to personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps to wear in lieu of commemorative or special medals awarded to them a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award thereof under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING CERTAIN OFFICIALS OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENTS TO ADMINISTER OATHS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1210) authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chief clerks and inspectors attached to the office of inspectors of naval material, chief clerks attached to field services under the Naval Establishment and to navy yards, naval stations, and Marine Corps posts and stations, and such other clerks and employees attached to offices of inspectors of naval material, field services, naval stations, navy yards, and Marine Corps posts and stations, as may be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, are authorized to administer any oath required or authorized by any law of the United States, or regulation promulgated thereunder, relating to any claim against or application to the United States of officers and employees under the Naval Establishment; said persons so authorized to administer the aforesaid oaths are also authorized to administer oaths of office to officers and employees under the Naval Establishment, but no compensation or fee shall be demanded or accepted for administering any such oath or oaths.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE ACROSS ARCHERS CREEK IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4759) to amend section 1 of the act of February 14, 1927, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept, on behalf of the United States, title in fee simple to a certain strip of land and the construction of a bridge across Archers Creek in South Carolina."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not suppose I have any objection to this bill, I do not know whether it is quite the right thing to take this bill up at this time. There are no minority members of the committee here and I do not know anything about these bills.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman from New York that I have spoken to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], a minority member. All of these bills have been unanimously reported by the Naval Affairs Committee. If the gentleman does not care to have these uncontested bills considered at this time I will withdraw my request.

Mr. SNELL. I do not like the idea of putting them through when there is not a single minority member of the committee here and we did not have notice before.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

Mr. SNELL. I think that would be better.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, may I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] to the fact there is a Senate bill of identical character to the House bill here, and I trust the gentleman will permit the consideration of that Senate bill. These bills have been considered by the Naval Affairs Committee, and there is no objection by any member of that committee.

Mr. SNELL. I honestly think that is not quite the fair thing to do without any of the minority members of the committee being present. I think the gentleman should have notified us in advance, and then we would have had someone here during the consideration of the bill. It is taking a little advantage of us to call them up in this way.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I do not want to be put in the position of taking advantage of anyone, and I do not think the gentleman's statement is exactly correct, because I spoke to the gentleman about calling up these bills.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman told me he expected to call up some Senate bills. These are some bills that the gentleman did not say anything about.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the present consideration of House bills.

FANTASTIC NEW DEAL BORROWING AND EXPERIMENTS

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a speech to be delivered tonight by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I insert the following address of Hon. HAMILTON FISH, Jr., of New York, over the National Broadcasting Co. network, Monday evening, April 22, 1935:

The "new dealers", confused and confounded and drifting into state socialism and as far away from the principles of Thomas Jefferson as it is possible to get, are flying distress signals on the Ship of State and sending out SOS messages and pleas to cease opposition and uphold the new-deal measures.

My answer to that kind of unadulterated and brazen propaganda and effrontery to free Americans is that it is the duty of all those who are opposed to the unsound, unworkable, and socialistic new-deal measures to speak out in no uncertain terms before our American system is undermined by the termites of the new deal and brought crashing into ruins on our heads. As for me, I propose to use every opportunity to expose and ridicule the fantastic new-deal experiments and raise my voice against the continuous and destructive efforts of the "new dealers" to destroy our representative and constitutional Government and impose on the American people an autocratic, bureaucratic, socialistic, dictatorial form of government without their approval or consent.

The new-deal administration, pledged to reduce the running expenditures of the Government by 25 percent and to balance the Budget, has deliberately repudiated these promises, and has substituted in their place no economic or financial policy except to pile debt upon debt and borrow billions, more billions, and still more billions, without a thought of extinguishing the debt or of the inevitable day of reckoning.

The result has been to destroy business confidence, increase unemployment, impoverish the people, and retard or destroy recovery. The attitude of the "new dealers" is similar to the old French King who said, "I am the state; after me the deluge."

The fantastic increase in the national debt from twenty billions in 1933 to over thirty-five billions, and by the end of June this year to probably over forty billions, is worthy of the vivid imagination of Alice in Wonderland. In fact, it is beginning to become more and more apparent that the American public have been elected to the role of Alice in Wonderland, or, more properly speaking, Blunderland. The new-deal administration, in the guise of the Mad Hatter, invites everyone to help spend billions of the taxpayers' money as if money grew on magical trees or was as numerous as the sands of the sea.

A puzzled, somewhat skeptical, Alice asked the new-deal leadership some simple questions: "Where are all the new billions coming from and how are they to be paid back?" To which the startled Jabberwock replied: "That is not a fair question, but I'll tell you anyhow. The more billions we spend, the easier it is to balance the Budget." "I see", said Alice, "first, the 'new dealers' balance the Budget in their platform and campaign promises; next, by special message to Congress a year ago and now by the definite assurance of the President that the $4,880,000,000 work-relief bill will balance the Budget." "Yes", said the White Knight of Democracy and of Blunderland, James Aloysius Farley, above fear and above reproach, "I have been thinking of a plan to dye one's whiskers green and then to hide behind a fan so that they cannot be seen." "Oh", said the Cheshire Cat, "your plan to balance the Budget must be like me, a vanishing type. Sometimes you see the head, sometimes the tail, but never the whole body." "But", said the bewildered Alice, "I don't even see any head or tail to the financing of the 'new deal' measures and balancing the Budget. Is nothing based upon common sense, experience, sanctity of contract or pledges, and everything on expedients, experiments, and broken promises?" "Don't worry", said a cynical Father William, "the 'new dealers' have a magic formula to balance the Budget—inflation, chaos, bankruptcy, and repudiation."

The limited time does not permit me to further discuss financing the new-deal measures and balancing the Budget. Now, let us turn to some of the other experiments.

President Roosevelt, in his book, entitled "Government, Not Politics", published July 25, 1932, said: "The Chinaman would rather lose life than lose face." Dominated by the same spirit, the "new dealers" vainly endeavor to make unsound and unworkable plans work, merely to salvage their pride. It is more important to save the country than to save the face of the "new dealers."

The American people are sick of the depression, but whichever way they turn they find a lot of inefficient visionary and jabbering bureaucrats not only blocking the way to recovery, but threatening to take what little they have left. The American people are bewildered and mystified by the honeyed words and the sugar-coated fireside chats of the President about a more abundant life in the future under a policy of destruction of crops, birth control of pigs, and a rapidly growing mountain of debt. All that the American wage earner is asking for is the right to earn an honest living at the present time, and educate and support his family properly in accordance with American standards of living.

The very word "recovery" means trying to get back something that was lost. What has been lost under the guidance of the "brain trusters", most of whom are Socialists and never identified with the Democratic Party, but sound American principles of government based upon the wisdom and experience of the past? The truth is that the American system is being hitched up with an un-American system. President Roosevelt is trying to ride two horses going in opposite directions, and that is why we are not getting anywhere. Our economic, industrial, and political problems can only be solved upon sound American principles of government for the best interest of all our people, as they have in the past without recourse to socialism and communism of the left or fascism or Hitlerism of the right.

The Republican Party must stand squarely without fear or favor for the American system and appeal to the people regardless of former party affiliations to come over and help. This is the real issue. It is the greatest in our country's history, and cuts across party lines the way slavery did. The new-deal administration has not only repudiated every principle of Jeffersonian democracy, but of our American system and is rapidly drifting, or perhaps it is truer to say, rushing headlong, into state socialism which is a kind of American fascism.

Our American system, based upon private initiative and reasonable profit, spurred by competition, has given a far more abundant life than any other economic system in the world. Today we find the "new dealers" following after the false economic gods of socialism and those theories of government ownership and operation pursued in Soviet Russia with disastrous results to the people who are undernourished and starving. A very large part of the Democratic Party is not in favor of such radical experiments and is becoming more and more bewildered, disappointed, disgusted, and deceived.

I was a former follower of Theodore Roosevelt and stood with him in 1912 on a platform of social and industrial justice, and believe in those principles more today than ever before, but believe in putting them into effect under the Constitution of the United States, and not outside of, or around, or beyond the Constitution and our American system.

President Roosevelt and his administration was elected on a sound platform, promising a reduction of 25 percent of the running expenditures of the Government, sound money to be preserved at all hazards, a reduction in the number of commissions, to stop borrowing and deficits, and a balanced Budget. During the first 6 months the President gave an admirable administration and tried to live up to his promises and pledges. Confidence was restored and there was a partial recovery and several million American wage earners were put back to work.

Then something happened, revolutionary in nature; the President called in a lot of radical and Socialist professors and visionaries to experiment upon our people and our institutions, and, if permitted to continue, will bring down our American system in ruins upon the heads of all our people. These radicals, Socialists, and near Communists were not elected by the people to office to tear down our American institutions. The Socialists and Communists received only a million votes. If, however, our American system is not to be scrapped without ever being submitted to the Nation for a vote, it is clearly the duty of the Republican Party, as the party of opposition, to force the issue before the great power of the administration and its enormous and relentless publicity stifles and smothers the issue.

The question is not that of conservatism or liberalism, although I am a political liberal who believes in the rights and capacity of the people to rule themselves and with Lincoln that human rights are superior to property rights and that labor is prior to capital. The Republican Party must have definite, clear-cut policies and become a fighting, militant organization and purge itself of all who do not believe in our American system. There can be no compromise between the American system and the alien and socialistic policies of the "new dealers", who are changing our form of government without the consent of the people, and setting up a bureaucratic and autocratic form of government, foreign to all American principles and ideals and similar in nature to fascism, Hitlerism, or communism, and everything except Americanism.

The Republican Party must purge itself on one side of all who do not believe in our American system and, on the other, of special privilege and selfish interests, who seek to exploit it. We must get back to the early principles of our party. The sooner we get back to the principles advocated by Abraham Lincoln, of faith in the people, free institutions, and popular government, the sooner will the confidence of the people be restored in the Republican Party.

It is becoming more and more apparent that the Nation cannot long endure half for the American system and half for some imported foreign form of socialism, or "third economy", as described by Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, a former member of the League for Industrial Democracy and the People's Lobby, both of which are against the profit system and in favor of Government ownership.

Newspaper reports state that Professor Tugwell will be in charge of the disbursement of $900,000,000 of the funds carried in the work-relief bill, and may become the most important administrative officer in the relief program, with full control of rural rehabilitation, soil erosion, submarginal land activities, and perhaps the Mississippi Valley development. Such an appointment is a typical example and an unanswerable reason for the loss of confidence by American business men, small and large, in the new-deal policies. How can business men, investors, and employers of labor place any confidence in the "new dealers", who have opposed in the past and are still opposed in their hearts to our entire industrial system based on private initiative and profit?

Let the Republican Party face the issue squarely and uphold our American system and fearlessly announce that it can only be improved by sound American principles of government. If it has failed, then it should be scrapped for collectivism, regimentation, a crushing bureaucracy, Government ownership, and state socialism. The battle should be joined by the upholders of our American system and those opposed, whether for state socialism, communism, or fascism. The American system is based on three separate and independent branches of government under the Constitution, acting as checks and balances on each other in order to preserve the rights and liberties of the American people. Until the advent of the new-deal administration no American questioned our representative form of government and the capacity and intelligence of the people to govern themselves within the confines of the Constitution.

Two years of new-deal rule has seen a cowardly, supine, and partisan Congress surrender its legislative powers month by month, upon the arrogant demands of the Chief Executive, and set up an autocrat in the White House. At first these powers were delegated on a supposedly temporary basis in an economic emergency, but that is no longer the case. President Roosevelt apparently is obsessed with the idea that he is divinely sent to rule and insists on permanent autocratic powers, in defiance of our representative form of government and the Constitution. Not satisfied with driving a subservient Congress to turn over the power to determine the value of money and the making of tariff schedules, he has taken away from Congress the control of the purse strings, the main reason for its existence. The new work-relief bill, totaling almost $5,000,000,000, has left Congress with scarcely any more legislative powers than Ghandi has clothing. The President is now demanding control over both credit and currency through the new banking bill establishing virtually a central bank under the political control of the President through the Federal Reserve Board. By the end of the present session, Congress will be nothing more than a debating society like the Parliaments of Italy and Germany—nothing but a rubber stamp to affirm the edict of the President.

The rape of the legislative powers of Congress and the betrayal of representative and constitutional government is an issue that the Republican Party must meet without compromise. If we remain silent on this issue and drift into an autocratic socialistic dictatorship, then we cannot avoid a share of the blame for not taking up the challenge. If the American people want to change their form of government they have a right to do so, but a partisan, patronage-driven Congress has no right to change our form of government without the approval and consent of the people.

Up to the time of the new deal and its foreign imported ideals, the Government was, except in time of war, conceived to be the servant and not the master of the people. The American system has demonstrated throughout the years that it stood for the greatest good of the greatest number and for equal opportunities for all. Under it American labor has been the best paid, the best housed, the best fed, the best clothed, the most contented and the freest in the world. It has been upheld by every prominent Democrat, including Grover Cleveland, Woodrow Wilson, William Jennings Bryan, Alfred E. Smith, John W. Davis, Albert C. Ritchie, and Newton Baker. All of a sudden the "new dealers" tell us because we are in a depression that everything is wrong, rotten, and corrupt in our economic and political system, and all must be scrapped for a new form of government with a beneficient dictator in the White House.

Without attempting or desiring to formulate a Republican platform, I submit that any Republican program must not pussyfoot or compromise on the following fundamental issues:

First. Restoration of representative and constitutional government by restoring to Congress the powers surrendered to the executive branch of government and the reestablishment of a government of law.

Second. Restore business confidence and put American wage earners to work by withdrawing the Government as quickly as possible from control of business and from competition with industry, and from direct interference with business by Executive orders, and drastically modifying the N. R. A. A few fundamental codes are all that is necessary—one for natural resources, oil, coal, etc., one for fair competition strong enough to protect the small man in paying his employees according to American standards, one to do away with child labor, and another for a minimum wage scale and maximum hours of labor.

Third. Establish and maintain a stabilized currency on a sound basis.

Fourth. Repeal the A. A. A. and give the Secretary of Agriculture emergency power to fix national minimum prices for domestic consumption, which is the only way to regain the wheat and cotton markets of the world. Advocate an economy of abundance, not scarcity, and creation of true wealth, not its destruction. Protect all farm products from foreign competition by adequate duties or an embargo, if necessary. Establish an equilibrium between the products of the farms, mines, and factories. Assure the farmer the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. Establish a reserve supply of meat, grain, and other foodstuffs whenever surpluses arise, to provide 1 year's supply for the American people against drought, climate conditions, undernourishment, or famine, but not to be used except in war or other emergency.

Fifth. Abolish all processing taxes and taxes on production. Do away with tax-exempt securities. Put taxes where they can be seen and felt on income, inheritance, and sales. Practice national economy, balance the Budget, and fund the national debt for 50 years.

Sixth. Preserve the home market for American goods and retain the American wage scale and standards of living. Protect the American wage earner against competition from the cheap products of the low-paid labor in Japan and Europe.

Seventh. Abolish all Government publicity bureaus. They are nothing more than political propaganda machines, deceiving the people back home, creating a censorship of news, endangering free institutions, and have no place in our American system.

Eighth. Social and economic justice: Provide a reasonable and adequate old-age pension or retirement plan, without political advantage to any group or party. Develop under normal times an unemployment-insurance fund under State control. Improve the means of distribution and reduce the high cost of living on foodstuffs for American wage earners and consumers and enable the housewives to balance their family budgets.

Ninth. Provide for national defense, but not for aggression. Take the profit out of war and prohibit the loaning of money to foreign nations. Stay out of all foreign entanglements, leagues of nations, world courts, sanctions, or war commitments. Keep out of all foreign boundary disputes, ancient blood feuds, and intrigues. Cease passing moral judgments on foreign nations. Stop trying to police the world or to pick the chestnuts out of the fire for other nations, and, above all, mind our own business, as we have plenty of problems to attend to in our own country at the present time.

Tenth. Provide for the fullest freedom of speech, of the press, and over the radio for American citizens, except to the extent of urging the overthrow of our republican form of government by force and violence, which is guaranteed to each State by the Federal Constitution. Enact deportation laws against all aliens who seek to spread class hatred, promote strikes, riots, and industrial unrest, and to undermine and tear down our free institutions, and give their jobs to industrious and loyal American citizens now walking the streets and who have faith in our American system.

Eleventh. Reaffirm our faith in the early principles of the Republican Party, enunciated by Abraham Lincoln who repeatedly stated that he had obtained all his political principles from Thomas Jefferson. Build a bridge on the firm foundation of the rights and liberties of the people under the Constitution, so that all disgusted and deceived Jeffersonian Democrats can cross over to help elect a Republican President in 1936 in order to oust the "new dealers" who have all but destroyed Jeffersonian principles that have been the creed of the Democratic Party for over 135 years.

Twelfth. Set up a bookkeeping system in the Nation so that we shall always know the extent of our wealth and its distribution, and currently know our actual position in international finance and trade.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, that there is in the files of the Philadelphia, Pa., depot of the Quartermaster Department an accumulation of documents and papers which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CUTTING members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of Dougles Dunmare, of Parkdale, Ark., praying for the enactment of old-age pension legislation, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by Branch No. 278, Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund, of New Rochelle, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Salt Producers' Association at Chicago, Ill., and the executive board of the New York Clothing Manufacturers' Exchange, New York City, N. Y., favoring the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Central Civic Association, of Hollis, N. Y., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 6514) to amend section 1001 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932, relative to the postage rate on first-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Colonial Council, No. 25, of Woodmere; Garfield Council, No. 19, of Syracuse; and Salt City Council, No. 114, all of the Sons and Daughters of Liberty in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of House bill 5921, to strengthen the existing law pertaining to the deportation of aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Mill Rock Post, No. 716, of New York City, and Howard Lathrop Post, No. 2307, of Lynbrook, both of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, in the State of New York, favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2897) to make it a crime to advocate or promote the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Division No. 1, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Niagara Falls, N. Y., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the issuance of a special postage stamp commemorative of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Commodore John Barry, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Canastota (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of legislation providing for a 30-hour work week in industry, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Canastota (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LONERGAN presented the following resolution of the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolution concerning the textile industry

Whereas the cotton processing tax, proclaimed by the Secretary of Agriculture as of August 1, 1933, under authority of Public, No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, is unsound and oppressive and detrimental to labor and industry in the State of Connecticut; and

Whereas the geographical wage differential prescribed in code of fair competition for the cotton textile industry operates to the disadvantage of labor and industry in this State as compared with Southern States; and

Whereas the cotton industry of the United States is suffering seriously from foreign competition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the general assembly respectfully request the Congress of the United States, either by statutory amendment to the pertinent enabling acts or by appropriate direction to the executive branch, to terminate the application of the cotton processing tax and the North-South wage differential in the cotton textile industry; and be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be urged to pass an act which will restrict the importation into this country of any textile article from any country in a greater volume than the average annual volume of importation of that article from such country during the years 1930–34, inclusive; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state is directed to send a certified copy of this resolution to each Senator and Representative in Congress from Connecticut.

THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mr. KEYES presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Manchester, N. H., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution requesting national legislation to correct present destructive conditions affecting the textile industry of New England

Resolved by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Manchester, as follows:

Whereas the increased cost of manufactured products due to the cotton processing tax falls most heavily upon the laboring people, who can least afford to pay it, and the importation of Japanese textiles seriously affects the industry in which thousands of our residents are employed; and

Whereas the wage differential in favor of the southern textile mills is causing many of our northern textile mills to curtail production or liquidate, and even now has resulted in the demolition of several mills of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., throwing many out of employment: Be it

Resolved, That the Board of Mayor and Aldermen, in regular meeting, urges the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to adopt remedial measures to save the textile industry for Manchester and the State of New Hampshire; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the New Hampshire Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1861) to incorporate the National Association of State Libraries, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1626) for the refunding of certain countervailing customs duties collected upon logs imported from British Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MINTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1497) to authorize the appointment of First Lt. Claude W. Shelton, retired, to the grade of captain, retired, in the United States Army, reported it with an amendment and submited a report (No. 545) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5914) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in connection with the California-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Diego, Calif., in 1935 and 1936, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 546) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 2131) to provide for the establishment of the Big Bend National Park in the State of Texas, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 547) thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 22d instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) authorizing the appropriation of funds for the maintenance of public order and the protection of life and property during the convention of the Imperial Council of the Mystic Shrine in the District of Columbia, June 8, 1935, to June 17, 1935, both inclusive.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 2650) to establish a new judicial circuit of the United States, with a circuit court of appeals, hereafter to be called the "eleventh circuit"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON:

A bill (S. 2651) to grant to the State of California a retrocession of jurisdiction over certain rights-of-way granted to the State of California over certain roads about to be constructed in the Presidio of San Francisco Military Reservation and Fort Baker Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH:

A bill (S. 2652) to authorize the President to attach certain possessions of the United States to internal-revenue collection districts for the purpose of collecting processing taxes; to the Committe on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. BYRD:

A bill (S. 2653) for the relief of Samuel Irick; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 2654) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of George B. Marx, Inc. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 2655) to define the election procedure under the act of June 18, 1934, and for other purposes; and

(By request.) A bill (S. 2656) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant concessions on reservoir sites and other lands in connection with Indian irrigation projects and to lease the lands in such reserves for agricultural, grazing, or other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 104) to provide for the determination and payment of claims for damage sustained by the fluctuation of the water levels of the Lake of the Woods in certain cases, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 105) making an additional appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission; to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

H. R. 3462. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1913", and for other purposes;

H. R. 4708. An act for the relief of E. F. Droop & Sons Co.; and

H. R. 6192. An act to authorize the issue of certain automobile tags to certain employees of the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

CLAIM OF W. K. RICHARDSON

Mr. CAPPER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 119), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the case of W. K. Richardson against the United States, No. A-200, be, and hereby is, remanded to the United States Court of Claims, with complete authority, the Statute of Limitations or Rules of Procedure to the contrary notwithstanding, to hear and consider questions of law and fact complained of in the motion for a new trial, made January 28, 1931. Said hearing to be upon the report and finding of facts of the Commissioner and the testimony taken at the former trial of the case, with and under the stipulation that the amount for which suit was originally brought be reduced to 3 percent of the amount claimed in said suit. Such suit shall be advanced on the docket of the Court of Claims and promptly placed on the trial calendar. This reference is made under section 151 of the Judicial Code.

PRODUCTION COST OF CERTAIN CITRUS-FRUIT PEEL

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 120), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the cost of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles dutiable under paragraph 739 of said act:

Orange, grapefruit, lemon, and other fruit peel, candied, crystallized, glace, or otherwise prepared or preserved; citron or citron peel, candied, crystallized, glace, or otherwise prepared or preserved.

P. W. A. LOANS FOR MUNICIPAL CONSTRUCTION IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives relating to Senate bill 2035.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2035) to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were, on page 1, line 9, after "Works", to insert "or such other agency", and on page 2, line 15, after "determine", to insert "; and to advance to the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia in compensation for clinical examination of tubercular children the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for alterations and enlargement of building, equipment, and accessories."

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, ask for a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. KING, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE COLONY OF CONNECTICUT (S. DOC. 53)

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, in connection with the tercentenary celebration of the settlement of the State of Connecticut I ask unanimous consent to have printed, with an illustration, as a Senate document for use in schools some material of historic interest and importance. The material consists of a manuscript on the subject of the Colony of Connecticut, its beginning, growth, and characteristics up to the time of the observance of its tercentenary celebration in 1935.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

FREE SPEECH—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BORAH

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, on Saturday evening, April 20, the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] appeared before the American Society of Newspaper Editors and delivered a notable address, in which he said:

Mr. Chairman, the press in this country has been vigilant and persistent at all times in the protection of its freedom. No national emergency has been permitted to curtail in any respects its liberty. It has stood steadfastly for its own freedom, and, in so doing, it has made more secure the personal rights and privileges of the citizen. * * *

At no time in the history of free institutions has the obligation of the press to the citizen been more vital and more exacting than at the present time.

Mr. President, I ask that the address in its entirety be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FREE SPEECH

ADDRESS BY SENATOR WILLIAM E. BORAH BEFORE THE AMERICAN SOCIETY OF NEWSPAPER EDITORS, APRIL 20, 1935

Mr. Chairman, the press in this country has been vigilant and persistent at all times in the protection of its freedom. No national emergency has been permitted to curtail in any respect its liberty. It has stood steadfastly for its own freedom, and, in so doing, it has made more secure the personal rights and privileges of the citizen.

I could pass the evening with you reciting the story of how and at what cost the freedom of the press was established and against what sinister forces it has been maintained. It is in many respects the most interesting phase of the history of modern civilization. It is in a large part the story of personal liberty and free government. But it is my purpose to lead you into a wider field and invite your consideration to a theme more imminent. I want to speak tonight of the rights and privileges of the citizen—freedom of thought, freedom of belief, freedom of political opinions, freedom of faith—and the right of the citizen to give expression to his thoughts. At no time in the history of free institutions has the obligation of the press to the citizen been more vital and more exacting than at the present time. It has been said that you may chain down all other rights and leave the press free and it will in time unchain all the rest. That does not exaggerate your responsibility nor overstate your power. Arbitrary government and a free press cannot long exist under the same flag.

If I am not mistaken, you have resting upon you a duty calling for no less vigilance, no less courage, and no less ability than have so many times been displayed by great editors and great newspapers who in the past have won the eternal gratitude of a free people by their unselfish defense of human rights. We boast that this is an age of enlightenment. I shall not assume, of course, to challenge that fact. But I cannot refrain from remarking that in this age of enlightenment only a very small percentage of the people of the world enjoy the blessings of free speech and of a free press. It is equally true that in the world at large civil and religious liberty are everywhere under challenge.

Hidden away in one of the volumes of Tacitus, given little prominence, almost casual in presentation, are the lines now familiar to all: "So for the quieting of this rumor (that is, the setting fire to Rome), Nero judicially charged with the crime, and punished with most studied severities, that class, hated for their general wickedness, whom the vulgar called "Christians." The originator of that name was one Christ, who, in the reign of Tiberius, suffered death by the sentence of the procurator, Pontius Pilate. The baneful superstition, thereby repressed for the time, again broke out not only over Judea, the native soil of that mischief, but in the city also, where from every side all atrocious and abominable things collect and flourish." From Nero until now, from the reign of that despot until the days of his modern imitators, men have thus dealt with "baneful superstitions", repressed them for a time through force, employing the prison, the fagot, and the wheel, to see these so-called "baneful superstitions" break out again. During all these centuries there have been those who acted upon the vain and vicious theory that you can change beliefs by the employment of "most studied severities." It is no exaggeration to say that most of the misery of this world has been caused by men acting upon this theory.

One is sometimes made to feel that the most universal, the most tenacious, and certainly the most deadly passion which stirs the human heart is that of intolerance. It is peculiar to no race; it is the curse of all. It has bathed nations in blood; it has sent millions to the block, to exile, and to the dungeon, degraded humanity and profaned the name of religion. The war against intolerance is an eternal war.

Mr. Chairman, in periods of distress, when the Nation's spirit is troubled and confused, it may be expected that this trouble and confusion will find expression in many laws spread upon the statute books in an honest effort to solve pressing problems. We need not take too seriously many of these statutes. With better days and a clearer sky they will be repealed or lapse into that oblivion which often gently covers the record of well-intentioned error. But there are great principles, vital principles, an indispensable part of free government from which we should at no time and under no circumstances permit ourselves as a people to depart. Precedents established in contravention to these principles may at any time thereafter be invoked and used to the disadvantage or serious injury of the people. These principles relate to opinions and the right to express opinions; they relate to the utmost freedom of discussion so long as peaceably conducted. Here lies the fountain source from which all truth, all righteousness, all justice, and all freedom of the citizen flow. It should never suffer pollution from intolerance or arbitrary power. No emergency can justify or condone withholding from the citizen the full enjoyment of these principles. It is the highest and most sacred obligation of the press to see that the people suffer no abatement of their rights in this respect. Liberty of the press, unsupported by the liberty of the citizen, would seem impossible; but, if possible, it would constitute a cruel and cowardly betrayal of the people upon the part of the press, and the press would merit, and in due time would receive, the full penalty of retribution.

During recent months a deluge of bills have been introduced in the different State legislatures and some in Congress, all founded in the exploded theory apparently that you can control opinions and beliefs by law. Some of these measures are sound in principle and are justified in that they seek to punish acts, acts of violence or appeals to force. Others properly provide punishment for those who defy officers of the law or who seek to incite riots and disorder. But others enter the domain of opinions and beliefs, and would seek to restrain or control such opinions and beliefs by punitive measures. They constitute a dangerous experiment. They are at war with the first principles of democracy. They repudiate the very principles which brought this Republic into existence and which has maintained it. The test of truth in politics or religion is not a law or a jail; the test is whether through appeal to the minds and hearts of men and women you can get your views accepted by the public opinion of the world. In some of these measures loose and vague definitions joined to a discretionary power, supported by spies and provocators, give us a glimpse of a system foreign to every conception of American freedom. In spirit, if not in exact terms, the old alien and sedition laws, to which the mild spoken Madison referred as "a monster that must forever disgrace its parents", are revived and that first great national mistake in the matter of arbitrary legislation would again be reenacted. I doubt not with the same futile and humiliating result.

Morley, in his biography of Voltaire, recalls how Voltaire often became enraged by the repeated recurrence of horrors which he had supposed dead. It stirs one's wrath and challenges one's faith in human advancement to find men in responsible positions and writers of conceded standing bringing forward again the shameless betrayal of free speech found in the old alien and sedition laws, digging down in the debris of things which the enlightened judgment of a century has sealed with its disapproval and its scorn, and presenting them anew for our consideration and approval. It discloses how utterly sterile and reactionary are these professed defenders of American principles when they propose to satisfy the aspirations of the American people from the intellectual garbage cans of the last century. If these and similar laws were enacted, and should they be held valid, it would be impossible for men and women with the most patriotic motives to assail many social or political wrongs now made respectable by law or custom. It would only be one step further when no man could run for office except upon the platform or ticket of those already in power. It is one of the strange freaks of human nature and one of the tragedies of government that many men who, through the accidents of politics, secure office immediately become possessed with the idea that they are the sole custodians of American principles, the sole guardians of American institutions, and the exclusive possessors of American ideals. Hence, they immediately begin to enact laws upon the theory that the people generally are weak, susceptible, dangerous, prone to think for themselves, and sure if they do to think unwisely. The fact is that the real guardians of American democracy and American ideals are these same people whom the lawmakers seem constantly to distrust.

When we are engaged in the delicate and hazardous task of legislating in regard to the personal liberty of the citizen, it is a wise rule to resolve all doubts not only in favor of his rights but, furthermore, we can well accept as a guide in the task the fact that he will neither willingly surrender nor willfully abuse them. Whatever may be said in favor of men trained by experience and expert in knowledge in framing and administering the more involved matters of legislation and government, nevertheless, as to the great underlying principles upon which constitutional government rests, there is no safer, sounder judgment to be had than the judgment of the people after free and full discussion. If this were not true, our whole theory of government would be grounded in a delusive and fatal error.

When objections are made to these laws and proposed measures, we are heatedly informed that they are the means and methods by which we are to crush out communism, fascism, and nazi-ism, and all other isms which many sincerely, no doubt, believe now threaten our institutions. Then follows the devastating interrogatory which is supposed to annihilate the objections and the objector: Are you a Communist, are you a Fascist, are you loyal to the flag? For myself, I am not a Communist. I abhor its teachings and its practices alike. They would sink beneath the confused theories of a material existence family, religion, personal liberty, free speech, and a free press—a sodden existence, from which all spiritual life is excluded. I hate no less fascism, with its cold, brutal absorption of the average man and woman in the remorseless schemes and ambitions of a soulless state. But I reject, I utterly reject, I denounce, as subversive of everything which we Americans hold sacred, the theory that in fighting communism and fascism you must surrender Americanism. It is my contention that to oppose communism and fascism by surrendering the very things, as free speech, the right of assemblage, which distinguish Americanism from fascism and communism, is blundering leadership and unworthy of the support of true Americans. It is one thing, and a very laudable thing, to expose the fallacies and dangers of communism and fascism and bring these matters home to our own people, but it is another thing, and, in my opinion, an unnecessary thing, in doing so to undermine and perhaps ultimately sacrifice essential rights of our own people.

Is it proposed that we shall fight communism and fascism by adopting the methods of communism and fascism? A singular remedy indeed! Do not the advocates of these restrictive and repressive and un-American measures and methods overlook the fact that while they are spreading upon the statute book laws which purport to deal with a few Communists and a few Fascists they are at the same time chiseling away the rights and privileges of 130,000,000 loyal Americans? When you deny even for a time the right of assemblage, the right of full discussion, the right of debate, you have taken the first step which the Communists and the Fascists always take in their efforts to establish arbitrary power.

Neither the communist nor the fascist regime could exist for a fortnight in the atmosphere of intellectual freedom—give the people of those countries permission to assemble, to speak freely, and the reign of the Communists and the Fascists would speedily end. Yet people in this country are advocating measures which would fit into no other program in the world save the program of sheer arbitrary power.

I fully understand that both communism and fascism are at war with every teaching and tenet of this Republic. I perfectly understand there can be no compromise between communism or fascism and democracy. Both systems boast they are reared upon the ruins of democracy. But while there can be no compromise, neither can there be any imitation. One is quite as fatal as the other. Let communism or fascism accept the fundamental principles of democracy, such as free speech and the right of assemblage, and they will disappear. Let democracy accept the principles of communism and fascism, the denial of free speech and right to assemble, and it disappears. I freely admit also that democracy is under challenge. Indeed, all systems of government are under challenge at this time. But I dare to prophesy that when this war of systems and doctrines and schemes of government is over, that form of government which faithfully respects and preserves the rights and privileges of the citizen, that form of government which holds steadfastly to the tenets of civil and religious liberty, will in the end triumph over all others. The average man and woman in government have come to stay. They will have a voice and they will have a say. They may be beaten down by brute forces for a time, but only for a time.

Recurring again to the period of the sedition laws, from which precedents are now sought to be drawn, we find that the declared purpose in the beginning was to rid the country of radicals and radical schemes and prevent the overthrow of our young Republic. The people were aroused to believe that the doctrines of the French Revolution were seeking recognition upon the western continent and that certain great leaders were involved. But while this was the ostensible and probably the sincere purpose in the beginning, before the laws were repealed, men were sent to jail for urging in ordinary modern political parlance, the election to the presidency the author of religious liberty in Virginia, author of the Declaration of Independence, and the leading advocate of the Bill of Rights to the Constitution of the United States. Jefferson was denounced as a radical, a revolutionist, and preparing to change our whole system of government. Those who are advocating these oppressive measures may think they are simply dealing with Communists, but tomorrow under the same precedents men and women will be charged with sedition for proposing the correction of abuses which time has made both respectable and profitable. Intolerance, once it taints the blood of a body politic, like the "juice of the cursed hebenon coursing through the natural gates and allies of the body" soon "lazarlike" cover the whole body politic with "vile and loathsome crust."

This experience with alien and sedition laws was one of the instances in which it was claimed that they were suspending free speech just for a time, suspending free speech to save free speech, denying democracy in order to save democracy. Such were the arguments and such are the arguments we hear in these days. What miserable fallacies men have the presumption to advance as a justification for stealing away the rights and liberty of a people! What saved free speech in that instance? What saved democracy? It was the willingness of men to face prison rather than give up their rights. What saved free speech and democracy was the election of a man who tore the laws from the statute books, threw open the prison doors, and restored the right to full and free discussion among a free people.

We read in the news reports and in special articles from time to time that the people of this country are ready for fascism or that communism has saturated the whole national thought with its remedies. Immediately another bill is introduced somewhere to stop this disintegration by law and another bureau created to take over further management of the business of a supposedly decaying nation. In a notable speech a short time ago it was estimated there were 80,000,000 people in this country ready to accept theories and schemes wholly un-American in their import. I give it as my opinion that the figures were fully 80 times too large. I venture the further opinion that if some angel of the Lord, as was the ancient custom, should come to the United States bent upon retribution because over half of the people were ready to betray the freest of governments, that some patriarchal Abraham could easily stay divine wrath by convincing the messenger that out of 130,000,000 people not a million could be found disloyal to the Government of Washington and Lincoln.

We should not make the mistake of branding as Communists or Fascists the great number of people in this country who believe that changes are now due in our social, economic, and financial systems. These are the people whom I am particularly interested in protecting in the matter of free speech. These people are not asking or urging theories of government which would destroy home, family, personal liberty, and religious freedom. On the other hand, they are aroused to preserve the very things which such systems would take from them. They believe that these things can be preserved by just and wise application of perfectly sound American principles to present conditions.

While there are not 80,000,000 people dissatisfied with American ideals, there may be, and likely are, 80,000,000 people who believe that our economic and financial systems should be reexamined, not with a view of destroying American principles and American ideals but of preserving them; not with a view of adopting systems which have destroyed family, uprooted religion, and murdered liberty, but with a view of making these things eternally secure. That this fight for readjustment under American principles will be a fierce one we need not doubt. Whatever else we do, therefore, let's keep the forum open and untrammeled. We need not be disturbed that measures are proposed which to some seem unsound; we need not take to shelter when someone cries "Radical!" If the measures are unsound, debate will reveal this fact better than anything else that has yet been discovered in the affairs of government. But if these measures are sound and in the interest of humanity, we want them under whatever name they may come to us as a people. All theories, all principles, all schemes, should be tested in the open and under the fierce light of public debate.

Let the legislator keep his hands off the forum so long as its participants refrain from the use of force or appeals to force. "It is time enough", said Thomas Jefferson, "for the rightful purposes of civil government for its officers to interfere when principles break out into overt acts against peace and good order." The safety of our form of government, the safety of democracy, rest upon that orderly program which comes from the clash of conflicting opinions. Repression is not only the enemy of free government but it is the breeder of revolutions. It is the enemy of progress and human happiness. And, above all, it is neither a test of error nor of truth.

There is a growing belief, with constantly increasing facts to support it, that this depression is something more than an ordinary economic debacle superinduced in the first instance by war and mad speculation—that it is also a warning that a period of readjustment is at hand. To what extent and in what respect this readjustment is to take place no man or group of men are wise enough to know. That it will result in great changes can hardly be doubted. The world has learned many times at great cost of life not to despise the counsels nor to pass unheeded the demands of those who have known the pangs of hunger and the lashes of economic injustice. At any rate, let them be heard. And because they demand a hearing, do not proceed to brand them as Communists or Fascists, or disloyal. They should be heard without fear and without restraint. If this movement for readjustment is to proceed in an orderly, American way and is to be settled according to American standards, then it should—it must—proceed under the auspices and according to the rules of true American principles.

This is an old, very old, question. It has been discussed for 2,000 years and will continue to be discussed as long as men hate oppression and love liberty, as long as men claim the right to approach their God in their own way. But while it is an old question, it is a vital question. It seems to me of peculiar importance just now. The years since 1917 have been years of great trial and great sacrifice. To say nothing of the sacrifices of the war, men and women everywhere and in all walks of life have lost their fortunes. Age has been deprived of the savings of a lifetime. Youth has come upon the scene with no chance even to earn a livelihood, much less to realize their ambitions. They have been years of deep adversity. It is little wonder that there seems to be a break-down of faith in many of the things which we have heretofore greatly valued. But the great and vital things of life ought not to be sacrificed. To sacrifice such things does not help to end the depression, it does not speed recovery. To kill initiative, to undermine self-reliance, to discourage self-help, to destroy liberty, to lose confidence in the judgment and stability and patriotism of our own people, do not help recovery. They not only retard recovery, but they make it less valuable when it arrives. Whatever, therefore, we may do in this distressing situation, we can all afford to agree upon the preservation of the great vital things which distinguish American life. Humanity is, after all, a controlling factor in political economy; in fact, there is no sound political economy without the predominance of humanity. The things which nourish and cultivate and preserve the intellectual and spiritual forces of a people are the things which make for permanent recovery and for the advancement and stability of national power.

Tested by the principles upon which our Government and our civilization rest, communism, fascism, and nazi-ism are one and the same. There may be differences between these systems but between them and the principles of our Government they may be regarded as one. In the name of humanity they crucify humanity. In the name of the people, they rob the people of their liberty. In the name of progress, they resurrect and reemploy the reactionary and repressive measures of the dead centuries. But the distinguishing, crowning infamy in their brutal creeds common to all is their utter distrust and their remorseless oppression of the average man and woman. In the economy of these systems, those whom Lincoln was fond to call the common people, are the mudsills of the social structure. There is but one reason for existence, and that is, to breed and slave and fight and die for the corporate State. I have, therefore, only commendation for those who oppose and expose these ancient tyrannies parading in modern garb. Let the exposure be unceasing and ruthless. But with the American people we have only to expose them. We need not fear the judgment of the American people after the exposure has taken place. There is no man, or set of men, in public life more capable or more vigilant to reject these systems of government than the great body of the people. I am not in the least doubtful of the verdict.

Mr. Chairman, it is highly proper to place guards in the watchtower, it is always the part of wisdom to locate the enemy as he approaches the "walls of the city." But the great problem of representative government, as I see it, is not alone that of coping with those who openly advocate the destruction of representative government, but rather how to deal with the forces—economical and political—which grow restless and sometimes defiant under the restraint of law. It is not the things threatened by the open enemies of constitutional government but the things done by the friends, or supposed friends, of constitutional government which are the more difficult to counteract and control. The tendency at home and among ourselves, the trend in public affairs—marked and unmistakable for more than a quarter of a century—presents the most difficult and the most dangerous problem. The Communist on the street corner brawling his wares to passersby may secure some scattering support, but is not to be compared as a problem in government to the impatient lawmakers, or administrators, who feel justified in disregarding constitutional principles in the interest of efficiency and, of course, always in the name of the people.

The Constitution is the rule which the people themselves have established as a guide for their agents in the discharge of their trusteeship. There is ample power within its provisions to enable the servants of the people to meet all emergencies in war or in peace. Within its terms may be found full authority to resist communism, or fascism, or to deal with all emergencies without in any respect disregarding its limitations and without surrendering the liberty or forfeiting the rights of the citizen. This trend away from constitutional methods can never be arrested in any other way than by aroused and well-sustained public opinion. In other words, it is distinctly the peoples' fight. There is little to be expected from political parties. They are prone to subordinate everything to party success or to party expediency. The history of the two leading political parties during the last 30 years gives little evidence of any serious differences as to the most pronounced tendencies in matters of government.

I do not regard this as the time or occasion to go into detail. But to indicate what I have in mind, I give a single illustration. The practice which has grown up of authorizing departments to make rules and regulations, the violation of which constitutes a crime, is one of the most objectionable practices with which the citizen has to contend. This practice has been denounced by both parties when out of power and adopted and extended by both parties when in power. There is scarcely any scheme imaginable more calculated to instill fear and confusion in the mind of the ordinary person and to finally undermine all freedom of action than to subject him to countless rules and regulations by numberless departments, or bureaus, the violation of which burdens his property or restrains him of his liberty. It is a species of tyranny that is foreign to every concept of constitutional government.

There are other illustrations ready at hand, but I refer to only one to indicate what seems to me the real problem with which modern government has to deal, and that is, how to protect the citizen against the encroachment upon his rights and liberty by his own government, how to save him from the repressive schemes born of the egotism of public office.

No political party for a moment would take the responsibility of proposing a constitutional amendment which would authorize the doing of these things. No political party would consider for a moment submitting to the people themselves the question of the right to exercise this power. It is this slow chiseling away of the rights and privileges of the citizen which presents the real problem in constitutional government. There are two powerful agencies which may always be used to counteract this trend, this tendency—they are a free press and a free speech, open, untrammeled debate. So long as these rights remain unimpaired, there is always hope that wrongs may be righted. So long as the press is free and courageous, so long as the people are alert and free to speak, these tendencies are not likely to pass beyond the point where remedies are available.

I am not to be understood as contending that the Constitution of the United States is a sacred document—never to be amended, never to undergo modification or change. It has been amended and doubtless will be amended again and again in the course of time. No human document can be wholly exempt from change, superinduced through time and the forces of progress. But with whom rests the right to amend? That is the supreme question. With the people, and the people alone. That right, that power, is sacred, if anything in government can be so termed. Upon that right depends the whole question of a people's government and the preservation of personal liberty. Upon that right rests the whole vast structure of a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." This exclusive right to amend is as sacred as human liberty itself. It is this right which distinguishes our Constitution from all constitutions or forms of government which preceded it and which made possible the first and only real republic that has ever existed upon this earth. When the people consent to, or connive at, changes in the Constitution by any other agency than the people themselves, they consent to, and connive at, their own overthrow. When they allow their agents, Congress or the Executive, or the courts, to enjoy this power, through usurpation or strained and unnatural practices or construction, they make their agents their masters.

In saying this, I do not withhold in any degree my assent in full to the declaration of Thomas Jefferson that this Constitution is for the living and not the dead. I agree also with the language of its greatest expounder that the Constitution was intended to endure for ages to come and consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. It is a living instrument. It is to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To that all must agree. But the power to do these things, to adapt it to the demands of progress, rests with those whose charter it is—the collective judgment and discretion of the people. Whatever unbeaten paths we, as a people, may choose to enter, the people should hold fast to that proposition. That keeps the Government the people's government.

The people have the right to establish any form of government they desire. They may so amend the Constitution as to wipe out State lines, give the department the power to make laws; they may establish a socialist state—the wisdom of such a course is another question. But if the essential provisions and characteristics of our Government as we have known and enjoyed them are to be changed, or destroyed, the work should be done in the open, deliberately, and avowedly, with the people of the United States standing by.

Mr. Chairman, it is a mistake at any time, it is a fearful mistake at a time when the cooperation of the whole Nation is essential in the rebuilding of our economic structure, to proceed upon the theory that the American people, or any considerable number of the American people, are infected, or susceptible of infection, with those strange isms which now torment so large a portion of the human family. To proceed upon any such theory is to greatly hinder progress in this stupendous task before us. When the story is finally written from 1914 to 1935, and on until these days of difficulty and danger are over, when the final verdict is rendered, it will be said that the outstanding feature of the period through which we are passing was the patience and patriotism of the people of this country. Drafted to fight in a foreign war, exploited by profiteers while they fought, the victims of promoters in a saturnalia of speculation, impoverished by an economic cataclysm for which whoever else was responsible the people were not, driven almost to madness by floods and drought and dust storms, and who has heard coming from these devoted men and women the voice of sedition, of disloyalty to the Government? What is the test of devotion to country if this is not? Who could have the hardihood in the face of this story to propose that one jot or tittle be subtracted from their rights, from those rights, privileges, and guaranties which are the birthright of American citizens? Measures to that end are simply crude libels upon the manhood and womanhood of the land.

We have heard enough about the American people being ready for communism or fascism. They are ready for Americanism, for that social and economic justice which is an inseparable part of Americanism. This job which fate and circumstances have cut out for the American people and for our Government calls for a united nation, and that means loyalty of the Government to the people just as much as it means loyalty of the people to the Government.

THE NATIONAL LABOR-RELATIONS BILL—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WAGNER

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, last Sunday evening, April 21, 1935, the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] made over the radio a characteristic address, rich with feeling and strong with conviction, on the national labor-relations bill. On that subject the Senator from New York, the author of the bill, is an acknowledged expert. All Members of the Senate will undoubtedly wish to read his brief discussion, and I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The depression fell with equal fury upon industry and labor. It robbed the business man of the hard-won earnings of a lifetime and it deprived the worker of the sacred right to earn his daily bread. This universal calamity impressed upon most thinking people the truth that employer and employee in the United States have mutual interests in the present and mutual aspirations for the future. Thus the program of leadership inaugurated 2 years ago was based upon the ideal of teamwork between an awakened industry and an enheartened labor.

This program saw from its beginning that disorganization had provided the nourishment for hard times. We realized that business had plunged into a wilderness of difficulties because of a blind and unchecked form of individualism, with each enterprise working at cross purposes, and with many of them cutting prices, slashing wages, and indulging in other unfair methods of competition. We realized also that employees, without any unifying influences to direct their efforts, were demoralizing standards by assenting to sweatshop conditions, thus knocking the props of purchasing power from beneath the structure of business. We came to the sound conclusion that everyone would profit by subordinating narrow and selfishly conceived interests to a Nation-wide plan for general revival. Cooperation was thus made the keynote of the recovery drive.

Insofar as business was concerned, the new strategy consisted largely in removing some of the outworn restrictions of the anti-trust laws. Employers have been allowed to cooperate among themselves to stabilize business operations by exchanging information and prohibiting unfair competitive methods. None can deny the benefits that have flowed as a result of these changes. Mounting profits and a more hopeful outlook are the major characteristics of the past 2 years generally and of the past 6 months in particular. Business has commenced to thrive under the new deal.

The second part of our program took note of the need for a broader and more sympathetic understanding between employers and employees, for if employers did not cooperate with their workers, as well as among themselves, they would be rewarded with strife rather than with peace and they would not receive the willing support and confidence upon which smooth industrial operations depend. In addition, the exile of labor from the councils of business would perpetuate the lag of wages behind profits, and in the end would drag the whole economic system back into the mire.

Now, it was perfectly obvious to every observer of modern large-scale enterprise that it would be impossible for employees individually to deal directly with their employers. One cannot imagine an isolated worker cooperating with the United States Steel Corporation. Nor can one imagine a single huge employer cooperating separately with each of 10,000 to 50,000 workers. Cooperation depends upon the free and untrammeled right of workers to organize for that purpose.

Thus the American battle for industrial liberty has been waged upon the issue whether workers shall be free to associate together if that is their desire. The first great victory was won when, after 7 years of frustration, Congress passed the Norris-LaGuardia Act. This act denied the help of the Federal courts for the enforcement of the "yellow dog" contract, that instrument of bondage which required as a condition of employment that a man promise not to affiliate with others of his kind.

But the elation of the friends of freedom was short-lived. Devious devices were used to defeat the objectives of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Even without the "yellow dog" contract the unfair employer could discharge and discriminate against workers if they violated any dictate of his will. As a remedy the famous section 7 (a) was passed, forbidding any interference with the right of workers to organize for purposes of mutual advancement. No one who believes that the "yellow dog" contract is wrong could logically oppose section 7 (a).

The virtual collapse of section 7 (a) is a matter of common knowledge. The cause for this has been that a relatively small number of unfair employers have discriminated against and discharged employees who exercised their fundamental rights; have set up a masquerade type of union which is really the creature of the employer rather than the representative of the employee, and have taken advantage of the lack of adequate enforcement power behind section 7 (a) to defy the Government with brazen impudence.

The immediate result of shutting out employees from full participation in the recovery program has been to deny them their full share of the fruits of recovery. While profits have risen with gratifying regularity, reemployment has slowed down to a snail's pace, and we are still confronted by the horrible spectacle of eight to ten million people who search earnestly and hopelessly for some form of work. While minimum wage rates have been raised under the codes, a substantial part of this gain has been charged to wage earners in the upper brackets and to the vast consuming public in the form of inordinately high prices. If these conditions persist, it is only a question of time until the burden will be borne by business itself. The upswing of business cannot be maintained indefinitely unless there is a tremendous reduction in unemployment, a sustained rise in purchasing power, and a removal of the present industrial discontent based so largely upon a denial of legal as well as ethical rights.

It is to these ends that my national labor-relations bill is directed. From the date of its introduction this bill has been misconstrued and misrepresented by the opponents, both secret and avowed, of the principle of freedom for the man who works. The malicious falsehood has been widely circulated that the measure was designed to force men into unions, although the text provides in simple English prose that workers shall be absolutely free to belong or to refrain from belonging to any organization. Practically everyone has heard the charge that the bill imposes a closed shop and a union monopoly upon the whole United States, when in fact it does absolutely nothing to change in any State the existing law in regard to the closed shop. Millions of printed pamphlets, emanating from a few sources of prejudice or reaction, contain the concoction that the bill enlists the Government in favor of some particular kind of union. In truth the bill permits any worker not only to stay out of all unions if he so desires, but also to select any kind of organization that he prefers, either national or local, either craft or industrial, either federated or confined to the limits of one company. It does not subject him, however, to the menace of a pretended union that is dominated and bought by the employer. It makes the worker a free man. To cap the climax of deliberate misstatements, it has been asserted that my bill invests the National Labor Relations Board with arbitrary and dictatorial powers greater than those possessed by any court in the land. But when the hearings were held this month I publicly challenged everyone who made this criticism to show one substantial respect in which the bill went beyond the powers conferred upon similar administrative agencies, such as the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and a multitude of others. In no instance was my challenge answered, because there was no answer.

When rescued from the smoke of false issues that have been raised around it, the provisions and purposes of my bill are extremely clear and simple. It incorporates the principles of section 7 (a). It illegalizes the dummy union which is dominated by the employer. It provides for secret elections, supervised and conducted by the Government, where employees may choose representatives for collective bargaining under the American principle of majority rule. At the same time, even after the majority has acted in accord with democratic procedure, the right of minorities or individuals to confer and discuss grievances with their employer is preserved. Finally, the bill creates a permanent board of three members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The power of this board to issue orders is strictly limited to the preservation of the industrial freedom guaranteed specifically by the bill. Moreover, every single order is reviewable in full by the Federal courts.

The passage of the national labor-relations bill will help every industry that wants peace and harmony. It will help every industry that believes that contented and decently treated workers are the richest materials any country can possess. It will help every industry that prefers a steady flow of temperate prosperity, rather than the hectic flush of fictitious prosperity followed by the deep gloom of returning depressions.

And in helping industry let us not forget that we shall help the worker also. Forty thousand American workers have borne the depression with heroic patience and fortitude. Those who did not actually lose their jobs were tormented, nevertheless, by the constant fear of insecurity and by the added burden of helpless relatives and friends. Even those at work have seen their children denied the elementary needs of food, clothing, and schooling. They have gone through the valley of despair for the future of their families. In trials of peace as in trials of war, the American workers have never broken faith with this country or its Government. They have been the backbone and the strength of the Nation. The time has come when our Government must recognize the deep extent of their devotion. We must not now repudiate the pledge that has been given them of emancipation from economic slavery and of an opportunity to walk the streets free men in fact as well as in name.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the other day in discussing this bill I referred to experiments along similar lines made by the Government of Australia and the State of California. I have not read my remarks, but, as I remember, I did not undertake to cite those instances as showing the success of the plan; in fact, I did not know whether or not the experiments had been successful, my only purpose being to show that experimentation along this line was not entirely new. I have a letter this morning written by Mr. N. Reesor, of Silver Spring, Md., in which he says:

> It is quite evident that you have been misinformed concerning this plan and its results. It was a complete failure and was abandoned by direction of the legislature some years ago. This is well known in California, and is conclusively shown by the official reports of administrative officers, by court decisions and by legislative records.

He says further:

> I think you will find upon investigation also that the Australia plan was far from successful.

He sends me a copy of the legislative report, which I have not had time to read.

I only mention this, Mr. President, because I do not want to be placed in the attitude of trying to deceive any Member of the Senate as to his vote. I do not believe, however, these criticisms made by Mr. Ressor afford a sufficient reason why we should defeat the pending legislation, even if those experiments were not successful. When I think of the condition in connection with agriculture, namely, that farm tenancy has been increasing in the United States at an alarming rate during the last 50 years, I feel as though we ought to do something about it.

The bill, if enacted into law, will, of course, be an experiment, as I said the other day. It will fail completely if its administration shall be faulty or corrupt or wrong. It will be, in my judgment, a very great success and will mark a milestone in our history if its administration shall be honest and fair and efficient.

I merely mentioned the other day the experiment in Australia, but the information in regard to it, which I think would be very reliable, could be given by Dr. Mead, head of the Bureau of Reclamation, from whom I gathered my information quite a number of years ago. I have not since talked with Dr. Mead about it. He was in charge, as I remember, of that experiment in Australia, and he thought, as expressed in the conversation I had with him at that time, it had been a very great success. It only demonstrates what Mr. Reesor said in the letter, it seems to me, that care must be taken in the administration of the law. I assume that care will be taken and that it will be honestly administered. If it shall be, I shall expect to see a very great improvement in farming conditions. It seems to me anything that will result in the number of tenants being decreased and the number of home owners being increased must result in a very great improvement to our country and to our civilization.

I have read these extracts from Mr. Reesor's letter in order that no Senator may have any doubt in regard to what I was attempting to do. His criticisms are very constructive, and, although I do not know him, I desire to thank him for the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I understand I have 30 minutes on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Only 15 minutes. Since 3 o'clock yesterday, the time for debate on the bill has been limited to 15 minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I read in a newspaper yesterday the report of a speech by Mr. Secretary Ickes, in which he used these words:

> The spring of 1933 was like the sinking of a great liner in a hurricane. A nervy skipper in a rescue cutter stood by. There was no partisanship then; no criticism of him for the cold and the wet and the danger.
> Everybody took that skipper's orders because no one else knew what to do or dared to take the responsibility for doing it.
> Not a single rugged individualist even peeped about letting nature take its course, or about the survival of the fittest.
> They grabbed at the lifeline extended to them without asking where they were being taken, and that line held in the hour of need.
> But now, temporarily safe in a calmer sea, they are quarreling over what port it shall be.

I am quarreling over what port it shall be. When we shall have concluded our duties here and our struggle with the depression, it is the deepest hope of my heart that this shall still be a representative free republic, a union of autonomous States, and not a Federal socialism. I have taken oath to see to it that that shall ever be our port.

Mr. President, with all conservatism and carefulness of statement, I think we have reached the point in the stage of our legislation here where we must determine whether the National Government shall proceed in a course which may hopelessly involve us in a character of Federal socialism or whether we shall, notwithstanding the exigencies of the severe situation which abides with us, pursue a course which will bring us through at last not only with recovery but also with a republic, not only with the restoration of a reasonable prosperity but also with the preservation of the character of the autonomous States which constitute the American Union.

I had this morning in the Finance Committee, as other members of the committee had, a message from the Secretary of the Treasury, delivered in person. I am going to read a few words from that message.

Moreover—

He said—> the credit of the United States Government depends very largely, in my opinion, upon scrupulous adherence to the President's program. I don't think we can continue to enjoy the present favorable rates and favorable market for the sale of Government securities——

Mr. BANKHEAD. To what bill was he referring?

Mr. BAILEY. The Bankhead bill; it is not in the President's program. His language referred to all money bills not in the President's program.

> I don't think we can continue to enjoy the present favorable rates and favorable market for the sale of Government securities if new expenditures are incurred which go far beyond the limits of those which have already been outlined. A material decline in the market price of Government securities, which would be very likely to result from large expenditures outside the Budget, would work a grave injustice upon all purchases of Government securities and would tend to slow up the whole recovery program.

There is a message from the financial head of the Government. While he was before us I inquired of him whether the pending legislation had been submitted to him. He stated that he knew nothing about it, that he had not seen it, and had never passed upon it. I asked him if he would like to pass upon it. He said that would be for the will of the Congress.

Let us see what is now our situation with respect to the national debt. Senators will find in the New York Times of this morning on the editorial page a statement that the present national debt, in terms of bonds and notes outstanding, is $28,043,000,000. In addition to that we have provided recently for $4,880,000,000. In addition to that we have pending the soldiers' adjusted-compensation legislation, the bill having passed the House and being not unlikely to pass here, which will call for at least $2,000,000,000 more. We have before us the Bankhead bill, which calls for $1,000,000,000 in contingent liabilities. The total is $35,800,000,000 of debts either already incurred or about to be incurred.

In addition to that we have back of the situation in unexpended appropriations heretofore authorized, according to the statement of the President, $1,500,000,000. The total indebtedness on direct liability of the Government as it stands, with this bill in view and the other bills which I have mentioned, will aggregate $37,380,000,000, taking no note of $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 of contingent liabilities.

Mr. President, there is the situation. I do not think any Senator here will disagree with me that these are the terms of one of the gravest situations imaginable. During the Hoover administration and the Roosevelt administration we have increased or are about to increase our national debt from a low of $16,000,000,000 to a high of $38,000,000,000. There is an increase of $22,000,000,000 added to the obligations of the American Government and the American people in the space of 5 years; and still we go on; and still it is proposed to pile Pelion upon Ossa in the way of bond issues. I do not think there is a Senator here but believes that when the present session of Congress shall adjourn the actual and the contingent liabilities of the Republic, of which we are the servants and the responsible guardians, will be very close to the figure of $40,000,000,000.

This morning the Secretary of the Treasury warns us not to increase that debt.

If this proposed legislation shall be passed, we shall have opened the last door. One billion dollars for the tenant farmers of America means ultimately not less than $6,000,000,000 for them. Any Senator can make the computation for himself. There are 3,000,000 tenant farmers. Two millions of them, say, will want to buy farms with Government money, and the statement is made that the cost will be $3,000 each. Three thousand dollars each for 2,000,000 people is $6,000,000,000; and we cannot deny them. This is a government—I hope it is—of equal rights to all and special privileges to none; and if we take one man out of tenancy, buy him 40 acres of land and a mule, in the old language of reconstruction days, give him a $3,000 house and a farm, as one Senator, I shall not be able to look in the face any other man who has not had that benefit and refuse him the same right and the same privilege. If I am correct about that, we shall move out from that class into another class, and on and on until every man in America who is in need of a house and a home, a farm and a mule, or who is renting a property and wishes to become hopefully a landowner, can make the same demand in the same terms, and with the same justice, and with the same irresistible force, that we respond and do for him what we have done for his fellow citizens.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to yield, but I have only 15 minutes. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. In estimating the public debt, and considering the appropriations for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Public Works Administration, has the Senator considered that those appropriations have been used with which to make loans?

Mr. BAILEY. I mentioned the fact that there were some contingent liabilities, and I will agree about that. There are some recoverable assets. I do not know how much they will be; but I will assume that there are about $4,000,000,000, perhaps, of recoverable assets. We may deduct that amount and still we shall have $36,000,000,000 of national debt. I am perfectly willing to make that allowance.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that we already have authorizations of $500,000,000 for precisely the purpose contemplated by the pending bill. Why should we increase that amount by a billion dollars? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has just said that this sort of thing has been a failure in other countries, and he has also said that this sort of thing is necessarily an experiment. Why not confine ourselves to the $500,000,000 already appropriated, create in this bill the mechanics for the execution of the plans under the $500,000,000 appropriation already available, carry out that experiment, and see it through? If it shall succeed, if this scheme of things shall turn out to be satisfactory, then in the light of the financial situation we can make our final decision whether the Federal Government is going to take the place of the landowners and the landlords in the tenant system of the United States, become their guardian, their lessor, and their creditor—whether the Government will take their place and let them go their way.

The pending amendment strikes out the provision for the $1,000,000,000 bond issue. It leaves the mechanics where they are. It leaves the $500,000,000 available. I have offered it in the hope that we may at least limit our activities in this experiment to a cost of half a billion dollars.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before a vote is taken upon the pending amendment, I desire to submit to the Senate another motion, and I wish to state my reasons for so doing.

The adoption of the pending amendment manifestly would defeat the purpose of the bill as contemplated by its authorship. I dislike very much to legislate in this fashion. I prefer the alternative of adequate committee consideration and decision. I realize that my present opposition to the bill as a whole in its present unsatisfactory form invites the assumption that any motion I might make serving to return the bill to a committee perhaps might be interpreted as a strategic purpose to defeat the proposed legislation; but I feel so deeply on the subject that I am going to risk that misconstruction for the purpose of making a motion and a statement in connection with the motion.

The motion I shall make is to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions to hold further hearings and report back at the present session of the Congress. Thus there will be warrant for subsequent decision before this Congress adjourns. I make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair whether that motion would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion would be in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well, Mr. President, I enter that motion, and I wish to speak briefly upon it.

It seems to me that, even from the viewpoint of those who have enthusiastic faith in this amazing new adventure, there ought to be a willingness to provide the Senate with an adequacy of information, which perfectly clearly is lacking at the present time. What information is lacking? What is the information which ought to be available to the Senate before it is asked to establish another billion-dollar credit on top of all the other gigantic expenditures already launched?

Here are some of the things which it seems to me any Senator ought to want to know——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very briefly. I have only 10 minutes, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand, the Senator wishes to recommit the bill, with instructions. What are the instructions?

Mr. VANDENBERG. To hold further hearings and report back during the present session.

Mr. CONNALLY. I congratulate the Senator on his statement that he does not believe in doing things indirectly; he believes in the direct course; he wishes to come out in the open. What does the Senator desire the committee to do with the bill? How does he wish to have it treat the bill?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am about to tell the Senator.

First, I think any committee which is proposing to ask the Senate to embark upon a $1,000,000,000 adventure, with added implications of unknown size, should have the testimony of the Treasury Department of the United States respecting the effect of another billion-dollar extension of the already straining public credit. Exhibit A: I should want the committee, and I think the Senate should want the committee, to have, as at least one witness, a spokesman officially for the Treasury Department of the United States in respect to the fiscal phase of the bill; and I call attention to the fact that not a single witness who was heard by the committee represented the Treasury Department, or gave a moment's testimony or consideration regarding the effect of this thing upon the public credit.

Second. I call attention to the fact that in the hearings even the Secretary of Agriculture, speaking at page 5 of the hearings, specifically stated as follows:

> This legislation has not yet been passed upon or cleared by the Bureau of the Budget as required by Budget Circular No. 49, so that I do not know what the relationship of the expenditures contemplated will be to the financial program of the President.

I submit, in all good faith, that another billion-dollar proposal should have the benefit of a completed report in the aspect to which the Secretary of Agriculture himself referred before the Senate is asked to approve it. Surely we are not so numb to mathematics and to our fiscal responsibilities that a billion dollars no longer gives us pause.

Third. I submit that there should be testimony respecting the uses which may be contemplated by the President and his lieutenants under the previous commitment of $500,000,000 in the $5,000,000,000 work-relief bill, specifically earmarked for rural rehabilitation. I submit that there should be testimony which will advise the Senate officially what may be already contemplated by way of an experiment in making the tenant into a proprietor farmer.

I submit that this is rationally required before the Senate can be asked to render a completely intelligent answer to a proposal to build upon that base with another billion-dollar dedication to precisely the same purpose. We have not a word of testimony upon this phase of the necessity.

I submit furthermore, Mr. President, that when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] reads to us this morning a letter indicating a failure of plans of this tenancy nature when attempted in other countries—and certainly that Senator has demonstrated himself to be completely friendly to the pending bill—and when he asserts that Dr. Mead, an official of our own Government, is available as a witness to advise us and to illuminate us in respect to the thing contemplated, the very least information which the Senate ought to have, before it launches a great new undertaking of this character, involving a minimum of a billion dollars, the very minimum of information that ought to come to the Senate officially through its committee, is testimony from sources of that character. Let us look before we leap. Let us consult at least the minimums of prudence.

I call attention, furthermore, to the frank and revealing statement of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry himself, uttered upon the floor of the Senate yesterday, and I quote him from page 6126 of the CON-GRESSIONAL RECORD. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] said:

I frankly admit that I have not had an opportunity to study this bill textually and understand thoroughly the purport of its different terms and provisions.

I quote him further, as he was about to vote for the previous motion to recommit:

Mr. President, let me say, in conclusion, that I am going to vote to recommit this bill, not for the purpose of killing it, but for the purpose of affording every member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an opportunity to study the bill and to bring back something which will be helpful to the agricultural interests and not be a gift to a certain class.

I emphasize the fact that we have the testimony of the chairman of the committee from which this bill came to us, the testimony of the chairman of the committee, frankly admitting that he had not had an opportunity adequately to study the bill textually and to understand it. Can it be argued that the Senate has laid an adequate foundation for such novel and far-reaching and expensive legislation in the absence of so much essential information and an opportunity to probe all the consequences and implications? Is this the way to serve our stewardship?

Mr. President, in consideration of what seems to me to be elementary prudence, if the Senate is to have the information upon which it may be justified in establishing such a new billion-dollar adventure, I care not how nobly meditated, I submit that a recommittal, with instructions to report during the present session, is the proper procedure. It may produce a bill which will have written into it, among other things, the protection which it is now universally conceded is necessary if the bill is to be administered without discrimination, and with minimum regard for the rights of the Treasury.

We are told that we can perfect it by amendment on the floor. I have asked several Senators this morning if they do not approach this legislation and its final approval with some trepidation, and almost invariably they have replied "Yes; we are hopeful, however, that it can be perfected and protected on the floor." I fear they lean on a broken reed.

I do not think it is fair to the legislation itself to attempt to perfect it and protect it on the floor. Far be it from me to attempt to speak in that attitude, because I would want no one to misunderstand my own relationship to the bill as it now impends, but for the sake of the bill itself, as well as for the sake of a defensible verdict by the Senate, I think the motion to recommit as made ought to be passed. Let there be a record which discloses some Senate diligence ahead of Senate judgments. Let this not be wholly a blind adventure.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I rise to ask the Senator from Michigan a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Michigan on his motion has expired. Does the Senator from Texas take the floor in his own time?

Mr. CONNALLY. I take the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understood the Senator at the beginning of his remarks to say that he opposed the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. So he would not be for it even if the Budget should recommend in favor of it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am unable to answer the Senator's question as to whether I will be for a bill which is not as yet reported to the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. But there is one now before the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And I am opposed to it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why not go on and vote it down and kill it, if the Senator is against it?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall, if that is the only recourse.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator aroused my utmost admiration by his statement at the beginning of his remarks that he did not believe in indirect methods; he meets issues courageously; he meets them at the threshold and determines them. He is opposed to the bill; it is before us; soon we shall come to a vote. So why indirectly assassinate it by sending it back to the committee?

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the Senator's construction of the motion, and he may make the most of it. The motion speaks for itself, and I think I have given ample reasons why the motion should be sustained.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, that is what I wish to discuss. The Senator from Michigan is against the bill, and he believes in meeting that issue. He wants the bill sent back to the committee. For what reason? So that they can get a report from the Budget Bureau. He wants to know what the Budget Bureau thinks about it.

Mr. President, I do not care anything about what the Budget Bureau thinks about matters of legislation. If the Budget Bureau wants to send us messages about the finances, that is its business; but the Senate and House of Representatives are perfectly capable of legislating without telephoning the Budget Director as to whether we can pass this bill or that bill. But when the Budget Bureau telephones back here that it is for the bill, the Senator from Michigan will still be against it.

I submit, Mr. President and Senators, that this is an indirect way of attempting to kill the bill. Instead of meeting the enemy at the gate and hitting him on the nose, the Senator from Michigan wants to toll him off down the alley and hit him with a blackjack while he is hidden behind a corner in the dark.

We voted on one motion to recommit. What is the sense of having another motion to recommit? If I were against the bill, I would say "no" when the roll is called.

The Senator from Michigan is not going to pay any attention to the Budget. He is going to vote for the payment of the soldiers' bonus immediately, in full, and everybody knows that the Budget Bureau is against that.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator has entirely misstated my position, as usual. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator can enlighten us by telling us whether he is for it or not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan has always opposed the immediate payment of the bonus, and will continue to oppose either the Patman or the Vinson bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am very glad to have the Senator's statement on that subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator's statements are equally plain on most of the other matters, as the Senator from Texas would find if in good faith he would undertake their interpretation.

Mr. CONNALLY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I try to keep up with the actions of all the eminent men of the country, but at the present time there are so many eminent men from the Senate speaking on the radio, and in the forum here in Washington, who are addressing the country rather than the Senate, that it is a little difficult to keep up with their attitude on every question.

I earnestly and sincerely apologize to the Senator, however, for even intimating that he would probably vote for the bonus. I was misinformed, and I make public acknowledgement of my error. The Senator from Texas makes many errors; I am glad the Senator from Michigan makes none.

Mr. President, why can we not go ahead and vote on the pending bill and the amendments, and dispose of the measure? I do not think it ought to go back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We ought to meet these issues as they come forward, and dispose of them.

I cannot resist the temptation to state that, notwithstanding the solemn asseverations of the Senator from Michigan, his purpose is to kill the bill, in sending it back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate having voted on a motion to recommit this bill it is not now in order to make a second motion to recommit with instructions to report during the present session or before the end of the present session. I should like to be heard for just a moment on the point of order.

If any other rule were adopted than that which is implied in my point of order, it would mean that an unlimited number of motions to recommit a single bill might be made. In illustration, if the Senate voted down the pending motion to recommit, as it did vote down a motion to recommit yesterday, it would then clearly be in order, if it is in order now to move to recommit, to make another motion to recommit with a definite instruction to report incorporating a certain amendment. Then if the Senate should vote down that motion to recommit with instructions, a still further motion to recommit with instructions to incorporate another amendment could be made, and so on, to the end that an infinite number of motions to recommit might be made.

I have not had an opportunity for examining the precedents. It is my recollection, however, that the rule prevails in the body at the other end of the Capitol that only a single motion to recommit may be made. If that rule exists in the body at the other end of the Capitol—and it is in accord with the general rule of parliamentary law—it follows that the same rule should apply here unless there is something in the Senate rules which makes a different principle applicable. It is my judgment that there is nothing in the Senate rules which would warrant the submission to the Senate when a point of order is made of an indefinite number of motions to recommit.

The object of a motion to recommit is, of course, to give the Senate the advantage of further consideration by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise merely to make the observation to the Senator from Arkansas that since the motion to recommit was voted on in the Senate there has been no change at all in the bill, as I understand. No amendment to it has been adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. The motion to recommit does not, in my judgment, conform to the principle which underlies the rule relating to the subject.

Reference has been made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], in support of his motion, to a statement made by the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The attitude of the chairman has been defined in his remarks made on the subject on the floor of the Senate. It is to be pointed out that the bill comes from the committee presided over by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. There is nothing to indicate that the committee did not have ample and unlimited opportunity to consider this legislation. If we are to recommit measures pending in the Senate every time some Senator is opposed to the legislation, it is manifest that we will reach no conclusion concerning legislation. It is fair and it is just that the Senate have the opportunity to pass upon the question as to whether it wishes a Senate committee further to consider the proposal for legislation, but when it is once done it is not fair, and it is not just, in my opinion, to permit the submission of an indefinite number of motions to recommit, all of them coming from the opponents of the legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not think there is sufficient doubt concerning this matter to cause any considerable discussion. The statement made by the Senator from Arkansas is largely academic and applies to a condition wholly different from the one which obtains at this time.

Of course, it would be improper, Mr. President, to renew a motion to recommit a bill to a committee if there had been no change in the situation between the time the first motion was disposed of and the time the second motion was made. But there has been a change in the condition and character of the parliamentary situation. When the motion to recommit was made yesterday there were no instructions appended to that motion. It was simply a motion to recommit to the committee having jurisdiction, namely, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The motion now pending and made by the able Senator from Michigan is to recommit with instructions to report the bill at this session of the Congress; which is a wholly different motion, which involves a change in the parliamentary situation, and is not in conflict with nor is it prohibited by reason of the disposition of the first motion to recommit which was made.

Mr. President, no one is going to argue that one Member after another can follow with a motion exactly the same in its nature. That is the position of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it the Senator's position that, if the Senate should now vote down the motion of the Senator from Michigan to recommit with instructions to report before the end of the session, the same Senator or some other Senator could then make a motion to recommit with instructions to strike out section (d) on page 4 or some other section in the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. Why "Certainly not"?

Mr. McNARY. Such a motion would be wholly different from the proposal now made. It is not necessary to discuss a moot proposition of that kind. I should say offhand that such a motion probably would not be in order. The motion referred to by the Senator from Arkansas is to recommit with instructions to modify a particular provision of the bill. That is not the point involved at all. Yesterday the question parliamentarily was, Shall the bill be recommitted to the committee having jurisdiction? That motion failed by a few votes. The motion at this time is to recommit to that committee for the purpose of study and a new report at the present session of Congress. There is a clear distinction between the two motions. The first one made would place the bill with the committee. The committee then could do as it pleased. The pending motion contemplates action by the committee if the bill should be recommitted, and again to report it to the Senate. In the present status, that is one proposition which, in my opinion, clearly entitles this motion to be addressed to and to be considered by the Senate.

Another exception to the rule is that when a bill has been modified by amendment or motion of some kind it is then in a new garb and the same motion will apply.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McNARY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The logic of the Senator's statement, as I now understand it, is that if the Senate should vote down the motion to recommit and an amendment should subsequently be offered and agreed to, it would then be in order to make another motion to recommit.

Mr. McNARY. That is my position.

Mr. ROBINSON. And so on. So if 100 amendments were offered to this bill and agreed to, after each amendment had been incorporated in the bill by a vote of the Senate, a motion to recommit would lie?

Mr. McNARY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I will not yield for an argument.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President. I thank the Senator for having yielded. I thought the Senator had yielded.

Mr. McNARY. I had yielded for a question, and always do so courteously, but not for the Senator to make a speech in my time. The reason is very obvious.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no feeling about the matter. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. McNARY. I have no feeling other than the one of being very positive in my assertion.

Mr. President, there are two positions, I maintain, which I specify as follows: When a motion is made to recommit, enlarged over the original motion by including the direction to the committee that it shall report back to the Senate during the present session, that enlargement of the motion makes it fit and pertinent at this time. The other parliamentary proposition is that whenever a bill is modified by an amendment of any kind it then has changed its complexion, its nature, and its garb, and is then subject to a motion to recommit. Those two reasons sustain the proposition advanced by the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). May the Chair inquire of the Senator whether it is his contention that the status of the pending bill has been changed since the motion to recommit was voted down?

Mr. McNARY. I now am stating a proposition which I believe is well bottomed on parliamentary law, but I have not inquired of the Parliamentarian or the Chair whether the status has changed. That is a question which can be determined by the Chair by a question of the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to find anything in the rules of the Senate which forbids the repetition of a motion to recommit. The Chair is personally in entire agreement with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] on the question of what the rules should be, but rule XV of the Senate provides that—

> It shall be in order at any time before the passage of any bill or resolution to move its commitment.

The rule of the Senate is essentially different from that of the House of Representatives referred to by the Senator from Arkansas. In that case it is provided specifically in the rule that—

> After the previous question shall have been ordered on a bill for final passage, one motion to recommit shall be in order.

Which is in derogation of the general parliamentary rule as to the previous question. However, in view of the explicit statement in Senate rule XV that—the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

> It shall be in order at any time before the passage of any bill or resolution to move its commitment—

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, permit me one brief statement. I concede that the motion to recommit may be made at any time. My point is that only a single motion can be made, and that the language of the Senate rule does not change the general rule of parliamentary law that a single motion, and only a single motion, to recommit may be made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been previously ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I understand the question is on the pending motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct, the Chair will state to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to make a few remarks on the pending motion.

A few days ago we discussed the question of recommital, and we have voted on it, and now from the enemies of the bill comes the same effort indirectly to defeat the bill.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] called the attention of the Senate to the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury before the Finance Committee this morning. I am informed that the Secretary of the Treasury was discussing and opposing the bonus bill, but that he declined to give any expression upon the pending bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is not quite accurate—he was not present—in stating the position of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary was there to present the views of the Treasury with respect to the effect of issuing bonds, but he did suggest that in the event that one of the bills which was before the committee——

Mr. BANKHEAD. The bonus bill?

Mr. KING. Yes; the bonus bill—was passed, then he had a suggestion to make with respect to the sources of revenue by which the obligation might be met. He did not state, as I understood him, that he was opposed to the bonus, but he gave his views with respect to the effect which the issuing of bonds would have upon the credit of the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I am developing is that his statement was not made in opposition to the pending bill.

Mr. KING. With respect to the pending bill, he stated that he did not know anything about it; that it had not been referred to the Treasury, and he made no comment in respect to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My recollection is that the Secretary of the Treasury referred to the measure under consideration as a contingent liability and not a part of the Budget to which he was referring when he said that any additional appropriations or expenditures not estimated for in the Budget ought, in the opinion of the Treasury, to be accompanied by suitable increases in taxation to take care of them.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have pointed out heretofore, and will undertake to do so again, that the proposed bond issue provided for by the pending bill against which the assault is being made contemplates that the bonds shall be issued not all at once, as is required under the bonus bill, and as is required, probably, in order to obtain money under the Work Relief Act, but shall be issued over a period of years.

The bill also provides that the bonds may be issued only with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; so that, whether his judgment is taken in advance or is taken from time to time, when it is proposed to issue the bonds, is entirely immaterial. The provision as to bonds as the bill stands is merely an authorization, the power being left in the administration, both in the President through the board, which is to be set up to control the proposed corporation, and in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, not to approve the bonds as they may be called for. So it is an entirely different situation from that which it has been sought to emphasize upon the Members of the Senate as an absolute present liability for a new billion-dollar bond issue. The Treasury must at all times, when it is sought to issue bonds under the bill, be consulted and must approve the issue from time to time.

It has been insisted on both sides of the Chamber that the $500,000,000 allocation of the Work Relief Appropriation Act is sufficient, and the impression has been created or sought to be created that the $500,000,000 appropriation is confined to rural rehabilitation. Any Senator who will examine the Work Relief Act will promptly find that that is a wrong impression. Five hundred million dollars is not appropriated solely for rural rehabilitation. The language is—

> (b) rural rehabilitation and relief in stricken agricultural areas—

Such as those affected by drought, dust storms, and other conditions which bring about distress in agricultural sections—> and water conservation, transmountain water diversion, and irrigation and reclamation.

Thus we find a broad field not merely of temporary plans for rural rehabilitation, but along other lines.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from North Carolina, having read something in the nature of a title or introduction, will he read the text of the so-called "Russell amendment"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have read the rural rehabilitation provision which has been commented on by the Senator from North Carolina in his insistence that $500,000,000 was already provided for rural rehabilitation.

Mr. BAILEY. But will the Senator read the text of the Russell amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; the Senator knows what it is.

Mr. BAILEY. I myself read it into the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; then, why does the Senator want it read again? That is a different subject entirely.

Mr. BAILEY. With all due respect to the Senator from Alabama——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not yield. My time is too short for controversy over matters which we all understand.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So there is no general provision in the Work Relief Act for $500,000,000 limited to rural rehabilitation.

We know from published accounts, we know from general information, that various plans for drought-stricken areas, for water conservation in the West, for transmountain water diversion and irrigation and reclamation are all contemplated, and plans are being prepared for these various items, which will take the larger part of the $500,000,000 appropriation.

I asserted here once before, and I again assert upon my responsibility as a Member of the Senate, that no more than the $50,000,000 specified in the pending bill will be used for the purposes of the bill and under the bill. So we may disregard all insinuations or suggestions in regard to greater sums. I make that statement with authority.

Therefore, Mr. President, it is a question whether we leave in this bill the real heart of it, the bond-issue provision, which may be utilized, as I have stated from time to time, in the administration of the bill but at no time without the approval of the administration.

So I submit, Mr. President, that we ought to go forward with this bill, conclude the debate on it, and then either vote it up or vote it down.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama is in error as to the position of some of us as to the pending bill. I am among those who think that the $500,000,000 appropriation in the Work Relief Act, if available, even if there were added to it the billion dollars proposed to be provided by the pending bill, would be utterly and wholly inadequate to accomplish the purpose contemplated.

If we are going to relieve the condition of tenancy in the United States it will require $15,000,000,000. It will not be possible to perform such a work with $500,000,000; it will not be possible to do it with $1,000,000,000. There are nearly 3,000,000 tenants in this country, and if only $3,000 were spent on each tenant, $9,000,000,000 would be required. However, $5,000, or even $10,000, might be spent on each tenant, for there is no specification in that regard contained in the bill. The bill simply starts with a billion dollars, which will reach less than 10 percent of the tenants.

My objection primarily is that we are starting on a course which will lead us not into a billion dollars of expenditure but which will lead us into $10,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000 of expenditure.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] discussed this morning the indebtedness of this country. With his characteristic caution, he understated the obligations of the Nation. The obligations of the Government, roughly, are as follows:

Twenty-eight and a half billion dollars of conceded Federal obligations, which are direct.

We have just authorized $5,000,000,000 to be expended for relief purposes and work relief, an amount which can only be raised by added indebtedness; it is a potential indebtedness.

We have, roughly—and I am only dealing with rough figures—$5,000,000,000 of unexpended appropriations, which can only be provided and used by increasing our indebtedness.

We have a direct obligation of bonus certificates, due in 1945, but, notwithstanding, a direct obligation, of not less than $2,000,000,000.

So, we are confronted with direct obligations of over $40,000,000,000, and, in addition to that, we have indirect and contingent obligations amounting at least to $5,000,000,000.

Yet we propose to start upon a course which will involve a total expenditure of not less than $10,000,000,000. We cannot begin this program, Mr. President, and go into the State of the Senator from Alabama and take care of 5 or 10 percent of the tenants and then deny to the other 90 or 95 percent the same relief. Once we start on this program, we must go on with it.

The indirect obligations have a direct bearing. We are interested—or, at least, some of us are interested—in the credit of the United States. Some of us believe that if the credit of the United States shall be impaired it will destroy the landlords and the tenants, the merchants and the bankers, the professional men and the workingmen. Our first obligation is to protect the national credit.

The national credit is indicated by what? By the ability of the Government to market its bonds. It matters not when a beginning is made to market a bond whether it is a direct or a contingent obligation. It consumes that much of the available investable money of the United States. In other words, $40,000,000,000 of direct obligations consume $40,000,000,000 of investable capital. If we issue $1,000,000,000, $5,000,000,000, $10,000,000,000, or any other sum of indirect obligations, we take out of the market for Government bonds that much more money. This proposed issue of $1,000,000,000, even assuming that every dollar of it shall be repaid in due course, will take out of the present market that much money.

Our banks today, as has been stated repeatedly, have over $15,000,000,000 in their vaults and treasuries. We are imposing upon them relief bonds; we are imposing upon them other Government bonds. There is a limit. We have reached the point where the Federal indebtedness is nearly equal to the total deposits in all the banks.

There is another feature which disturbs me. When I came into the Senate I stood on the rostrum and took an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. That obligation I have regarded as sacred. My honest, deliberate judgment is that the pending bill is unconstitutional. There is a fundamental in the levying of taxes that they must be for a public purpose. The purpose of this bill is to appropriate money to buy farms for private individuals. That is not a public purpose and cannot be sustained under the Constitution of these United States. It is no answer to that question to say that the Congress has passed other unconstitutional measures.

Personally, I think we are starting upon a policy which, if pursued without some modifications, will lead us into national bankruptcy, national calamity, national catastrophe.

We speak of farm tenancy. Yes; it has been growing. Where has farm tenancy been growing most rapidly? In the finest agricultural areas of the land. If Senators will glance at the map upon their desks, they will find the highest percentage of tenancy in the finest agricultural areas of the United States. In my State the tenant is on the best land, not upon the poor land. I make no invidious comparison; but, if Senators will examine the map, they will find the lowest percentage of tenancy in the States which agriculturally are the least fertile. The States of Iowa and Illinois, for instance, among the finest of our agricultural States, have the highest rate of tenancy. That means something.

In my State, where sugar beets are raised, the tenant has a freedom of action. He may be called migratory, but he goes to the choice land and not to the poor land. The poor land cannot be rented.

We have roughly two classes of tenants, those who are not smart enough to maintain themselves on a farm, and those who are too smart to undertake the burden of taxes and maintenance of the farm. In the beet areas in Colorado many of the best farms are operated by tenants. They are expert beet farmers. They know how to raise beets. They know that beets are raised upon a tract of land only 1 year in 3 or 1 year in 5. They rent a farm and raise beets this year on it, and next year they move on to another farm. They let the landlord pay the taxes and stand the depreciation while they move on. They are experts. The situation of every tenant is unfortunate. Colorado does have, as has every other State, unfortunates in the ranks of the tenants, but they are not all unfortunate.

I am concerned with the outcome. I think the bill should be recommitted. I think it is drawn in a way which is inconsistent within itself. It lacks detail. It lacks specifications as to its operation. To show the lack of care with which it was drafted, the author himself concedes that by one provision the land belonging to the corporation shall be taxed, while by another provision the land belonging to the Corporation shall not be taxed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I say to the Senator that the provision that lands of the corporation shall not be taxed is the same provision as is contained in the Home Owners' Loan Act? The author had an amendment ready to submit when the bill came to the Senate making the purchased lands taxable.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator concedes there are inconsistent provisions as to taxes as the bill came from the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; there was a conflict. The amendment was ready to be offered when the bill came before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. I have touched just a few of the points which have occurred to me. As the bill came first before the Senate I was very much impressed. I was distressed over the tenancy situation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. Just a moment ago I asked leave to interrupt the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to read the existing law as contained in the Public Relief Act. The Senator from Alabama denied me that opportunity. I requested him to read it. He did not read it. I propose now to read it:

> Funds made available by this joint resolution may be used, in the discretion of the President, for the purpose of making loans to finance, in whole or in part, the purchase of farm lands and necessary equipment by farmers, farm tenants, croppers, or farm laborers. Such loans shall be made on such terms as the President shall prescribe and shall be repaid in equal annual installments, or in such other manner as the President may determine.

That is very clear. That gives the President power under existing legislation to appropriate from $500,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 for the precise purposes contemplated by the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado on the amendment has expired.

Mr. ADAMS. I have some time on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, those who sponsor the bill have indicated a lack of confidence in their own bill. They say it is a permissive bill. They are unwilling to put behind the bill the declaration of Congress that the corporation shall be created, that its capital shall be paid in. They merely say the President "may" do it. If I were sponsoring a bill which I believed would solve the great tenancy problem of the country, I should put the positive obligation in the measure to create and to operate the corporation. The bill, according to the statements which have been made by its author and sponsors here, may or may not go into effect.

I am curious about one feature of the measure. The President may decide, if the bill passes, not to provide the $50,000,000 to constitute its capital; but another section authorizes the corporation to issue bonds in the aggregate of not to exceed $1,000,000,000. I am wondering if they could issue the $1,000,000,000 of bonds even though they did not have the capital?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I invite the Senator's attention to subsection (3) on page 8 which reads, in part:

> To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

Can the Senator define what is embraced by the words loans for "supplies and facilities"? Could not the $1,000,000,000 be expended alone for supplies and facilities for tenant farmers?

Mr. ADAMS. I think there is no question about it. The language of the grant of power to the corporation contemplated under subsection (3) which the Senator mentions and subsection (4) authorizes not only the purchase of supplies, furnishings, and equipment, which may include victrolas, pianos, and automobiles clear up to the limit, but it authorizes the corporation to buy farms, to improve them, to develop them, and to maintain them. In other words, it proposes to put the Government in the farming business.

Mr. WALSH. "Facility" is defined in the dictionary as being "the quality of being easily performed, freedom from difficulty, ease"; so it is proposed to appropriate money to make it easy for people to live on the farm. I had supposed the greatness of our country, its wealth, and the progress which has been made had been accomplished through hard labor by the pioneers of the country who went out and by toil, by sacrifice, by surmounting extreme difficulties, built up the farming sections, and contributed materially to our prosperity, but not through "ease" or "facility" or being supplied with "furnishings, supplies, and facilities."

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that principle has been dominant, I venture to say, in the lives of the Members of this body. The men who have acquired the standing they were compelled to have in order to secure the assent of their people to come here reached it through hardships and through struggles. Those who have never had hardships, those who have never had opposition seldom, if ever, reach any high goal.

I have a couple of boys to whom I have been trying to teach that doctrine. I am trying to restrain myself, at times when I am able to do so, from making things easy for them. I am glad when they meet obstacles, glad when they meet difficulties. I have said to them, "You will never get anywhere along a smooth trail that somebody else has prepared for you"; and that is true of the farm situation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Do I understand that the Senator is in accord with the philosophy expounded by the Senator from Massachusetts, which, if I understand it, is that it is wrong to remove unnecessary hardships in this country of progress?

Mr. ADAMS. Not at all. As a matter of fact, I will say to the senior Senator from Alabama that the problem with which we are confronted today, in the richest land upon the globe, is that we are at the same instant curtailing the production of food and feeding hungry people. In other words, we have demonstrated the failure, or at least the inefficiency, of our political and economic system. I think this measure, however, is not a remedial measure. I think we have failed in reaching the remedy. I say to the Senator from Alabama that I wish every man could own his farm, but I am unable to see that it is the obligation of the Government of the United States to provide him with a farm.

Mr. BLACK rose.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me proceed.

I heard over the radio a few nights ago a gentleman who is said to be campaigning for the office of President of the United States. He was promising every man in the land a $5,000 home; he was promising every man a $2,500 income—a fine thing—he was promising every man an automobile and a radio. He was going to divide the wealth. We are following that gentleman's plan. We are starting out to provide every man with a farm, with equipment, with supplies, with facilities. We have already, in a preceding bill at this session, guaranteed every man a job.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, which was intended to benefit people in the cities all over the Nation, and which, as I recall, passed by practically a unanimous vote, provided not only for making easier the life of the city man in his home and providing him additional facilities, but, as operated, it has actually done so. It has operated in such a way as to enable him to have his home painted, to provide better heating facilities, to provide other facilities to add to the comfort and happiness of the man in the city. I believe the Senator agrees that that was a good law, does he not?

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act has done more to put this land on its feet than any other enactment or any other process of the Government save those which put the banking system on its feet.

Mr. BLACK. Then, may I ask the Senator a further question? He represents a State which contains some wonderful agricultural sections.

Mr. ADAMS. I really come from an agricultural State.

Mr. BLACK. I have been over much of that State, and have been impressed by the beauties of the farming sections, by the vast irrigation streams I saw, very frequently financed by the Federal Government.

Mr. ADAMS. No; the Senator has not seen much of that.

Mr. BLACK. Who financed them?

Mr. ADAMS. The farmers under the ditches.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; they financed them under plans providing Government money throughout the West.

Mr. ADAMS. No; not in my State—two very small areas only.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator says he believes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has done a great work, and has added to the home facilities of the man who lives in the city. Is there any reason why the humblest, poorest class of American farmers should be held up to ridicule by reason of the fact that we desire to supply them some of the same facilities we have given to those who dwell in the cities?

Mr. ADAMS. In the first instance, I may say to the Senator from Alabama that no man I have heard on this floor or elsewhere has sought to hold anyone up to ridicule because of his financial situation.

Mr. BLACK rose.

Mr. ADAMS. I will not yield further at this point.

Mr. BLACK. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield further.

Mr. ADAMS. There is no one who has more sympathy than have I for the tenant who is in distress; but it is sought to assimilate the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act with this bill. If Senators wish to reach a parallel, let them pass a bill providing that the Government shall finance the purchase or the building of a home for every man who does not have a home. The operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation run parallel to the operations of the Federal land bank, which provides loans to farmers to relieve them from economic distress due to indebtedness. This bill does not do that. This is intended as a plan to purchase farms for those who are now farmless, or, at least, who are tenants upon farms. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation does not attempt to provide a home for every man who does not own a home, but merely to take care of those in financial distress and who have an equity in a home through the investment of earnings or savings.

Mr. BLACK. By providing facilities; does it not?

Mr. ADAMS. It does not even take care of those who are able to carry their mortgages, but has exacted of applicants that they must show a distressed condition in order to take advantage of it. That corporation has been limited to that field. There is practically no limit to this bill, I will say to the Senator from Alabama. Under this bill we are not only taking care of the tenants of whom the Senator speaks, but we are bringing within it some millions of farm laborers who are just as much entitled to help. Once we start upon the program of providing a farm at Government expense for every man who wants a farm, there is no limit to the obligations the Government will incur. In my judgment, by such a course, we shall destroy the financial credit of our country, and if we do that we shall destroy the tenant, we shall destroy the farm owner, we shall destroy the home owner and our country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I assume the Senator realizes that there are about $20,000,000,000 of mortgages on urban homes.

Mr. ADAMS. Slightly more than that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. More than that. When the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill was before the Senate, did the Senator make that argument? When we proposed to appropriate the original $2,000,000,000, did he argue that it was leading to a $20,000,000,000 appropriation, and therefore did he vote against the original proposition?

Mr. ADAMS. I did not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Why does not the Senator apply that rule here?

Mr. ADAMS. The reason was that it was not an applicable argument. As a matter of fact, we were seeking to relieve the home owner who was in distress by reason of economic conditions, and who could not carry his mortgage; and with the addition of the bill which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] has had passed, and for which I voted, we are going to take care practically of the remainder of those who need help.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that when a man owns a home, and is in distress, he can borrow only 80 percent of the value of the home?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. While under this bill, where a person has nothing in the way of security, he gets everything—land, building, equipment, supplies, everything—and is expected to pay back ultimately to the Government the value of the entire investment. It is an entirely different proposition from loaning a man 80 percent of what he is worth.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the statement of the Senator is entirely correct.

Now, just one other statement of fact with reference to farm tenancy: The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] had a pamphlet yesterday as to tenancy in Iowa. It showed, for what it may be worth, that there had been a decline in foreclosures in Iowa since 1932 to 1933 and 1934; but of the foreclosures in 1934, 67 percent of them were by insurance companies, 20 percent by Government agencies, and I think 16 percent by banks.

Arguments have been made here about grasping landlords and those who are seeking to make all farmers tenants. I think the Senate is quite familiar with the attitude of insurance companies. They are becoming unwilling landlords. They are involuntary landowners; and if any tenant, or anybody who is a competent farmer can give any assurance of repayment, nothing will so much delight the life-insurance companies as to make a sale to him of some of the foreclosed properties.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Colorado has expired. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]), and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DIETERICH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. LEWIS]. I understand he is paired on this question with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. If my colleague [Mr. LEWIS] were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. RUSSELL. My colleague, the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], is unavoidably absent. On this question he is paired with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. If my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] were present, he would vote "nay", and I understand that if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is necessarily absent.

Mr. ROBINSON. I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

I also wish to announce that there are necessarily detained from the Senate the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—38

Adams	Clark	Hale	Smith
Austin	Coolidge	Johnson	Steiwer
Bailey	Copeland	Keyes	Townsend
Barbour	Couzens	King	Truman
Borah	Dickinson	Lonergan	Tydings

NOT VOTING—15

Barkley	Lewis	McCarran	Pope
Davis	Long	Norbeck	Thomas, Okla.
George	Maloney	O'Mahoney	Thomas, Utah
Hastings	McAdoo	Pittman

So Mr. VANDENBERG's motion to recommit the bill was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out the following:

> The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $1,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes), now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DIETERICH (when Mr. LEWIS' name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LEWIS] is necessarily detained from the Senate. I further wish to announce that he has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]; that if present, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" and the Senator from Illinois would vote "nay" on this question.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous roll call, I feel free to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay", and the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 45, as follows:

YEAS—29

Adams	Coolidge	King	Townsend
Austin	Dickinson	Lonergan	Tydings
Bailey	Gerry	McNary	Vandenberg

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, yesterday I sent to the desk an amendment which I proposed to offer. I now call up the amendment and ask that it be disposed of at this time.

I ask that the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 11, after line 2, it is proposed to add the following:

No land purchased from the Corporation herein created up to the value of $2,500 shall ever be encumbered with any lien or obligation, either statutory or contractual. Such land shall not be subject to any debt, or debts, of the owner, or obligation of any kind, and every conveyance, lease, or contract executed by the Corporation herein created shall contain a provision that the land shall forever remain free of all liens or encumbrances of whatever kind, and such provision shall be a covenant running with the land as long as it shall be used as a farm homestead. This provision shall not affect the lien of the Corporation for the money loaned for the purchase of the land, or equipment for the land.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I had hoped that the author of the pending bill, who has it in charge, would accept this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment is entirely acceptable to me.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, unless some other Senator desires to discuss the amendment, I see no occasion to take up the time of the Senate in explaining it. The purpose of the amendment is to make sure that no land up to the value of $2,500 shall ever have a lien placed upon it.

I will not further discuss the amendment at this time.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to obtain some information on this amendment. Does the Senator intend that there shall be an exemption altogether from State and county taxes?

Mr. LOGAN. No; not at all. The property will be subject to taxation just the same as any other property, but in case of default the taxes will have to be collected out of the other property which the farmer owns. That is now the law in most of the States, as I understand. The amendment does not exempt the property from taxation; but taxes are a lien against all the property a man has, and the amendment provides that no statutory lien shall affect the title to the land. The purpose is to relieve a man from the fear which he has of being homeless in his old age. It is to protect him against his own improvidence. It is the same provision which is often put in trust deeds where some man conveys property to his son and is afraid the son will let it get away from him. The purpose of the amendment is, up to the extent of $2,500, to insure the man who works out the necessary money to pay for the land that he will have a home, that he cannot be persuaded to encumber it, and that it shall not be sold for any purpose.

This is not an unusual provision. Several States have such provisions now, as I understand. We do not have such a provision in my State. The property will be subject to taxation, but it cannot be sold to satisfy a lien, even for taxes, under the language which is used in the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether the land could be sold under the execution of a judgment?

Mr. LOGAN. It could not.

Mr. BAILEY. The amendment, then, would be in the nature of an exemption in bankruptcy?

Mr. LOGAN. The amendment simply provides that the land shall remain a haven of refuge, as it were. The amendment will add very materially to the value of the property. It will offer an incentive to a man to work to pay for his farm, because when he once has it paid for he cannot be inveigled into placing encumbrances upon it for any purpose. He may have a family, he may be bringing up boys and girls, and his children may reach the conclusion that he ought to buy an automobile for them, and he may not be able to withstand that temptation. Other people may come around, seeking to have him incur indebtedness and to mortgage his farm. This amendment simply prohibits his placing a mortgage upon the property at all, for any purpose.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he really contemplates having the Government of the United States set up a system of land tenure in this country.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. I have always thought that was a matter for the States.

Mr. LOGAN. The Government acquires the land, and it has the right to prescribe the terms upon which the land shall be sold. It has the power to put in the conveyance or in the contract a provision that "We will sell this land to you, but a part of the consideration, a part of the covenant, is that you shall never encumber the land." That is quite frequently done, as the Senator from North Carolina must be aware, in private business. I imagine the Senator has prepared many deeds and wills where real estate was transferred to someone with the condition that he could not encumber it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say to the Senator that I would not do that in North Carolina, because I know that the first court I came into would set the deed aside. However, what I am now interested in is the proposition to have the Government of the United States, which never had any title to land in North Carolina except what it bought, set up a form of land tenure. The Government did have title in the territorial States. The proposition now seems to me to be one to enable the United States Government, by the purchase of land through a corporation, to set up a very peculiar form of land tenure. I should like the Senator to explain that feature.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no desire to take up the time of the Senate in explaining that which is so simple that anyone can understand it. If the Government owns the land, it has the power to prescribe the terms upon which it shall sell it. This amendment is for the protection of the poor and of the down-trodden. It is for the protection of those who are unable to protect themselves. Then, after they have purchased it, they ought to have the incentive that after they pay for the land it cannot be taken away from them. They ought not to go on fearing that in their old age they will have no place where they can stay.

There is not much occasion to try to help people unless we go the full limit in our efforts to help them. This is a simple matter. It merely gives a man a little home which cannot be taken away from him. We have homestead laws in all the States, but unfortunately some of the States allow the owners to place mortgages upon homesteads, and they are swept away.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LOGAN. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Does the Senator believe that his amendment would bar the execution of a judgment rendered in a State court for debt?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, yes; there is no question about that. We have a right to prescribe the terms upon which the land shall be sold; and if the owner prescribes the terms when land is sold, the buyer takes it with certain restrictions upon the title, with a certain covenant in the deed that it cannot be encumbered, and it cannot be subjected to his debts. If that can be done, then I say in my judgment that it is a valid restriction, and has always been held so.

Homesteads are exempt from execution in all the States, so far as I know. A man's homestead cannot be sold for his debts. However, since the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is satisfied to accept the amendment, I shall offer no further suggestions at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7054) to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment. On page 2, line 11, following the word "Senate", I move to strike out the period, insert a comma, and the words "and not more than two of said three members shall be members of the same political party."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I could not understand the amendment as read by the Senator from Iowa, and should like to have it stated at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 11, after the word "Senate", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words:

And not more than two of said three members shall be members of the same political party.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I think, in all fairness, there should be such a political division in the composition of the Board.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to say that I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Very well. Then, I will not discuss it further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move to strike out, on page 9, lines 19, 20, and 21. The language of subdivision (b) as it appears in the bill provides that—

(b) Preference shall be given applicants who are married or who have dependent families, have good moral character, and are experienced in farming and familiar with farm operations, or who are or recently were farmers, farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers.

I submit to the Senate that that reads more like a statement of eligibility than a statement of preference. If it be true that preference is to be given to applicants who have good moral character, then it follows that when those of good moral character shall have been given preference, those of bad moral character shall then be given consideration. I do not believe it was ever intended that persons of bad moral character should participate in the benefits under the bill.

All the arguments in favor of the bill have been directed to the situation in regard to farm tenants and to the desire on the part of those of us who have voted to support the bill to promote the interest of those who are farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers. I believe that if the expressions on the floor of the Senate are any indication of the purpose of those who are favorable to the pending bill, then my amendment should be adopted. If adopted, the provision would then read:

Preference shall be given applicants who are farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers.

There is an additional reason for such an amendment. The senior Senator from Alabama made a statement yesterday in closing the argument before the vote on the motion to recommit—an excellent statement—in which he set forth the plight of the little fellow. The only way in which the little fellow can be helped is to give him preference under this bill. If we do not do that, if we say preference shall be given to all the other classes mentioned and to those experienced in farming and familiar with farming operations, no matter what kind of person the particular individual may be, and we then say "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers", we relegate to the last position in the list those whom we all want to help under the provisions of the bill. I believe the real intention of the friends of the bill would be served if the language should be changed so as to give preference to "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers", and all others who, under the language of the bill, are entitled to consideration would then receive consideration.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I suggest to the Senator that he include the words "or recently were", for the simple reason that if the Senator's amendment as it is now drawn should be adopted it would preclude any assistance from the Farmers' Home Corporation to those who have been foreclosed and have lost their farms through misfortune.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he would have the provision read "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers or those who have been farm tenants."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I suggest to the Senator that he modify his amendment so as to provide for striking out lines 19, 20, and 21 down to and including the word "are" in line 21, so that it would provide that "preference shall be given" at all times to those "who are or recently were farmers, farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, my thought is that they would not be denied consideration. There is no question of eligibility. If subdivision (b) were entirely stricken out, they would all be entitled to consideration, and we would come back to the position several times urged by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that it would depend upon the administration of the proposed act. However, this section seeks to give preference; in doing so it enumerates farmers of all kinds, and then says, "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers."

The Senator's suggestion, if adopted, would mean that preference would be given to applicants who are farmers.

Therefore, no matter what kind of farmer he is, or how big a farmer he may have been, he is given first preference. My thought is that included as eligibles shall be farmers and those who have been farmers; put in such eligibility provision as the Senate may deem wise; but when it comes to giving preference, I think preference should be given to "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers", those who are most in need of help.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is perfectly obvious that this bill cannot take care of all the farmers, farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers in this country; and if the Senator's amendment should prevail, then it would result, in my judgment, in the exclusion of those who have lost their farms or who have been recently tenant farmers and who have been forced to leave the land due to economic conditions. It would be unjust to exclude them from consideration, because it seems to me in some instances their cause should appeal more to us than the cause of those who may as tenants perhaps today be successfully operating farms.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, does the Senator think it would exclude all those who have been forced to forego farming by reason of control policies?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I believe that it would, Mr. President, because, as I said a moment ago, while the Senator from South Carolina contends that this is only a preference, we must recognize that the bill is not sufficient in its scope, so far as the appropriation is concerned, to include all the farm tenants or share-croppers or farm laborers, and therefore they are given preference. Thus those who have lost their farms due to any cause, the depression or otherwise, will be excluded, because the entire facilities of the bill, in my opinion, will be absorbed by those to whom the Senator's amendment would give preference, namely, "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not agree with the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin that that would result by giving them preference, but if his statement be correct and that merely by providing that preference be given to "farm tenants, share-croppers, or farm laborers", the entire billion dollars would be consumed, then certainly there is all the more reason for modifying the language of the bill, because by the language as it now stands, in the clause referred to, preference is given, first, to those who are experienced in farming, who are familiar with farm operations, than to those who are farmers or recently were farmers; and consigned to the third position in the preference list are the farm tenants for whom we have been expressing our sympathy upon this floor.

I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama, who is in charge of the bill and who is its author, whether he would agree to the amendment if I should modify it so that it would read?—

Farm tenants, share-croppers, farm laborers, or those who are or recently were farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] if that would meet his suggestion?

Mr. BYRNES. I think that we ought to legislate to help the farm tenants and share-croppers and farm laborers and that they should be placed first in the list of those who are given preference.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, I ask to modify my amendment as I have indicated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from South Carolina proposes to strike out the words "married or who have dependent families"?

Mr. BYRNES. I propose to strike out lines 19, 20, and 21, on page 9, and the word "or" on line 22, and after the word "laborers" in line 22 to add the following: "or those who are or recently were farmers."

Mr. BORAH. The Senator desires to strike out the words "married or who have dependent families"?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; to strike out those words from the statement of preference.

Mr. BORAH. I do not see why the Senator should wish to do that. Why should preference not be given to those who are married or who have dependent families and who have the other qualifications which are provided?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, while I have no particular reason, I still do not believe that the purpose of this bill is actually to influence those who have been considering entering into wedlock and to insist that they must marry. I have thought it was really a bill to help farm tenants and share croppers and farm laborers, whether they were married or unmarried. I think it important that we should try to relieve them, but I do not believe it so important to enter into another field of legislation.

Mr. BORAH. It is not designed, of course, to encourage matrimony, but in the case of two tenants, one of whom is married and has a dependent family, and the other is unmarried, I think the one who is married ought to be given preference over the one who is single and has no dependent family. I shall insist that that language be left in the bill. Really all we need to take out of the phraseology is "have good moral character", because that is a thing which really is not susceptible of demonstration in a matter of this kind. We do not know anything about it until it is too late.

If we say that "preference shall be given applicants who are married or who have dependent families, and are experienced in farming and familiar with farm operations", and so forth, it seems to me a wise provision. I cannot understand why we should not give preference to those who have dependent families. They ought to be considered and taken care of in preference to those who have not dependent families.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I insist that we have a vote on the question whether the words "married or who have dependent families" shall be stricken out.

Mr. BYRNES. If I should modify the amendment so as to strike out the words "have good moral character, and are experienced in farming", would the Senator object to it? He does not want to say, does he, how much of a family a man must have in order to have a dependent family?

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not undertaking to go that far.

Mr. BYRNES. Shall preference be given a man with five children over the man with only four children?

Mr. BORAH. No; but preference should be given him if he has a family over the man who has no family.

Mr. BYRNES. I wondered why the Senator had entered into the consideration of that question at all.

Mr. BORAH. So far as I am concerned it is not a subject of humor. I think where we find two good persons, either of whom may come within the law, and the one has a dependent family and the other has not, that fact ought to be taken into consideration if we are going to give any preference.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator would have me modify the amendment to provide that preference shall be given farmers who are married or who have dependent families?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I shall be satisfied with that.

Mr. BYRNES. Then, I desire to modify my amendment so as to cover the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, by striking out the words "have good moral character, and are experienced in farming and familiar with farm operations, or who are or recently were farmers" and inserting the words I have heretofore indicated, "or those who are or recently were farmers", after the word "laborers", in line 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, line 18, in subparagraph (b), it is proposed to strike out the words "have good moral character, and are experienced in farming and familiar with farm operations, or who are or recently were farmers"; in line 22, after the word "share-croppers", to strike out the word "or"; and in line 22, after the word "laborers", to insert the words "or those who are or recently were farmers", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) Preference shall be given applicants who are married or have dependent families, farm tenants, share-croppers, farm laborers, or who are or recently were farmers.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment and I should like to have the attention of the author of the bill as I state it. I have discussed it with the author of the bill. On page 8, line 19, after the word "contracts", I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words:

but no sale shall be made to one purchaser in excess of $15,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have talked but briefly with the Senator from Iowa about the amendment. There is more or less a difference of opinion about it. I am willing that it shall be put to a vote.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not know that I understand the implication of the amendment. Is it relative to the sale of land by the Government in order to inaugurate any particular project, or is it a limitation upon the amount which may be expended in behalf of any one individual?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is a limitation on the amount which any one man can purchase from the Government under the terms of the bill. The purpose is to prevent one man buying several hundred thousand dollars worth of land purely as a matter of speculation. We want the land to be sold to farmers and to tenant farmers for homes. Therefore, we ought to limit the amount which the Government may sell to any one individual. In my judgment, $15,000 should be the maximum price of a farm one purchaser could buy.

Mr. KING. I think that is entirely too generous. I do not favor any proposal which would permit the expenditure of $15,000 in behalf of any one tenant farmer, or, for that matter, any one farmer. If we are spending as much as $15,000 or $10,000 in behalf of a tenant, who is to be advantaged by the measure, we are going to limit the number of tenants who may receive the benefits of the measure. When we consider that there are millions of persons who are tenants, and then propose permitting the expenditure of $15,000 in behalf of one tenant, it is obvious the $1,000,000,000 fund will soon be exhausted.

Mr. DICKINSON. Would it not be better to limit it to $15,000 than to have the sky the limit?

Mr. KING. Oh, assuredly.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree it would be better to limit it to $15,000 rather than to have no limitation at all. I am in thorough sympathy with the objective which the Senator seems to have. I do not favor the Government providing $15,000 farms. That is all contrary to my conception of the purposes of the measure. I fear if we place a limitation of $15,000 it might be expected and might be hoped that there would be loans made of $15,000. I hope, if the Senate adopts any limitation, it shall certainly be smaller than $15,000.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest that in certain sections of the country a farm unit, with any type of equipment whatever, is worth more than $15,000. There are certain sections of the country where a farm unit may be worth only $4,000 or $5,000, but the average farm in the Mississippi Valley embraces from 120 to 160 acres of land. If that land is based on the usual price of approximately $75 to $100 an acre, the tenant farmers in that area ought to have a right to enjoy the same privileges from the Corporation as are to be given to the tenant in Alabama, who may buy a farm for only $3,000.

Mr. BLACK. I am very glad to see the Senator has changed his mind since yesterday. As I recall, although I have not looked at the RECORD, he stated then it was all right for us to provide loans for tenant farmers down in Alabama. I understood he objected to such loans being supplied to the State of Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am opposed to the national socialization of land. I stated yesterday that I wished we could make this a one-State experiment; that I did not want to see the experiment tried in Iowa; that I would rather see it tried in some other State. I am opposed to this type of land financing. I am opposed to the bill. I am going to vote against the passage of the bill. However, if the bill is going to be enacted into law, I believe nobody ought to be permitted to go into land speculation on Government money under the terms of the bill, which can be done under the bill as it is now drawn.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator, but I think the bill now provides a greater limitation than would be provided by the limitation of $15,000. It provides a limitation on small farms. Am I to understand that the Senator favors having the bill provide for loans of as much as $15,000 to a tenant or share-cropper to buy land?

Mr. DICKINSON. If we are not going to do that, it is not going to be of any benefit in what we know are the high-priced land areas of the country. It would be limited then to what may be called the "cheaper priced" lands.

Mr. BLACK. I understand the Senator wants the bill to provide for loans as great as $15,000?

Mr. DICKINSON. No; I said not in excess of $15,000.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague for that purpose?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MURPHY. Is the Senator from Alabama under the impression that the bill will not reach areas where the price of land is high, as in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, and eastern Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I am of the opinion that it will reach any section so as to provide a small farm for any individual tenant farmer or share-cropper or for the others who come within the scope of the bill. I do not know the exact value of lands in the various sections nor the type of farm which would be called a "small" farm. I certainly do not want the bill to provide a special limitation which would indicate that in sections where land can be purchased cheaply $15,000 may be spent and more land acquired than a farmer actually needs. The objection I have is to placing in the bill a limitation which in effect is a permission to reach that amount, and which to that extent would counteract the provision in the bill which is intended to benefit small farmers.

That is the objection I have. I prefer to have the bill as it is, leaving it up to the administrators of the measure to determine what is a small farm in each particular locality rather than to invite the purchase of a large farm in a locality where land is cheap.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further question?

Mr. BLACK. I have not the floor, but I shall be glad to answer the question, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. MURPHY. Is it the Senator's idea that a tenant farmer, under this bill should operate a commercially profitable farm, or is it merely the idea to provide a homestead for him and a small patch of ground where he can raise stuff for his table?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly I should want the farm to be a commercially profitable farm, but I should not want it to be so large that the farmer could transform himself from a tenant into an employer of 50 tenant farmers on land he had bought from the Government. That is my position. I have no objection to the farm being commercially profitable, and if it were not commercially profitable it would be a failure.

Mr. MURPHY. I desire to say to the Senator that the representation put forth in support of this bill by its proponents is that it will relieve tenancy. The percentage of tenancy in my State, as an approximation for the present year is 53 percent. In order to operate a farm commercially on a profitable basis, one would need a very minimum of 160 acres if he had a family. That land today is selling on the market for from $75 to $225 an acre. If this bill is going to relieve the tenantry situation in my State, it will involve a large expenditure of money for each individual tenant. If it is not going to reach him, it will reach only those who can buy farms in areas where farm lands are cheap.

I should like to know whether the objective here is to relieve the greatest number of tenants in the particular sections of the country where farm lands are cheap, or to reach out and relieve tenantry in States where farm lands are expensive.

Mr. BLACK. My idea is that the bill is intended to reach tenantry in every State in the Union but the objection I have to placing in the bill a limitation of $15,000 is that to buy a small farm it might be necessary, as the Senator says, to pay $10,000 or $12,000 or some similar amount in one section of the country; but if we place in the bill a limitation in dollars such as this, it would seem to be a permissive invitation to spend $15,000 on a farm where $15,000 is not needed.

The bill as it is written has the flexibility which is necessary, in my judgment, properly to administer it so that it may fit every section of the country. If in one section, at the prevailing rate for farm land, a small farm would cost $10,000, and if in another section a small farm would cost $3,000, the administrators would go on that basis; but I do not want a standing invitation in the bill, by reason of the limitation of the amount, to go into a section where land may be cheap and purchase a great deal more land than the individual may need for a farm.

Mr. MURPHY. The Senator has covered my question.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield, my view about the matter is that a limitation of $15,000 is too high. If we are going to buy a farm for a tenant, whether in Illinois or not, we ought not to loan Government money to the extent of $15,000. A smaller farm, one on which a man, if he could get it on the right terms, could make a living in Illinois or Iowa, could be obtained for less than that.

I think the amount should be limited in the bill. I do not agree with the Senator from Alabama that we should leave it unlimited, and leave it entirely up to the discretion of some person in the Department to specify just what shall be done in different parts of a State or the country. There ought to be some top limit. I hope there will be some limitation; I think it will be very disastrous if we do not so provide, because we may have a good administrator today, but we may have a foolish administrator tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have an amendment providing a limit of $3,000.

Mr. WHEELER. I think a $3,000 limit in many places would be all right; but in many other sections of the country, particularly in Illinois and Iowa, of which the Senator speaks, I think a $3,000 limit would be too low.

Mr. BAILEY. Suppose we give the tenant $3,000 for his land and $2,000 for working capital: How would that work? Should he not have some working capital?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; he should have some working capital.

Mr. BAILEY. Otherwise, how would a tenant start out?

Mr. WHEELER. I am not at all sure that in the high-priced areas of Iowa and Illinois land and substantial equipment could be purchased for $3,000. I would rather have the opinions of the Senators from Iowa and Illinois with reference to that matter; but I am in favor of putting a top limitation in the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Senator does favor an amendment that would give the farmers working capital?

Mr. WHEELER. Absolutely. I think they should have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the view of the Senator from Montana on that subject, because I have no opposition to the proposal. I should like to have his ideas about what would be a reasonable limit that would be flexible.

Mr. WHEELER. My own view about the matter is that we should not go above $10,000. I think that is plenty high enough. If a tenant farmer can have $10,000 spent for him in the best sections of the country, he is a pretty lucky man to be started out in that way. As a matter of fact, if it could be worked out in Iowa and Illinois and those sections, I think even if he were limited to a lower amount than that, even to $7,500, I think we would be doing a great deal for that class of people, and I think they would be immensely pleased. I do not want to see the matter left to someone in the Department, and have some man go out and buy a big ranch in my State for fifteen or twenty thousand dollars and say that that is necessary in order to make a living on it; and I do not want to see some speculator in Illinois or Iowa go out and purchase big tracts of land for some of these people. Some limitation should be placed upon the amount. If that is not done, in my judgment, we shall have a scandal in connection with the matter in one of the departments. In order to safeguard this bill for the benefit of the people, I think it is extremely important that some reasonable limitation shall be placed in it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I agree entirely with the Senator from Montana, that some limit or roof ought to be placed on this provision. I doubt if a tenant farmer, distressed as he is in these times, could ever hope to pay for a $10,000 farm. It seems to me to lie beyond the range of possibility, no matter where the land is situated. That hope is fatuous. I should like to know if the Senator from Montana does not share that view.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana has stepped out of the Chamber.

Mr. GORE. I addressed my question to him. I did not know he had left the Chamber.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, when emphasis is put upon the limitation on the small individual farm, I call attention to the fact that subsection (3) on page 8 is not a limitation on the authority of subsection (5) on the same page.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). The Senator from Iowa has spoken on this amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire whether that amendment is subject to an amendment, or would that be an amendment in the third degree?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; an amendment to the amendment would be in order.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out the figures "$15,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000." I have not the amendment before me, and I do not know the context, but I desire to amend it so that it will read "$5,000." I ask to have the amendment to the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 19, after the word "contracts" and before the period, the pending amendment proposes to insert a comma and the words:

but no sale shall be made to one purchaser in excess of $15,000.

It is now proposed to strike out "$15,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. KING. I yield for a question.

Mr. DICKINSON. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah would limit the bill to what might be called "the cheap-land area." It would confer no benefits in what are known as the "highly cultivated areas." It could not possibly benefit those who deal with what may be called "high-priced vegetable lands" that are in small areas.

I have gone through the bill in an effort to find a way by which it could be limited according to acreage. That is not possible because of the different types of land in the various sections of the country.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I have the floor. I do not desire to yield for a speech by the Senator from Iowa. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he does not think that problem can be solved in this way:

I hold in my hand a census bulletin which indicates the average size of the farms in each State in the Union; and I have prepared an amendment which provides that no land sold to an individual tenant in pursuance of this measure shall exceed the average acreage of farms in the State in which the farm is located. That is adapted to what has been worked out as an actual result of experience, necessity, and effort to make a living. It is, in a way, an automatic limitation, and certainly is the result of experience, better than any guess we might make. I should like to have the Senator's view on that subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa which authorizes the purchase of land for each beneficiary under the act up to $15,000. Under the terms of the bill the amount paid for the land is not the entire amount which is to be advanced to the so-called "tenant purchaser." Several thousand dollars will be made available as working capital from which farming equipment and animals will be purchased. It is manifest, therefore, that at least $20,000 will be the amount authorized to be expended in behalf of each person taking advantage of the provisions of this measure. Obviously a billion dollars will be wholly inadequate to meet the demand of the tenant farmers in the United States; indeed, billions of dollars will be required.

Mr. President, I doubt whether Senators appreciate the consequences of this bill, if it shall be enacted into law. They do not, in my opinion, understand its implications and the results which will follow, and perhaps the unsavory scandals which will arise in its administration. Under the bill a new bureau is created, and we already have scores of powerful bureaus, largely controlling the Government, as well as many of the activities of the people. The cost of Government is mounting, and the creation of new bureaus, with their enlarged personnel, will make additional demands upon the Treasury of the United States to be met ultimately by increasing the burdens of taxation resting upon the people.

Mr. President, measures similar to this have been attempted in various countries, but they have not met with success. It has been contended by some that the area devoted to agriculture has been too large, the number of farms too many and, of course, the number of persons engaged in farming in excess of all legitimate demands. During the past few years I have visited a number of States, among them New York, and learned that many tracts of land, which had been devoted to agricultural purposes, could be purchased from seven to ten and fifteen dollars per acre. Undoubtedly many farmers have attempted to cultivate more lands than they could efficiently control, and portions of their holdings were in many cases permitted to lie idle.

The present Secretary of Agriculture has attempted to restrict production for the purpose of increasing agricultural prices. It is not my purpose to examine the policy which he has pursued or which he is now advocating. I am of the opinion, however, that this policy has worked to the disadvantage of our country and injury to the farmers.

But recurring to the amendment under consideration. As I stated, I believe that it is unwise to provide for the expenditure of so large a sum as that contemplated by the amendment, and, for that reason, I am suggesting that the limit for the price of lands for individuals shall not exceed $5,000. Even with that limitation, plus the amount which the bill provides may be expended for ancillary purposes, will total a sum greatly in excess of that anticipated by some and, indeed, so great as to arouse concern as to its effects upon the Treasury and its effects upon those who may insist upon availing themselves of the terms of the bill before us.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have voted against every amendment that has been offered to the pending bill which is sponsored by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. As a matter of fact, I expect to support the bill; I am going to vote for it; but I am thoroughly in accord with the remarks which have just been made by my distinguished friend from Utah [Mr. KING], for the reasons which I shall attempt to set forth.

The amount that is to be appropriated if the bill shall pass, and I believe it will pass, is going to be sufficient to take care only of a certain number of people. It is our idea at this time, to provide by the bill for as many of the unfortunate people in the United States as we possibly can. Perhaps it will help and perhaps it will not, but nevertheless, I am going to vote for it because, in my opinion, in many instances, it will be helpful. But I believe with the Senator from Utah, that we shall unquestionably make a mistake if we permit those who administer the act, the corporation which will have charge of its funds, to make loans to the extent of $15,000 per individual.

We are so thoroughly accustomed to speaking in terms of millions and billions that we have lost track of a mere pittance of a thousand dollars; but we must remember that even at this hour and during these times $15,000 is a large sum of money, and that $15,000 will buy much land.

I desire to give Senators an idea as to what could be bought with a small amount of money. I was over in the State of Maryland the other day, the home of my distinguished colleagues, Senator TYDINGS and Senator RADCLIFFE. Twenty-five miles from the place upon which I now stand, and along a modern concrete highway, in a splendid section of the State of Maryland, I was offered 1,800 acres of land at $7 an acre. Think of that, 30 minutes from the Capital of the world, land for $7 an acre?

Is it swamp land? Can it be cultivated? If it is cultivated, will it produce anything material? It will. I went out there to look at the land, because a friend of mine had expressed a desire to buy a place near Washington, and he wrote me about this place. I went over and looked at the land, and I found there a gentleman in the field, and not far distant there was an old tobacco barn. I drove over there with this man. He had been raising tobacco. He had a nice garden. It is land on which crops can be produced, and it is offered at $7 an acre.

I say that I think this bill is good; at least, I am willing to have it tried. Shortly after the war, as Senators will remember, and as a matter of fact before the war, in my State, and particularly at the time when we were having what might be called a "textile boom" throughout the South, at a time when many of the plants were moving from the New England States to my State of North Carolina, to our sister State of South Carolina, and to our sister State of Georgia, thousands upon thousands of people who were working on farms as day laborers, thousands upon thousands who were tenant farmers, and many who had little farms, left their farms and went to Greenville, S. C., to Spartanburg, S. C., to Charlotte, N. C., to Newton, N. C., to Greensboro, N. C., and to Gastonia, N. C., which latter city, incidentally, is today the seat of the world's textile industry, I believe, since the Japanese have taken the business away from the Manchester mills of England. I am personally familiar with many instances where people went from their farms and took their children to work in the cotton mills, where the farmers themselves and their wives worked in the mills. That has been many years ago, and those living on farms have continued to leave the farms and go to the industrial centers.

There are in this country today in the industrial centers thousands upon thousands of single men, and married men with families, who are suffering because they have to pay house rent, which requires cash money every month; they have to pay for their heat, in the form of cash for coal and for wood when it is delivered at the door; they have to pay for their light, electric light or gas, or else they have no electric or gas light; they have to pay the water rent, or the water will be cut off; and every single particle of food they buy they have to pay cash for, because in this country, unfortunately, there is no longer the independent merchant who extends credit to those living within his trade confines.

So, Mr. President, many of those who now live in the industrial center, whether it be in New York, New Orleans, or Gastonia, N. C., are unfortunate because they have to pay cash for everything, and they have not the cash. They have to pay cash for the roof that keeps the rain from their heads; they have to pay cash for the fuel which they use to cook their food; they have to pay cash for the water they drink; they have to pay cash for the food they buy.

I think one of the finest things about the proposed legislation is that it would provide the opportunity being sought by those thousands upon thousands of people who during the years past have gone from the farms into the industrial centers. Such individuals are found everywhere in the State of every Senator who now sits on this floor.

What is that opportunity, Mr. President? It is an opportunity to live, and to live fairly comfortably—at least to exist. Give a man an opportunity to buy some land, $5,000 worth, and he will have an opportunity to live.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is making a very moving appeal, and I believe he is telling the truth about the industrial workers of the country. I suggest that he present an amendment providing that we build homes for them.

Mr. REYNOLDS. This bill provides for the acquisition of homes by people, even though living in industrial centers, who have had experience in farming. That experience is required by the bill sponsored by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BAILEY. That is a provision of the bill; but why does not the Senator from North Carolina offer an amendment providing for building homes for industrial workers?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say again, in answer to my colleague's inquiry, that the bill provides that loans may be made to people who have worked on the farm and who are now working on the farm whenever opportunity is presented. If I correctly recall the language of the bill, it provides that loans may be made only to those who have had experience in farming, and I believe the word "recently" is employed. I ask my colleague the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the author of this bill, if that is not correct? I have only skimmed through the bill. I have not had time to read it thoroughly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator to repeat his question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is my recollection of the bill that before an applicant will be considered for a loan it is necessary, of course, that he shall have had farming experience.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I went on to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from North Carolina has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have 15 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Why do I say that the bill applies to farmers, Mr. President? In answer to the inquiry directed to me by my colleague, I will say that those who have been going to industrial centers for years have been seeking an opportunity to get away from the industrial centers. They are wise in seeking to do that, for this reason: We have today about 15,000,000 unemployed persons; and this country, above all others in the world, will ever be faced with the problem of some unemployment. Why? Because we have machinized America. We can today put in one machine which will take the place of fifty or a hundred men. As a result of the inventions that are being perfected from day to day and year to year, we are eliminating the workers of the land and bringing about increased unemployment; and you may take it from me, if I may be permitted to use the every-day street parlance, that from now on we are always going to be faced in greater or less degree with unemployment.

Let us take the position of the man now living in an industrial center who has been a farmer. If we lend him $5,000, and that $5,000 is invested wisely, he buys himself land. He can build himself a little 2- or 3-room house. A man who is hard up and hungry and ragged is satisfied with anything to keep the cold from his body and the rain from his head, and his stomach filled with some good old greens and fat meat. What can he do? Why, with $5,000 he can buy as much land as any one man himself can till.

It is not the intent of this bill to buy property sufficient in area to permit the owner thereof to tenant-farm it out. That is what we are now endeavoring to get rid of. We are trying to get rid of the tenant farmer by giving an opportunity to a man to take care of himself, whether he be a present tenant farmer or whether he formerly tilled the land as a tenant farmer or as a farmer owner and went to an industrial center. Such a man is going to be in good shape to farm. With $5,000 he can buy himself 40 or 50 acres of land. He can build a little three-room house. That is all he needs. He can use one room to cook in, another for sleeping quarters. He has a spring outside. He goes out there and takes with him the old gourd and fills it from the spring. He does not have to pay any water rent. He has his own house, and does not have to pay any house rent. He puts the axe on his shoulder, and steps over there to his little patch of wood and cuts down his fuel. He does not have to pay for any coal, or wood, or gas heat. He buys himself a good, old, kind-faced cow, and he milks her, or his wife milks her. He gets the milk, and makes therefrom his butter, and he gets cream, and skim milk; and with that skim milk he can feed some little pigs. He raises his pork, and buys no bacon. So he has bacon, his butter, his cream, his milk, his buttermilk; and there is nothing on earth better for a man to line his stomach with than greens from his garden and buttermilk from a good cow. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, in this bill we are not trying to take care of anybody who wants to spend $15,000. Give any man $5,000, and buy him therewith land, with a stream or a spring on it, and a little pasture and a patch of woods, and build him a cabin, and he has no expense. He has the advantage of the white-collar fellow who is living in the city. Why? Because the white-collar fellow who is living in the city has to spend all the money he can get to keep a clean collar and a clean shirt on himself and keep looking half-way decent. If he does not, he cannot get a job. Otherwise he will look like a failure. The fellow out in the country does not have to dress up. He has a good, clean place to sleep. He has good things to eat.

Any Senator who has ever done any gardening or farming, as has my friend the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who is a neighbor of mine, knows that from 1 acre of land, intensively cultivated, a man can raise enough produce to feed a family of five. He can raise good fresh vegetables, spring onions, radishes, turnips, everything in the springtime, and then come along the nice, tender ears of corn; and there is nothing that anybody likes any better to stick his teeth into than that. That is living.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do not forget watermelon.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I forgot the watermelon, Mr. President. I am glad my friend the senior Senator from Arkansas suggested watermelon. I like watermelon. We all like watermelon, and cantaloups.

Mr. President, give those people that opportunity, and any man who has a family of children and a wife, and who wants to take care of them, if he will put his muscles to the wheel, can do it, because, as I started to say, a man can raise enough on 1 acre, if he intensively cultivates that acre, to keep his family with fresh vegetables in the spring and raise enough to live on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's argument is altogether the most interesting argument made in favor of the bill. However, I wonder what would happen if, when such a man as he describes went out to feed his little pig, he found that the pig had been killed under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say in answer to the Senator from Idaho that I am sure that the owner of that property, if he had a home at the time the order was given to kill 6,000,000 little pigs—was it not 6,000,000 that were slaughtered?—would have been heart-broken. I think little pigs are the cutest things on earth. [Laughter.] I remember that when I was a small boy I learned something about "one little pig went to market", and I have seen pictures of them from time to time. I know that man would have been heart-broken. I believe the time of the destruction of the pig is past, because pork has gone so high, as the Senator from Idaho knows, that the poor man cannot eat pork any more; so, therefore, we are proposing to give the poor man an opportunity to eat only that which the rich man now can afford to eat. We are proposing to give him $5,000 with part of which he can buy 2 little pigs, and from those 2 little pigs—well, "pigs is pigs"! [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that is the opportunity presented to these people. The trouble with the farmers of this country, if I may be permitted to venture this statement, is that they have tried to cultivate too much land. It would have been better had they concentrated upon less land. We helped farmers on 500 acres in South Carolina, some on a thousand acres, and on ranches in the Western States, beyond the Mississippi River, and plantations with thousands upon thousands of acres.

Many Senators have visited Japan. Many have toured China and the countries of continental Europe. A big farm in Japan is no more than a couple of acres. A 5-acre farm is a rarity. It is a question of concentrating upon that, and giving people an opportunity to raise their greens, their beets, their milk.

By the way, Mr. President, I forgot the chickens. [Laughter.] With half a dozen hens and a rooster or two, a man can have plenty of eggs, fried chicken, and all that sort of thing. We are aiding those people who are seeking an opportunity to take care of themselves, Mr. President, and to make a living for their families. We are not seeking in this bill an opportunity to take care of those who want to spend a lot of the Government's money. The interest upon $15,000 is a great deal of money. They will have to pay that interest. If they do not pay it they will lose the farm. So why entice a man to borrow $15,000? Six percent interest on $5,000 is $300 a year, which is $25 a month. He can surely make $25 a month by producing commodities or seeking work in the neighborhood and in adjoining sections.

I want to thank the Senator from Utah for his remarks, which inspired that which I have had to say, and it will be a pleasure for me to vote for his amendment, which proposes to limit the amount which may be expended in any one case to $5,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, as I understand, the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Before the Senate shall vote on that amendment I should like to say that I think it would be unfortunate to develop a controversy among the friends of the bill as to the limitations to be provided by the bill. It is conceded that in some sections one limit may be entirely adequate, while such a limit would not be adequate in certain States in the Middle West.

I have a formula here which I hope will be acceptable to all Senators. It seems to cover this question in a fair and reasonable way and to avoid, so far as possible, any abuses in connection with the price to be paid for a farm or the size of the farm. I think we all recognize that no absolute formula may be set out in the statute either as a limit on the exact amount to be loaned or as to the exact size of the farm, for the very simple reason that farming conditions vary in different sections of the country and the value of farm lands likewise varies. It is my ardent hope, as I have frequently stated, that this bill, if it shall become a law, shall have national application.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. KING. If $15,000 shall be the maximum to be fixed as a limit for the purchase of land, then, as I understand the terms of the bill, homes are also to be constructed, and, furthermore, the Government must furnish the borrower with necessary capital, horses, cattle, and all the paraphernalia incident to the development of a farm, the result of which would be that a man might find himself in a position where his operations would cost $15,000, $20,000, or $25,000 before he would be in a position to go forward with the development of the farm. Obviously, if we are fixing a limit so great as that——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator will not take my time while I am endeavoring to make a statement.

Mr. KING. Very well, I will not interrupt the Senator further.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, I recognize that a very great number of farms could not be purchased at such a price, but I am going to read the formula which I have prepared, with a view of asking the Senate to vote down the amendment of the Senator from Utah, and then to accept what I shall propose as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. I suggest that the Senator send the amendment to the desk and have it read.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I have no objection to that. I am simply trying to make an adjustment that will be reasonable and at the same time will afford protection so far as this phase of the program is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

> The Corporation shall limit the loan made to any purchaser to an amount that will provide a family-size farm in the section or area where the farm is located, not to exceed in cost the price of property of similar size and value in the same section or area.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I showed the amendment to the Senator from Iowa, but I do not know that he has had time to analyze it. However, it will be noted that this amendment limits the farm which may be purchased to a family-size farm, which means one sufficient in area to be operated by the immediate family without employing tenants or laborers.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON. I hope the Senator will pardon my ignorance, but I do not quite grasp the significance of the words "a family-size farm." How large is such a farm?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It depends upon what is being planted, whether wheat or vegetables. It is a farm that is properly adjusted to the work of the immediate members of the family, whatever they may be producing.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does it depend upon the size of the family?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, the size of the farm would naturally depend upon the size of the family for whom the farm is being bought or who are being given credit. The proposal would limit the size so as to avoid any excessive acreage or the purchase of large farms for the purpose of employing laborers or tenants or others in order to work it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not care to yield, Mr. President. I will yield later. The amendment would confine the program to an area that fits the family and is also adapted to the type of farming in which the family may be engaged, so that there will be some latitude in adjusting matters, for instance, to the wheat-producing sections as compared to the cotton-producing regions or vegetable-growing areas or trucking or fruit sections. The amendment is suggested in the hope that there may be some degree of flexibility and at the same time that reasonable restrictions and limitations may be imposed on the size of the farm and the amount to be paid for it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I do not think a "family size" farm really proposes a proper standard. I think by the Senator's own admission a flexibility that would vary the size of the farm with the size of the family and the needs of the family would afford almost no standard at all. Would the Senator object to striking out the words "family-size farm" and inserting "It shall be limited to the average-sized farm in the States where the land purchased is located as determined by the Federal Census of 1930"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would have no objection to that, because I think the Senator sees what I am trying to accomplish.

Mr. GORE. That would fix a standard which has been worked out by actual experience.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well. Has the Senator the exact language of the amendment?

Mr. GORE. I will prepare that. It is not the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as amended.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have an amendment which will probably to some extent be dispensed with by the amendment to the amendment which was just adopted. As I understand, the last vote was on the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] was adopted.

Mr. GORE. I will offer my amendment as a substitute for the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as amended. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

> Loans and advances made hereunder to any one person seeking to avail himself of the provisions of this act shall in no case exceed in the aggregate $3,200; nor shall the land sold to any person in pursuance of this act exceed in acreage the average farm in the State where such land is located, as determined by the Federal census taken in 1930; nor shall the purchase price of such land when so sold be in any case in excess of $160 per acre, nor in excess of twice the assessed value of such land for the purposes of taxation in the year 1934, if then assessed for taxation, nor in excess of 50 percent above the price at which such land was sold, if sold at private sale since 1929, or the value at which it was mortgaged if mortgaged since said year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] as amended.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the interpretation of the amendment may be clear to the Senator from Oklahoma, but I confess inability to understand the situation. I suggest that the Senator explain his amendment. Particularly I should want to be informed with reference to the amount of money which may be loaned in order to purchase a farm and the size of the farm.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there are several points involved in this standard. The first relates to the amount which may be advanced by the Corporation for all purposes, including lands, buildings, equipment, supplies, and all other items which may be supplied under the pending bill.

In view of the action of the Senate a moment ago in adopting the amendment of the Senator from Utah making the amount $5,000, I may modify my amendment; but I will proceed to explain it.

The first provision is that the aggregate amount of the loans and advances shall not exceed $3,200. That limitation may be too small.

The second provision is that the acreage in any one case shall not exceed the size of an average farm in the State where the land is located, as determined by the Federal census of 1930. The Census Bureau in a bulletin which I have here reports the average-size farm in each and every State in the Union. That is the result of actual economic conditions, the struggle for existence; and I think it provides the most suitable standard for the limitation of the size. The Senator from Alabama indicated a moment ago that this standard with respect to this particular point would not be objectionable to him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not say the amendment "would not be objectionable"; I referred to the Senator's description of it.

Mr. GORE. The amendment had not then been offered; I was not trying to commit the Senator on that point.

The next provision is that the price of the land shall not exceed $160 an acre. It occurred to me that there might be localities in the vicinity of cities or large markets where the land would be more valuable than in remoter sections. Of course, that would be true; but there ought to be a limitation even as to that. Where we, as a government, are undertaking to set people up in business, it ought to be on some sort of rational standard, and there should be some sort of rational limitation. It occurred to me that a limitation of $160 an acre would not be out of alinement. I do not want the gate left wide open so that scandal may creep in. We ought to safeguard the administration of the act against that possibility.

One or two other standards are fixed. It is provided that no higher price shall be paid in any one case for land than twice the amount for which it was assessed for taxation purposes last year. That would be a protection to the administrative officers, those who shall be charged with the purchase of the land. They will be subjected to all sorts of pressure. Some of them might yield to pressure. I should like to fix a limit, if not to the pressure at least a boundary to the extent to which they can yield to such pressure. The owners of farms and lands who have rendered them for taxation in their own States under the laws of their States have made the rendition under oath, and when they receive twice that amount or if we allow the corporation to pay twice the assessed valuation, it seems to me that is latitude enough. It would provide an essential safeguard.

There is another limitation that no price shall be paid in excess of 50 percent over and above the price at which the land has sold since the depression came upon us. If the land has sold since the panic of 1929 for $100 an acre, this would allow it to sell for $150 an acre. It provides an outer boundary which would safeguard the administrative office and the Treasury of the United States against abuse.

There is another limitation that if the property, instead of having been sold, has been mortgaged since the depression of 1929, then the same limitation shall apply, that the purchase price shall not exceed 50 percent over and above the value of the mortgage on the land.

I believe these would provide not unreasonable safeguards, although the different points are subject to discussion, and, for that matter, correction. My paramount point is to fix limits and standards for the guidance of administrative officers which shall protect them and shall protect the good name of the Congress.

I was anxious for the bill to be recommitted, because I had in mind one or two instances which I thought ought to be investigated before we took a final vote. The transactions may be entirely innocent. I refer to a project down in Mississippi County, Ark., where 23,000 acres have been bought by the State rehabilitation administrator, I believe, from two or three owners. My information is that the State administrator was at one time in the employ of one of the landowners from whom some of these purchases were made. The plan is to erect 700 houses on this land. They already have a store and post office on it. I believe the average acreage is about 40 acres. It is cotton land, suitable for the raising of long-staple cotton, and that may be one reason for the limitation on the acreage.

I know of an instance in Texas where 1,700 acres were purchased from one owner. I have heard suggestions about that transaction which I thought it would be wise to investigate now. The investigation, I thought, might enable us to erect additional safeguards in this legislation.

Of course, I think this legislation will change—perhaps I would not be justified in saying destroy and break down the entire social and economic structure of the South. If human society was a mechanism instead of an organism, if human society was mechanical, if human beings were automatons instead of being creatures possessed of instincts and passions, then a provision of this sort might be made to work. It may turn out to be a nightmare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as amended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think it is very doubtful whether we should adopt the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma. It has not been printed and has not been fully considered. He has proposed various standards for fixing values, such as tax assessment, private sales of property, and many other handicaps and limitations which ought not to cover the proper appraisement and valuation of the property which is to be bought. It makes a change also in the amount which the Senate just fixed as a limitation. For these and other reasons I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], as amended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, because of the absence of the author of the amendment I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	King	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Couzens	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Cutting	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McGill	Shipstead
Bilbo	Dieterich	McKellar	Smith
Black	Donahey	McNary	Steiwer
Bone	Duffy	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	Minton	Townsend
Brown	Frazier	Moore	Trammell
Bulkley	Gerry	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Gibson	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Glass	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Gore	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Guffey	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Hale	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Harrison	Pittman	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	Pope	White
Clark	Hayden	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], as amended.

Mr. DICKINSON. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] intends to present his amendment a little later. Will it be in order then?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That depends on what happens to the other amendments.

Mr. GORE. The amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] relates to value. The Senator from Alabama has offered an amendment which relates to the size of the farm, which, I think, ought to be in the amendment as well as the limitation on value.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment ready to offer if the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is not offered.

Mr. GORE. Mine has been rejected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well; I offer that amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Senator from Alabama offering this amendment as a substitute for my amendment as amended?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I am offering it as an addition to the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It becomes, then, an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GORE. If the clerk may read the phrase relating to family-size farms, I shall try to state my amendment. I have not had a chance to reduce it to writing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. As an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. BANKHEAD offers the following amendment:

> The Corporation shall limit the loan made to any purchaser to an amount that will provide a family-size farm in the section or area where the farm is located, not to exceed in cost the price of property of similar size and value in the same section or area.

Mr. GORE. Now I wish to offer this amendment to that amendment:

> To be limited in area to the size of an average farm in the State where the land is located, as determined by the Federal census of 1930.

I offer that as a substitute for the phrase "family-size farm."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will accept that in place of the phrase "family-size farm."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama accepts the proposal of the Senator from Oklahoma as a modification of his amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; making it the average-size farm as shown by the census of 1930.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let us have the amendment read as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification of the Senator from Alabama has not been reduced to writing. It will be read by the Official Reporter.

The Official Reporter read as follows:

> To be limited in area to the size of an average farm in the State where the land is located, as determined by the Federal census of 1930.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer that as a substitute for the pending amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does that carry with it the limitation as to cost?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is in the amendment; not in dollars and cents.

Mr. KING. There is no limitation, then, in dollars and cents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], as amended.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the amendment of the Senator from Iowa is that loans shall be limited to $5,000. Am I correct as to that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The amendment was so amended.

Mr. BLACK. That is the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Utah?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. And we are now to choose between a limitation of $5,000 and the amendment offered by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The Senate is now voting on the substitute amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], as modified.

Mr. BLACK. He has offered a substitute amendment which, if adopted, would do away with the limitation of $5,000 in the original amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I rise to support the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

If this measure is to be drawn in such terms that its benefits can be extended to all sections of the country, with varying types of agricultural pursuits, and with varying situations so far as the value of land is concerned, it seems to me the substitute amendment is very much preferable to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], especially since the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] reducing the amount from $15,000 to $5,000 has been agreed to.

It is very plausible to urge that limitations should be placed upon either the size of the farms which are to be provided or the amount of money which is to be expended upon them; but Senators will readily realize that the difference in the various kinds of agricultural pursuits which are carried on in the respective States creates very different situations, both insofar as the size of an economic farm unit is concerned, and also insofar as the value of the land which may be purchased is concerned.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah would prevent the establishment of any successful farms for those who are designed to be benefited under the terms of this measure so far as my own State is concerned. I am sure this situation does not prevail in my own State alone, but relates to many other States in the Mississippi Valley and in the West where larger-sized farms are required if they are to be successful farm units.

The substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, it seems to me, is a clear direction to the Corporation and its directors to confine the operation of the Corporation to the establishment of farms no larger than the average size of the farms in the respective States where these farms are to be provided. I therefore believe that the substitute amendment, with the suggestion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], meets the desires of those Senators who wish to be certain that the farms set up under this act shall be of an average size no larger than those prevailing in the several States, and it also makes certain that the bill will not be confined to any particular section. The amendment will assure that the measure will be national in scope, which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the author of the bill, and others who have supported it, have emphasized again and again was their primary objective.

I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the modified amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] for the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], as amended.

The modified amendment, in the nature of a substitute, to the amendment as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended, and it was signed by the Vice President.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment I sent to the desk a few minutes ago may be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, between lines 18 and 19, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

(f) Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize the corporation to make a loan to any corporation for the purpose of purchasing real property, to sell or otherwise dispose of any real property or interest therein owned or held by the corporation to any other corporation, or to enter into any contract or agreement with any other corporation with respect to the acquisition by it of any real property or interest therein.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, having talked with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], in charge of the bill, I understand that he is willing to accept the proposed amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I think it is a proper interpretation of the bill. I am entirely willing to have the amendment inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 9, line 22, before the period, it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following: "but the Corporation shall not approve any application for the benefits of this act if it finds that the income of the applicant derived from farm property owned by him is sufficient to support his family and to pay the expenses of operating such property and the fixed charges on his indebtedness in connection with such property."

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, this amendment is not intended to apply where there are farmers who have small acreage, not sufficient to maintain themselves and their families and to pay their fixed charges, and by reason of that fact are required to rent additional land. The object of the amendment is merely to provide that loans shall not be made to anyone who is operating a farm owned by him that is sufficiently large and is producing enough to maintain himself and his family and to pay his fixed charges. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Alabama is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am willing to accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, on page 3, line 8, after the word "board", to add the words "with the approval of the President", so that as amended it would read:

The Corporation shall have capital stock in the amount of $50,000,000, and the board, with the approval of the President, is authorized to increase such capital stock from time to time in such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to have the amendment incorporated in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, to insert at the proper place the following provision:

The privileges of this act relative to the purchase of farm lands and equipment for farming shall be given equally to all applicants for said privileges who do not own homes or farms.

Mr. President, I can state the intent of the amendment in a word. There are today a great many people in the metropolitan districts of the country, and particularly in industrial centers, who, prior to moving to the cities, had experience in farming, and who are now desirous of embracing an opportunity to return to the land. As I understand, the applications under the pending measure will have to be passed upon by those selected by the Corporation, and there is nothing in the pending measure to force them to make a loan or to reject an application.

If those applying have not had experience sufficient to enable them to conduct a farm, by way of tilling the soil and raising produce, of course their applications should be turned down, because those who would have charge of approving the applications certainly would not make a loan to a man who had lived in a city all his life, and who knew nothing about tilling the soil or cultivating land.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this amendment conflicts with the sections on this subject contained in the original measure. The amendment would make any person, regardless of previous occupation or employment, eligible for the purchase of one of the homes contemplated to be furnished, and that is fundamentally inconsistent with the purpose of the bill, which is to help secure small farm homes for farmers.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is also in conflict with the provision found in paragraph (b), on page 9, which gives preference to persons who are married, who have dependent families, and who are of good moral character, as well as to those who are experienced in farming, and so forth.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It furthermore broadens and enlarges the eligibility, covering everybody in the cities. I do not think the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the author of the bill, and also of our leader the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], as to whether or not, under their interpretation of the bill, individuals who have had farming experience, but who a number of years ago went to industrial centers, would have the opportunity of getting loans.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think so; but they would not necessarily be on a plane of equality with others, and under the Senator's amendment they would be placed on an equality. The Corporation or its agents would be denied the right to give preference to persons who are married, persons who have dependent families, and persons who are of good moral character.

It is perfectly clear to me that it is not every person who might seek to procure these homes who would be able to do so. There are some persons who may have had in times gone by experience in farming who could not make a success of any farm homestead they might receive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the information of the Senator from Arkansas, the Chair will state that the provision as to good moral character has been stricken out.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but there is still in the bill provision for giving preference to persons who are married and who have dependent families. I doubt whether there is wisdom in the elimination that was made in that paragraph.

The Senator's amendment, as I heard it when it was read—as I understand—would require that equal opportunity be given to every person who had had any experience in farming.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I was merely seeking opportunity for those who formerly had had experience in farming, and who had gone to industrial centers.

I am perfectly satisfied with the explanation which has been given by the Senator from Arkansas when he says that his interpretation of the measure would be that if a man had had experience sufficient to enable him to cultivate successfully a piece of land, he would be entitled to a loan, and no doubt those taking the applications would take into consideration his qualifications. That being the case, I am perfectly satisfied with the explanation given by the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Alabama, the author of the bill, and I shall therefore withdraw my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the author of the bill a few questions. First, I should like to ask whether the bill provides for a permanent governmental activity and bureau, in contradistinction to an emergency activity.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is not essentially an emergency program.

Mr. WALSH. Then I should like to know why the usual laws relating to Civil Service and the classification of employees are not made to apply to the corporation to be set up, the same as they apply to every other permanent governmental agency of the Federal Government?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator would call permanent agencies. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation may be just as permanent as the corporation proposed to be set up under the pending measure. The text of the pending bill is copied from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act.

Mr. WALSH. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was to have a limited period of existence, and was about to expire, until we continued it for another limited period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We all know it will continue for a long, long time. Besides, most of the work to be done in connection with the pending bill is of a different type from the usual work of a clerical and accounting nature.

Mr. WALSH. One of the difficulties that has grown up as a result of the emergency bureaus which have been established is that we find officials receiving higher salaries than are paid officials in the regular permanent departments of the Government doing exactly the same work. Attorneys receive thousands of dollars in some of these emergency departments in excess of attorneys in the permanent organizations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are limitations in the pending bill.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; the limit is $10,000, which is the salary of the directors of the corporation. No salary can be in excess of that sum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But it seems to me that in a department such as that to be set up we ought to make applicable at least the Classification Act, which requires that the same salaries shall be paid for the same classes of work being performed. I know stenographers in some emergency bureaus who are paid much larger salaries than those under the Classification Act.

For these reasons, I offer the following amendment: On page 6, line 20, to strike out the words "without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment or compensation of officers, employees, attorneys, or agents of the United States" and to insert the following words: "within the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended", so that, as amended, the section would read:

> The Corporation shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation of such officers, employees, attorneys, or agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this act within the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator to state that it was his intention to offer an amendment which would simply protect the rate of wages. Unless I misunderstood that amendment it would go farther.

Mr. WALSH. Yes, I do. I intended to offer both.

Mr. BLACK. This amendment, then, would even require the employment of attorneys under Civil Service.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Mr. President, can there be any objection to putting the employees in this branch of the Federal Government on the same salary basis and under the same civil-service laws that employees of every other department of the Government are under, including the employees in the Post Office Department and other departments?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that attorneys, for instance, in the Federal land bank are under civil service. It seems to me the Senator has proposed an all-embracing amendment which goes further than a great many people believe that civil service has satisfactorily worked.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that a similar provision was incorporated in the Securities Exchange Act, though certain "experts and attorneys" were exempted. I believe some such a term was used in the act. It has been ruled that even attorneys and experts must take civil-service examinations, and they have been given civil-service examinations and they have been selected under those examinations. Not all examinations have been competitive. Some have been noncompetitive. But as a matter of fact practically every person being employed in the Securities Exchange Commission is under civil service, and we incorporated that in the law of last year. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment, and if it is necessary in conference to remove attorneys, or a certain class of attorneys from the provisions of the measure, that can be done. I do not care to make the provision any different from any other statute dealing with a permanent commission operating in the Federal Government. I simply desire the same principle and the same theories to be applied to this as to all other permanent departments of the Government.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that I have always supported the civil service. I supported the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, which, in my judgment, provided a better method, perhaps, than provided by the civil service. I do not believe that selection of attorneys through the civil service brings the best attorneys to the service of the Government. I do not believe it has been successful. I think it has been unsuccessful. I do not think the same reasoning applies to the selection of attorneys and experts of that type which would apply to people working in a clerical capacity.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator agree to this amendment if I except attorneys?

Mr. BLACK. May I state to the Senator that my colleague has charge of this bill. I was expressing my individual opinion with reference to that part of the civil service.

Mr. WALSH. I ask the same question of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. The point in my mind is whether the type of service to be performed in the field requires that type of employees which should come under civil service. I do not object to civil-service examinations in the case of those employed in the offices in Washington. However, people such as the Extension Service agents are not under civil service. Employees of that kind, who will contribute in large measure to the aid and health of the people, as well as appraisers of the land, are not under civil service.

Mr. WALSH. Under the bill as drafted, not a single clerk, not a stenographer, not a single employee needs to take a civil-service examination or meet the requirements of the civil service or the Classification Act. I venture to say this Department will be the only, or one of the very few, departments of the Federal Government where that situation exists.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. My attention was distracted for a moment, and I did not hear the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I wish the Senator to know why I am presenting the amendment. As the bill reads there is no obligation for civil-service examination in the case of a single employee.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator offered an amendment?

Mr. WALSH. I have offered an amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Has it been read?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I have not read the amendment, but I concede that an amendment relating to the civil service ought to be adopted and put into this bill. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator in his effort. I am not familiar with the form of the amendment. I have not read it. It seems to me an amendment could be presented which would be superior to what is ordinarily known as a "civil-service amendment."

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is, I take it, all-embracing.

Mr. NORRIS. I heard the Senator talking about an examination which would have to be had. The civil service gives two kinds of examinations. There is a competitive examination and a noncompetitive. I agree in the main with what the Senator from Alabama has said, that the ordinary civil-service examination will not reach a class of people such as attorneys, but a noncompetitive examination will. And that could be very well applied to attorneys—to everybody. I cannot conceive of the case of anyone where it would not be well to have a noncompetitive examination, an investigation. It would mean an investigation as to a man's character, his honesty, and his ability.

Mr. WALSH. As a matter of fact, that is just what is being done in connection with the employees of the Securities Exchange Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. And that is what ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that ought to be done.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will remember that last session we were attempting to create two labor boards, one dealing with railroads and one for industry in general. In one case there was no provision in the bill for civil service and in the other there was, and yet they were dealing with practically the same subject. The Senator will recall that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] rose in his seat and called attention to the fact that there were assistants to the cabinet officers who were getting much less salaries than assistants doing comparable work in other departments of the Government, because they were not under the same classification provisions, which should apply to all Government employees.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Civil Service has held that a man 45 years of age cannot qualify in some cases. There is some regulation about age; but as a matter of fact, some of the best lawyers I know are over 50 years.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think in a noncompetitive examination that question would be considered. If there is any doubt about it, let us put an exception in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is some rule about age, I believe. Some people are better equipped after they have reached 45.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Florida and myself are both young men, and this measure does not, of course, apply to us, but we are pointing out what ought to be considered by older Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] accept my amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson	Reynolds
Ashurst	Coolidge	Keyes	Robinson
Austin	Copeland	King	Russell
Bachman	Costigan	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Couzens	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bankhead	Cutting	Lonergan	Sheppard
Barbour	Dickinson	McGill	Shipstead
Bilbo	Dieterich	McKellar	Smith
Black	Donahey	McNary	Steiwer
Bone	Duffy	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Fletcher	Minton	Townsend
Brown	Frazier	Moore	Trammell
Bulkley	Gerry	Murphy	Truman
Bulow	Gibson	Murray	Tydings
Burke	Glass	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrd	Gore	Norris	Van Nuys
Byrnes	Guffey	Nye	Wagner
Capper	Hale	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Harrison	Pittman	Wheeler
Carey	Hatch	Pope	White
Clark	Hayden	Radcliffe

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Massachusetts. I am willing to have the amendment go into the bill, with the clear understanding with the Senator and others interested that in the event the bill shall pass the House and reach the conference stage, the amendment will be worked over so as to try to meet the real objections to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I do not want to have any understanding on the amendment. If we are not going to have the amendment adopted, let us say so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not propose to reject the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not even read it. I did not hear it read, as I said. It relates to a very important subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am trying to reconcile the matter to meet the views of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I understand the question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to make another inquiry. It is only for the purpose of perfecting the bill. I should like to inquire what, if any, provision there is in the bill giving any information to anyone, the President or Congress, in reference to the amount of money spent, to whom the money is paid, the number of employees, or other record of the proceedings of the Corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no such provision in the bill. I do not know of any other measure which has ever contained any such provision.

Mr. WALSH. Then I desire to offer the following amendment: On page 7, after line 14, insert the following:

The Corporation shall at the close of each fiscal year make a report in writing to Congress stating in detail its activities, the names, salaries, and duties of all employees and officers in the employ of or under the supervision of the Corporation, and an account of all moneys it has disbursed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there are one or two clarifying amendments which I wish to offer. I send the first one to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 14, after the word "relief", insert the word "appropriation", so as to make the sentence read:

Such original capital stock may be subscribed for by the President on behalf of the United States, and payments for such subscriptions may be made from any sums appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I offer another amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 19, after the word "contracts", insert the following:

The Corporation may lease any farm which has been repossessed by it, pending a resale of said farm.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "acquired and held by the Corporation, or", and in line 3, after the word "Corporation", insert the words "notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation", so as to make the subparagraph read:

Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property held by any purchasers from the Corporation, notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 8, line 5, to strike out the word "and" before the word "facilities", and after the word "facilities" to insert the words, "and to assist the beneficiaries of this act in the organization of cooperatives."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send forward three amendments to which the Senator from Alabama has informed me he has no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 2, it is proposed to strike out the words "small individual", so as to make the sentence read:

To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of farms and farm homes"—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 5, it is proposed to change the period to a comma and to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any such individual farm shall be of such size and fertility and so stocked and equipped as to reasonably indicate returns which will permit the occupants thereof to repay any obligations incurred by them for the purchase thereof, and to maintain a decent standard of living.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 8, after the word "Corporation", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That if he shall have first given the Corporation 60 days' notice of his intention to sell and convey said property, and unless the corporation, within such 60-day period, does not purchase such property at a price equal to the appraised value thereof, as established by an independent appraisal, such sale shall not be prohibited hereby.

And in lines 9 and 10, to strike out the words "such written consent" and insert the words "complying with the foregoing requirements", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. No purchasers of property from the Corporation shall, so long as the purchase price is not paid in full, without the written consent of the Corporation, sell, lease, transfer, assign, or convey any such property included in a contract of sale by the Corporation or in a mortgage to the Corporation: Provided, That if he shall have first given the corporation 60 days' notice of his intention to sell and convey said property, and unless the Corporation, within such 60-day period, does not purchase such property at a price equal to the appraised value thereof, as established by an independent appraisal, such sale shall not be prohibited hereby.

If any sale, lease, transfer, assignment, or conveyance of any such property is made without complying with the foregoing requirements, or if any property is abandoned, the Corporation may declare all unpaid installments of principal and interest (accrued or to accrue) to be immediately due and payable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments are agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, due to occupation on committee work and conference work, I have been unable to hear a great deal of the debate on the pending bill, but from such of the discussion as that I have heard I derive the impression that the Government may in some event become the owner of these farms. I should like to ask if that is so.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that the bill provides for the creation of a Government corporation to buy the farms, and then provides for foreclosure, in which event the Government's corporation again becomes the owner. That the farms are to be purchased by a Government corporation does not alter the fact that the Government takes them as owner.

Mr. GLASS. If that be so—and I hear no protest against that interpretation of the bill—it seems to me the bill is clearly in conflict with the express provision of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, which prohibits the Government of the United States from acquiring by purchase any property in any State without the specific consent of the legislature of the State. If in fact this is a Government corporation—and I assume it is, because the Government subscribes its capital, and the Government is made responsible for its indebtedness, both principal and interest—how are we to get around that provision of the Constitution, I should like to know?

I am not a lawyer; but I know perfectly well that the Government of the United States is not authorized to acquire, even by the exercise of eminent domain, a foot of ground in any State except by consent of the legislature of the State.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Federal land bank is a corporation which, while originally created in the nature of a private corporation, is more or less in the nature of a governmental corporation. It owns a great deal of land. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is a corporation for which the money was supplied by the Government, and it will necessarily acquire in the process of its business a great amount of land.

I do not mention that as bearing on the question of constitutionality of this measure, except to state that in my judgment the same rule would apply to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. GLASS. The same rule may apply to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act may be unconstitutional; and the fact that we have passed one unconstitutional act does not justify the passage of another.

As to land banks, the land banks are not owned by the Government. The Government is in no way or degree responsible for either the principal or the interest of the bonds of the land banks, so that is an entirely different matter.

I do not profess to know either the Constitution or the law; but, if I have any sense at all, it seems to me the bill is in plain violation of the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred.

I have been asked by several Senators about the section to which I refer. It is section 8 of article I of the Constitution. The Government could not even acquire the site of this Capitol except by cession from the States. The reason why I seem to have some knowledge about this matter is that more than 40 years ago, before the State of Virginia, by general statute, had authorized the Federal Government to exercise the right of eminent domain in that commonwealth, in the matter of buildings for public purposes, there had to be a special act of the legislature to authorize the Government to buy a plot of ground in my town on which to build a post office.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I take it that the section to which the Senator from Virginia refers—part of article I, section 8—is as follows:

> The Congress shall have power * * *
> To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority—

That is, legislation—

> over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings; and
> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers. * * *

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, what has the Senator to say in explanation of that? He merely read the section.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the section explains itself.

Mr. GLASS. I think so, too.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the section does not require the consent of the legislature for the Federal Government to acquire title to lands in a State. The provision authorizes exclusive legislative jurisdiction in the Federal Government in territory that may be ceded by the States for the purpose of a National Capital. That is a very different thing from the mere acquisition of title to land. The Federal Government purchases land almost every day as sites for public buildings and for other purposes, and usually there is no requirement that the consent of the States be granted for the acquisition of title in such cases.

That is point no. 1.

The section of the Constitution to which the Senator refers does not, except as to the exercise of exclusive legislative power, require cessions by a State of areas within the State, and it is a distinctly different case from where the Federal Government, or someone for the Federal Government, merely acquires title. It is not proposed that the Federal Government shall exercise exclusive or other legislative jurisdiction over the lands that may be bought by this Corporation. On the contrary, there is an express provision of the bill that it shall not do so. The legislative jurisdiction remains in the State.

So the question resolves itself into a very simple one—whether the Federal Government, or a corporation created by the Federal Government, may buy land within a State without the consent of the State legislature. There is nothing in the Federal Constitution which expressly requires the consent of the State legislatures except in the case where it is proposed that the Federal Government shall exercise exclusive legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, as to the Senator's first point, I am quite confident that if he will make due inquiry he will find that the Federal Government cannot acquire a foot of ground in any State, even by the right of eminent domain, without the consent of the State. If he will make inquiry of the Supervising Architect's office, he will find that no post-office site is ever acquired without the express consent of the legislature of the State in which it is proposed to erect the post office.

As to the second suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, as stated in the beginning of my brief remarks, I have not read the bill closely or followed the discussion closely; but it seems to me we are proposing to exercise exclusive Federal jurisdiction over these farm lands, so that in default the Federal Government through its corporation, which is the Federal Government, may go in and foreclose and take possession of the farm lands.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. If I am in order, I will take just a moment to reply to what the Senator from Virginia says.

Section 7, subdivision (a), on page 11, expressly provides:

> The jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall not be changed by reason of such acquisition: Provided, however, That this section shall not be deemed to affect the jurisdiction of the United States to punish offenses against the United States—

And so forth.

I merely point that out as indicative of the fact that the bill does not violate the spirit or language of that section of the Constitution referred to by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. Is not that very section in contravention of this section of the Constitution, which provides that the Government shall have exclusive jurisdiction over lands purchased with the consent of the legislature?

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; it is not in contravention of it. I thought I made clear before that the requirement that the legislatures of the States shall cede the territory or give consent to the acquisition of title to lands is dependent upon the provision that the Federal Government designs to exercise exclusive legislative jurisdiction over the lands.

There is a plain reason for it. If that were not required, we would have the Federal Government exercising legislative jurisdiction over lands within a State without the consent of the State, violating the sovereignty of the State; but when the Federal Government acts as a mere proprietor and acquires lands for its purposes, unless there is permission or consent from the legislature, the Federal Government cannot exercise legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, at this very time there is an issue in Virginia. The State, through its legislature, authorized the Federal Government to acquire what is known as the "Shenandoah Valley Park" by gift from the State and the individual subscribers to the fund, and some of the tenants in the Shenandoah Valley district have evinced an unwillingness to have their lands condemned, and the matter is being contested in the courts now as to the right of the Federal Government to condemn these particular tracts, except for public purposes. I think the case has no standing; but I have certainly been under the impression for forty-odd years that the Federal Government is prohibited from acquiring a foot of territory in any State without the consent of the State.

If, as has been repeatedly asserted on the floor of the Senate, the Federal Government may, under the terms of the pending bill, become a great owner of farm lands, it seems to me it is in contravention of the provision of the Constitution which I have stated.

Of course, it is not expected that a simple layman can follow the abstruse definitions of the law as lawyers may do, but, notwithstanding the great legal accomplishments of the Senator from Arkansas, I am still of the opinion that the United States Government has no right to own farms.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in accord with the conclusion of the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that this proposed legislation is in conflict with any right the people of this country vested in Congress.

It is not necessary to point out any particular provision of the Constitution of the United States to which a proposed act runs counter, in order to know definitely that it is without our authority to enact it. So it is with this particular measure pending, if it should become a law. It seems to me that the whole effect of the Constitution is against the theory of the Federal Government reaching over the boundary of any State and undertaking to become a proprietor, in a business sense, of any of the lands of that sovereign State.

The power to enact legislation is not equal in greatness to the power to become the sole proprietor of the soil of the State. It is extremely obnoxious to me to think of the Congress of the United States enabling the Federal Government to go into any State which is a part of this Union and acquire by purchase a greater power than the people of this country vested in the Congress by the Constitution.

Of course, one can point out the only part of the Federal Constitution which deals with this subject at all and see at once that the sole place in the Federal Constitution wherein authority was given to the Federal Congress is that part of article 4 which has been heretofore referred to by the Senator from Iowa. That is the only place where will be found any power given to the Federal Congress by the people of the United States of America with respect to the land, the territory of the United States, and that is strictly limited to land held by virtue of the cessions by the several States to the Federal Government, and no construction that is reasonable can extend that power to the acquisition of new land from private individuals by purchase and the subsequent dealing in that land as a landlord engaged in agriculture.

It has been said that perhaps this is not the Federal Government doing this thing, because we are creating a corporation, and that we have had the example of the Federal land bank doing something similar. The two instances are not at all parallel, and they are not at all alike. The Federal land bank is a private corporation; it is not an instrumentality of government.

The proposed corporation is intended and expected to be an instrumentality of government, an instrumentality by which the United States steps within the boundary of every State and undertakes to become a landlord, a farmer, a tiller of the soil.

If we shall pass this bill, we will have taken the greatest step yet taken—and we have taken several of them—toward the Russianization of the United States of America. We are now, as we have been several times before, confronted with the choice between adhering to the American theory of government and adopting the Russian theory of government. The form need not be exactly the same, but it is the principle of collectivism, the principle of putting the great central government, with all its powers, into competition with the individual, the gradual exclusion and crowding out of the individual from private enterprise, and now the intrusion of the Federal Government into ownership of the land, actual management of the land; for this bill provides that the Federal Government may manage that land.

Here we have a step which goes to the very root of our social and economic system. I insist that it is entirely in conflict with the spirit of the Constitution and that there is no authority in the Constitution for the Federal Congress to take the step. If there is no authority given by the Constitution to take it, it is unconstitutional, because the Federal Government has only those powers which are delegated to it. They are supposed to be limited to the government of affairs which are national in scope, and the Government should keep away from the government of affairs which are local.

For this reason, and for others, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the sovereign may own land in two or three different characters or capacities. The sovereign may own land as a sovereign and may own land as a proprietor; and it may also own land both as sovereign and as proprietor.

The United States owns the site upon which this building is constructed both as sovereign and as proprietor. I think I may illustrate further. In Oklahoma, prior to our admission into the Union, the public domain was, of course, owned by the United States. The public domain in the Territory of Oklahoma was owned by the United States both as sovereign and as proprietor; but the moment Oklahoma was admitted into the Union the United States no longer owned the public domain in its character as sovereign. It owned that land only in the character of proprietor.

A State may own land in still a different capacity or character. It owns the bed of navigable streams, it holds the land in trust as a sovereign, but it does not own the land in fee.

The United States can acquire land in its character as a sovereign only by and with the consent of the State in which the land is located. The United States can also acquire land by condemnation, in which instance, as I understand, it owns the land as a proprietor and not as a sovereign. It can acquire land by condemnation only for public use, not for private use. I am not at all certain that the United States has any right or power to acquire land for private use—to buy and sell land for private use. In what section of the Constitution does that power reside? If the United States can buy and sell land for private use and private purposes, are there any restraints upon its powers, upon its omnipotence, other than the express prohibition set forth in the Constitution, and the conservatism, the conscience, or the caprice of Congress?

Mr. President, as I remember, Pharaoh, under the guidance of his prime minister Joseph—who seemed to be a sole corporation in that instance—acquired all the land in Egypt, and in acquiring the land acquired the sovereignty not only of the soil but of the souls of the people. The people were enslaved. They bartered land and liberty alike for bread. I doubt if the United States can acquire land for any other than public purposes. When the United States acquires land by condemnation it must be for public use. I doubt seriously whether the United States can be a mere land trafficker or peddler, and buy or sell land for one purpose or another unconnected with its character and functions as a sovereign. Some States go so far, and, I think, wisely, as to prohibit corporations from owning land except what is necessary to the conduct of the business for which they were chartered, and to which they are restricted.

I was interested a moment ago in the allusion to the Constitution of the United States. I myself have some respect and, I might say, some reverence for antiques. Not long ago I had a request for a souvenir of Washington, and I sent my inquiring friend a copy of the Constitution of the United States of America.

I now wish to have read into the RECORD several extracts from a speech or two made by Hon. John T. Morgan, of Alabama, once a leading and distinguished Member of this body:

How are the mighty fallen and the weapons of war perished!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From p. 2597 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 4, 1884]

Mr. MORGAN. * * * Mr. President, when I was elected a Senator from Alabama it never occurred to me or to any member of the legislature who did me the honor to vote for me or to the people of that State, or, I suppose, to anybody, that one part of my mission here was to raise school funds to educate the people of my State, no more than that I was to come here and get supplies for the insane hospital, for the institution for the deaf, dumb, and blind, or for the poorhouses of the respective counties, or for the improvement of the common roads of the country, or any other subject that might relate to the general welfare of my people. We have got a constitution in my State and a legislature elected under it, and in that legislature may be found men of equal ability with any who are here or have been here from my State upon the floor of either of these Houses. Limited powers are prescribed to them in the constitution, but ample power is given on the subject of public education; plenary power is given to them almost on that subject. Encouragement is expressed in the constitution itself for this great purpose, and those legislators are designated as persons who by law must measure out the proper quantum of relief and assistance to public schools there. It never occurred to me that I had come here for the purpose of raising funds by begging or by legislating for the purpose of building up schools in my State. I have not come here as a mendicant apostle of a propaganda in Alabama that requires money to be begged out of gentlemen of the North to sustain and support us in those industries and enterprises and duties which we ought to perform for ourselves.

[From p. 2598 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 4, 1884]

Sir, you may search with all the anxiety possible, and you will find no word in the Constitution that relates to public charity, to public benevolence, to public education, to insane asylums, or deaf-and-dumb institutions, or to public roads, except post roads—no hint of it. If it had been the intention of our fathers, who then had written constitutions in their respective States, to have placed within the jurisdiction of Congress power to touch questions of this kind, either by the appropriation of money or by the taxation of the people or by legislative expedients, would there not have been some man found who in the Convention would at least have made such a suggestion?

Sir, there was not a man who ever arose on the floor of that Convention and hinted at the idea that the subject of public education was one of the subjects that they intended or expected to entrust to Congress; and in the absence of all expression on this subject, and while the State governments had made in their constitutions express and ample provision for the exercise of these particular powers by those State governments, are we to infer that our fathers were so blind and so indifferent in respect to the powers to be conferred upon this new and limited Government as that they should never refer to it by a word in the Constitution to indicate the thought or by the expression of a single suggestion in the Convention which framed the Constitution that the general welfare for which Congress was to provide by taxation included the support of common schools in the States?

[From p. 2633 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 5, 1884]

In May 1874 there was an overflow that occurred in my State on the Tombigbee or the Black Warrior River, a small, narrow stream whose bottom lands were not very extensive; and as soon as it was understood that some plantations had been inundated and some stock swept off, the Members of Congress then represented or claiming to represent that State brought in a bill to appropriate, I believe it was $400,000, for the relief of the people who had been overflowed by the Tombigbee and the Warrior Rivers, and the bill was passed. The general welfare of the whole State of Alabama and of the United States was a sufficient plea in apology for giving $400,000 at that time for the overflowed people in that portion of my State. The money was authorized to be expended in bacon and in flour and other food for human consumption. It was so expended. The overflow had passed away before the bill passed Congress and new crops were growing upon the land that Congress was providing for before the bill was signed by the President. Nevertheless the $400,000 went into public distribution in the State of Alabama; and it was distributed in the next October and November elections upon the highest points of the Sand Mountains throughout a large region of country where the people wanted what was called in that country "overflow bacon."

I cannot get that picture out of my mind. There was the general welfare of the people invoked and with success to justify this political fraud; the money was voted, and the bacon was bought, and the politicians went around with their greasy hands and distributed it to the men who cast greasier ballots that they could not read, and in that way the general welfare was promoted. Men got rations of bacon to cast ballots that they could not read through the broad benevolence and the wonderful healing power of our acts of usurpation under what we call the general-welfare clause, and which has been aptly termed here "the blanket clause" of the Constitution; the clause that, in the name of the general welfare, is a safe cover for inequities, as charity is a convenient mantle for other sins.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask to have published in the RECORD at this point the statement of Mr. Madison, which appears on page 2632 of the RECORD from which the clerk has been reading.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MADISON. It is proposed by some gentlemen that Congress have authority not only to grant bounties in the sense here used, merely as a commutation for drawback, but even to grant them under a power by virtue of which they may do anything which they may think conducive to the general welfare. This, sir, in my mind raises the important and fundamental question whether the general terms which have been cited are to be considered as a sort of caption or general description of the specified powers, and as having no further meaning and giving no further powers than what is found in that specification, or as an abstract and indefinite delegation of power extending to all cases whatever; to all such at least as will admit the application of money, which is giving as much latitude as any government could well desire.

I, sir, have always conceived—I believed those who proposed the Constitution conceived—it is still more fully known and more material to observe that those who ratified the Constitution conceived that this is not an indefinite government, deriving its powers from the general terms prefixed to the specified powers, but a limited government, tied down to the specified powers, which explain and define the general terms.

It is to be recollected that the terms "common defense and general welfare" as here used are not novel terms first introduced into this Constitution. They are terms familiar in their construction and well known to the people of America. They are repeatedly found in the old Articles of Confederation, where, although they are susceptible of as great a latitude as can be given them by the context here, it was never supposed or pretended that they conveyed any such powers as are now assigned to them. On the contrary, it was always considered clear and certain that the old Congress was limited to the enumerated powers, and that the enumeration limited and explained the general terms. I ask the gentlemen themselves, whether it was ever supposed or suspected that the old Congress could give away the money of the States in bounties to encourage agriculture, or for any other purpose they pleased. If such a power had been possessed by anybody, it would have been much less impotent, or have borne a very different character from that universally ascribed to it.

The novel idea now annexed to those terms and never before entertained by the friends or enemies of the Government will have a further consequence, which cannot have been taken into the view of the gentleman. Their construction would not only give Congress the complete legislative power I have stated; it would do more, it would supersede all the restrictions understood at present to lie in their power with respect to a judiciary. It would put it in the power of Congress to establish courts throughout the United States, with cognizance of suits between citizen and citizen, and in all cases whatsoever.

This, sir, seems to be demonstrable, for if the clause in question really authorizes Congress to do whatever they think fit, provided it be for the general welfare, of which they are to judge, and money can be applied to it, Congress must have power to create and support a judiciary establishment without a jurisdiction extending to all cases, favorable in their opinion to the general welfare, in the same manner as they have power to pass laws and apply money providing in any other way for the general welfare. I shall be reminded, perhaps, that according to the terms of the Constitution the judicial power is to extend to certain cases only, not to all cases. But this circumstance can have no effect in the argument, it being presupposed by the gentlemen that the specification of certain objects does not limit the import of the general terms. Taking these terms as an abstract and indefinite grant of power, they comprise all the objects of legislative regulations, as well such as fall under the judiciary article in the Constitution as those falling immediately under the legislative article, and if the partial enumeration of objects in the legislative article does not, as these gentlemen contend, limit the general power, neither will it be limited by the partial enumeration of objects in the judiciary article.

There are consequences, sir, still more extensive which, as they follow clearly from the doctrine combated, must either be admitted or the doctrine must be given up. If Congress can employ money indefinitely to the general welfare, and are the sole and supreme judges of the general welfare, they may take the care of religion into their own hands; they may appoint teachers in every State, county, and parish and pay them out of their Public Treasury; they may take into their own hands the education of children, establishing in like manner schools throughout the Union; they may assume the provision for the poor; they may undertake the regulation of all roads other than post roads; in short, everything from the highest object of State legislation down to the most minute object of police would be thrown under the power of Congress; for every object I have mentioned would admit of the application of money and might be called, if Congress pleased, provisions for the general welfare.

The language held in various discussions of this House is a proof that the doctrine in question was never entertained by this body. Arguments wherever the subject would permit have constantly been drawn from the peculiar nature of this Government as limited to certain enumerated powers instead of extending, like other governments, to all cases not particularly excepted. In a very late instance—I mean the debate on the representation bill—it must be remembered that an argument much used, particularly by gentlemen from Massachusetts, against the ratio of 1 for 30,000, was that this Government was unlike the State governments, which had an indefinite variety of objects within their power; that it had a small number of objects only to attend to, and, therefore, that a smaller number of Representatives would be sufficient to administer it.

Arguments have been advanced to show that because, in the regulation of trade, indirect and eventual encouragement is given to manufacturers, therefore Congress have power to give money in direct bounties, or to grant it in any other way that would answer the same purpose. But surely, sir, there is a great and obvious difference, which it cannot be necessary to enlarge upon. A duty laid on imported implements of husbandry would, in its operation, be an indirect tax on exported produce; but will anyone say that by virtue of a mere power to lay duties on imports, Congress might go directly to the produce or implements of agriculture or to the articles exported? It is true duties on exports are expressly prohibited; but if there were no article forbidding them, a power directly to tax exports could never be deduced from a power to tax imports, although such a power might indirectly and incidentally affect exports.

In short, sir, without going further into the subject, which I should not have here touched at all but for the reasons already mentioned, I venture to declare it as my opinion that were the power of Congress to be established in the latitude contended for, it would subvert the very foundations and transmute the very nature of the limited government established by the people of America, and what inferences might be drawn or what consequences ensue from such a step it is incumbent on us all to consider.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, the bill came to the Senate containing a provision the effect of which would be to make taxable the lands held by the corporation. As I understand the bill, it contemplates acquisition of title to a considerable area of land and subsequently the sale, under contract by the corporation, of tracts of such land to the persons in whom the title finally would vest.

By an amendment adopted a little while ago on page 12, line 2, the words "acquired and held by the corporation or" were stricken from the bill so that the provision now is in effect that the land held by the purchasers from the corporation shall not be exempt from taxation. A further effect would be that the land held by the corporation would be exempted from taxation.

It occurs to me this is an improvident amendment and that the bill might better have been left as it came to the Senate so that the lands held by the corporation would be subject to taxation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will look at the top of page 6, he will see that the real and personal property held by the corporation is exempt from taxation. I have prepared an amendment to strike that out so the lands and real property of the corporation shall be taxable. In other words, the two provisions were contradictory as contained in the original text.

Mr. STEIWER. I think that is true. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the amendment of the Senator from Virginia. I wanted to make the point that the land ought not to be exempt from taxation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator referred to an amendment which makes subject to taxation the farms which are sold, notwithstanding the title remains in the Government.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator contend that because of the other amendment making the property of the corporation subject to taxation the elimination of the language in line 2, page 12, does not disturb that status of the land, and that it still remains subject to taxation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is the purpose of the amendment in the latter section to make it subject to taxation where it is held by the purchaser, but not the property of the corporation, such as its headquarters. Where the purchaser holds the property, it is made subject to taxation.

Mr. STEIWER. I had understood that perfectly, but I had been of the impression that if the land were held by the corporation it would not be subject to taxation. Does the Senator from Alabama agree to that statement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would but for the amendment to which the Senator referred. The amendment provides that it shall be subject to taxation notwithstanding the title still remains in the corporation.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator refer to the amendment of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; to the amendment which I offered today.

Mr. STEIWER. It is that to which I am inviting attention. As I understood the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, it resulted in striking out, on page 12, line 2, the words "acquired and held by the corporation, or." Is there any other amendment which has been offered during the day which would affect the status of the land so far as its being subject to taxation is concerned?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not all of the amendment. The language further is that—

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt from taxation any real property bought by any purchaser from the corporation, notwithstanding the title still remains in the corporation.

That is about the way it reads now; that nothing in the bill shall be construed to exempt such property from taxation.

Mr. STEIWER. Does the Senator contend that property which is held by title in the corporation is subject to taxation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If a purchaser has bought the farm, the purchaser is then liable to taxation, nothwithstanding title has not passed out of the corporation.

Mr. STEIWER. I think I am in agreement with the Senator. If the purchaser has not bought the farm, then the land would not be subject to taxation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it would not be. The provision in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act is identical with this provision. I see no reason for the Government paying taxes on its own land. It is not contemplated that it is going to hold much land. Certainly the purchasers are subject to taxation.

Mr. STEIWER. I wish to suggest to the Senate that when the United States goes into the landlord business, when it acquires property to be held for the purpose of resale to the ultimate owner, it may have a result which is not contemplated by those who are furthering the legislation.

Within the last year and a half, I believe, the United States has acquired title to something like 15,000,000 acres of land under the guise of acquiring the land for subsistence homesteads. Through the agency of the Federal emergency-relief organization, through the Department of Agriculture, and certain other activities of the Government, the United States has acquired and taken off the tax rolls an area which is said to exceed one-third the size of the State of Maine. The process of acquisition is still going on. Now it is proposed to implement a Federal agency with authority to acquire title to further land and to provide $1,000,000,000 with which the United States may acquire title to this land and remove it from the tax rolls so long as that title shall be vested in the corporation.

I do not know that any great harm will come to the States, because in the area within the boundary of any one State the amount of the land acquired might be relatively small; but if we regard the situation in a particular county or a particular school district, it is easy to understand that the acquisition by the Federal Government will remove from the tax roll and take away from the tax base possibly 25 or 50 or 75 percent of all the land in that particular school district; and that result will be had without regard to the commitments of that district, the bond obligations outstanding in that district, or in the county which is being affected in the way I have pointed out. Therefore, the effort of the United States in acquiring this land and making itself a landlord will result in the destruction of these subordinate governmental agencies.

I do not see who would want that kind of result to be accomplished. In my State more than 50 percent of all the area is presently federally controlled and off the tax roll. In the State of Nevada, I think, something like 80 percent of all the area is off the tax roll. There are counties in the State of Oregon where 60 to 80 percent of the entire area is off the tax roll. The Government now is acquiring land at a rather rapid pace, and, as I said a little while ago, has acquired an area equivalent to one-third of the State of Maine and taken that off the tax roll. Now it is proposed to extend that effect still further by authorizing an agency in a time of distressed ownership to take a billion dollars and acquire a great body of land and take it off the tax roll, to the utter destruction of school districts and of counties in this country.

It seems to me that the amendment to which I have referred was improper, and that we ought to have permitted the language to stand as the bill came to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have great confidence in the judgment of the Senator from Oregon. Would it not be necessary also to amend the provision at the top of page 6, because that specifically exempts from taxation property held by the corporation? In other words, we cannot leave the bill as it is, because there is a conflict between these two provisions.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I think the Senator from Virginia is quite right; but in order to get a test of the question I was about to move, first, the reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment on page 12 was adopted. If that should develop a sentiment in favor of the taxation of this land, then the further amendment could be offered with respect to page 6.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not understand the idea. Does the Senator from Oregon object to making the purchaser pay taxes on the land?

Mr. STEIWER. Oh, no; there is no objection to making the purchaser pay taxes on the land.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the object of the amendment which the Senator is moving to reconsider.

Mr. STEIWER. The effect of the amendment in line 2, page 12, unless I am wholly mistaken in my understanding of it, is to relieve the land from taxation while this title is in the corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; that is where the Senator is in error. The title may remain in the corporation for many years. The effect of the amendment is, not withstanding the title is in the corporation, that the purchaser is liable for the taxes.

Mr. STEIWER. Does not the first part of subsection (b), as written in the bill, read that—

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; as it was originally, it read "any real property * * * held by the corporation." Now, as amended, it reads "any real property * * * held by any purchaser from the corporation." In other words, any land bought from the corporation is not exempt from taxes. Therefore, it is subject to taxes. The purchaser of each farm is liable for taxes whether the title passes to the purchaser or whether, under the amortization plan, it remains in the corporation.

Mr. STEIWER. There is no difference between the Senator from Alabama and myself as to the construction of that language.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood there was.

Mr. STEIWER. The effect of it is to make land subject to taxation after it has been sold to the purchaser.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. STEIWER. I am suggesting that it ought to be subject to taxation at all times, even though the title rests in the corporation.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would not the Senator accomplish his purpose by amending the provision at the top of page 6? That is where the specific exemption occurs for real and personal property held by the corporation. I have an amendment to that effect pending on the desk.

Mr. STEIWER. Is the Senator now prepared to offer that amendment?

Mr. BYRD. It is on the desk. It has been pending for some time.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator is prepared to offer that amendment, I ask that he do so first, and let me give further consideration to the necessity of reconsideration of the language on page 12. I will yield to the Senator for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment on page 10, in paragraph (d), has not been acted upon. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I now ask to have my amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, lines 1, 2, and 3, it is proposed to strike out:

> The corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, its loans and income, and its real and personal property shall likewise be exempt from such taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senate is soon to vote upon the measure under consideration. I have been in attendance upon other committees during most of the consideration of the bill and am not familiar with all the arguments which have been adduced in its favor and the basis of opposition to the same. However, an examination of the bill has convinced me that it is not only unconstitutional, but that it is unsound as an economic or political measure and will bring great disappointment and, indeed, serious consequences. I think it is a most unfortunate and, indeed, a dangerous measure—unfortunate in the expectations which will be aroused and the disappointments which will ensue. It will be exploited by the great bureaucratic forces that will be called upon to administer it and will introduce a disturbing element into our agricultural and economic life. Undoubtedly there will be a Nation-wide propaganda carried forward by those directly and indirectly employed in its administration for the purpose of popularizing it. As a result, as I have indicated, a large number of individuals will expect to avail themselves of its promised advantages and will sooner or later have their hopes and expectations shattered by the stern realities which they will have encountered.

In my opinion, this measure may not be defended upon constitutional grounds, and it is saturated with socialistic, or at least paternalistic, qualities foreign to democratic ideals and the concepts of the founders of this Republic.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has just caused to be read excerpts from addresses delivered by one of the great Democratic statesmen of the South, Senator Morgan. May I add that as a boy I learned, in part at least, Democracy from Morgan and Vest and George, and other great statesmen from the South. They carried the Democratic standard and maintained Democratic ideals and traditions. They maintained, against the assaults of reactionaries and those who attempted to concentrate power and authority in the Federal Government not granted to it by the Constitution, the principles annunciated by Jefferson and expounded by Madison and others whose names will live as long as this Republic endures.

Undoubtedly there have been powerful centralizing forces operating throughout the land, and the Democratic Party has not been free from their dangerous and destructive influence. As I interpret some of the policies of the Democratic Party, I cannot help but believe Democratic institutions are being subjected to a severe test and the Constitution of the United States to a menacing danger.

It is contended by some that we are now tending toward socialism, or a totalitarian form of government, in which the powers of the States will be lost. But yesterday I read the statement of a professor that this Republic was headed toward a powerful centralized authority which might lead to corporative state or to a modified Nazi form of government. Undoubtedly socialistic forces are finding support in some parts of our country. No one can deny that there are strong elements seeking to undermine the States and to transfer authority which under the Constitution is theirs, to a powerful Federal Government. In my opinion, the fathers of the Republic never contemplated that the National Government would exercise the authority which it has asserted, nor that the States would be weakened, if not devitalized, to the extent which we now witness.

I cannot help but believe that there are influences at work at variance with the principles of the Democratic Party, which if unrestrained will modify the form of Government established by the fathers and jeopardize Democratic institutions. Senators know that great historians have expressed the view that Democratic institutions could not long survive; that centripetal forces would become so powerful as to undermine and destroy democratic forms of government.

It was my purpose, in rising, only to express my profound regret that we should have a measure of this character and to announce that because of its infirmities and its unsound and dangerous tendencies, I would feel constrained to vote against it.

May I add, before taking my seat, that in my opinion the seeds of this measure were, in part at least, provided and sown by the Department of Agriculture under the administration of the present Secretary of that Department. In my opinion the policy pursued with respect to cotton, and for that matter wheat and hogs, was not founded upon any sound or rational policy. Some persons urged the adoption of a policy with respect to cotton, which resulted in reducing production, pegging prices and which, in its operations, has contributed to the creation of tenant farmers, or at least to the unsatisfactory agricultural condition in the cotton States.

It seems to me that no one can defend a policy that destroys property when millions throughout the world are hungry and lacking in clothing and the necessities of life. The destruction of crops and livestock was the destruction of capital, and capital is essential to progress and prosperity. Some of the policies which have been adopted have restricted our exports, and limit not only internal but external trade. What is needed today is greater production, the creation of additional capital, and the opening of domestic and foreign markets.

This is not an auspicious time for increasing bureaus and procuring greater regimentation, and interposing obstacles to legitimate trade and commerce.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party is on trial. It is the repository of the great principles of justice and liberty bequeathed to us by the fathers. It is to be hoped that nothing shall be done to imperil democratic principles or the triumph of the Democratic Party.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments to be offered——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, there are some further amendments to be offered. I wish first to call up the amendment by which I undertake to substitute one hundred million for one thousand million dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to discuss the constitutionality of the measure, but I shall merely make a short statement for the RECORD.

I agree with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I thought it was well known that in the enumeration of powers under which Congress operates and the Government lives there was no power to purchase real estate. If anyone has ever found anything in the Constitution authorizing the Government to buy real estate, I should be glad to have him show it to me.

On the particular point at issue, the Government is authorized to purchase not to exceed 10 square miles to be placed under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Congress, and even in that purchase the land must be acquired by the cession of the particular States. It is further authorized to purchase places for the erection of magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings, but even then with the consent of the States.

The clear implication is that if it is necessary to obtain the consent of the States in order to buy needful sites for Government buildings, it certainly would be necessary to have the consent of the States to purchase sites for unnecessary buildings or for the purchase of unnecessary sites. But that is not the real meaning. The real meaning is that the Government cannot buy land except for the necessary purposes of the Government. The implication would be that if it should buy land for necessary or unnecessary purposes it would have to get the consent of the States.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say about that. I was a little bit surprised that the constitutional question was brought up, as I had thought we had unanimous consent sometime ago never again to mention the Constitution.

I shall be glad when we can have a vote on my amendment to substitute one hundred million for a thousand million dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand there are a number of amendments undisposed of and that probably a final vote on the bill cannot be taken this afternoon. Unless there is some objection, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BAILEY. With the understanding that I shall have a vote on my amendment? Is that the understanding?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from North Carolina will be pending on the convening of the Senate tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question will be on the request of the Senator from North Carolina for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has asked for the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. When the Senate convenes tomorrow, the question will be on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], on which question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Marriner S.

Eccles, of Utah, to be member of the Federal Reserve Board, for the unexpired portion of the term of 10 years from August 10, 1928, vice Eugene R. Black, resigned.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, one of our recent colleagues, former Senator Goldsborough, of Maryland, who sat in this body until a few months ago, has been nominated by the President as the minority member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I have conferred with both the Democratic leader and the Republican leader in regard to the nomination, and I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be taken from the table and acted upon immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland, to be a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the unexpired term of 6 years from September 6, 1933, vice Elbert G. Bennett, resigned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, ordinarily the nomination would go to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Senator Goldsborough was a member of that committee for some time, however, and I feel very much disposed to join in the request for unanimous consent for his confirmation without reference of the nomination to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. TYDINGS. I further ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified that the nomination has been confirmed by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

The calendar is now in order.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dr. Harry C. Knight to be assistant surgeon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 24, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate April 23 (legislative day of Apr. 15), 1935

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Phillips Lee Goldsborough, of Maryland, to be a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the unexpired term of 6 years from September 6, 1933, vice Elbert G. Bennett, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 23 (legislative day of Apr. 15), 1935

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Phillips Lee Goldsborough to be a member of the board of directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Dr. Harry C. Knight to be assistant surgeon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 23, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our Lord, let us be silent that we may hear Thy whisper. O breath of God, let a spiritual tide flow into our souls, as in humility and reverence we lift them up to Thee. Thou hast called us to high and holy living, which gives rewards beyond our finest dreams. Be with us in the service with which we have been so signally honored. In all circumstances keep us brave and strong to seek the truth and do the right. O divine Presence, be with us like the sunbeams that break from the golden window of the east, a joy-giving, illuminating, and a transforming power. And Thine shall be the glory. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1572. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. GLASS and Mr. HALE members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the office of the Comptroller General.

THE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE

Mr. DUFFEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House for today and tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL EXERCISES

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I send the following resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration:

House Resolution 201

Resolved, That on Tuesday, May 21, 1935, immediately after the approval of the Journal, the House shall stand at recess for the purpose of holding the memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials under the provisions of clause 40a of rule XI. The order of exercises and proceedings of the service shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and all Members shall be given the privilege of extending their remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. At the conclusion of the proceedings the Speaker shall call the House to order and then, as a further mark of respect to the memories of the deceased, he shall declare the House adjourned.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the lady from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House again to the very serious plight of the textile industry; and when I say the textile industry I mean the 9,000,000 people who earn their livelihood in the raw-cotton industry as well as the textile manufacturers—456,000 people who nominally and ordinarily earn their livelihood in the cotton mills.

Yesterday I urged the President of the United States to appoint on the Cabinet committee a member of the cotton-textile industry, a manufacturer, and also a representative of textile labor. Mr. Speaker, I hope very much that the southern Members of Congress will join me in a request that a cotton farmer be placed on that board and also a man or woman who earns his or her livelihood from raw cotton.

This is not a sectional matter, Mr. Speaker; it is a national matter. The people in the Speaker's State of Tennessee, and Georgia, Alabama, North and South Carolina, all of the Southern States that I have visited, are just as much interested in this problem as I am. I believe that the Cabinet needs the advice of the manufacturer, the worker in the mills, the cotton farmer, and the cotton worker.

Mr. FULMER rose.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I cannot yield. I have only 5 minutes. This is not a matter that concerns me alone. It concerns the entire Nation.

Upon that Cabinet board is the Secretary of State, Mr. Hull. I know Mr. Hull to be perfectly sincere in his belief about reciprocal trade relations. He has not believed in a tariff in the past, and we Members who have worked with him know that. I have the highest regard for his integrity and his sincerity, but I do not agree with him. I shall not discuss Secretary Wallace at length. He said that New England "whined." I find that New England does not whine, but that it roars its disapproval of his methods, and when he spoke of the textile industry of New England not being successful, he forgot that 51 textile industries have been closed or partially closed since the beginning of the year and that a majority of those industries are in the South. So if his arraignment applied to New England, it also applies to the South.

Mr. Speaker, there is something radically wrong when our mills are closing, not one by one but by several in a week. We must do something immediately, and I earnestly ask the Members to help me relieve the situation. I know that the Southern Members are just as much interested as I am, they are just as anxious for action, and I wish they could all speak out loud on the floor of the House and say what they think. They may be embarrassed to do so, but in the long run they would help not only their constituents but, according to my belief, they would help the President of the United States in inducing him to act before it is altogether too late.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

THE PROCESSING TAX ON COTTON

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein a letter from Clarence Poe, the editor of the Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist, dated April 20, 1935, enclosing a resolution adopted by the North Carolina State Council Cotton Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter from Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer and Southern Ruralist, dated April 20, 1935, enclosing a resolution adopted by the North Carolina State Council Cotton Committee:

PROGRESSIVE FARMER AND SOUTHERN RURALIST,
Raleigh, N. C., April 20, 1935.

Senator J. W. BAILEY,
Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
Hon. HAROLD D. COOLEY,
Hon. LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIENDS: The enclosed resolutions explain themselves.

You have no doubt heard that the North Carolina House of Representatives has already passed by a vote of 52 to 18 a resolution rescinding its action in asking for the repeal of the processing tax, and the senate will probably act on this Monday.

You will see from resolution no. 7 that the North Carolina Senators are asked to present this resolution to President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace and that as the North Carolina member of the House Agricultural Committee Mr. COOLEY is asked to present the resolution to his committee and have it published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which the resolution of the general assembly has already been published.

I am also sending a copy of this resolution to Congressman WARREN, who, I am sure, will be interested in it in view of the announcement that he is preparing an address defending the A. A. A.

Earnestly hoping each of you will carefully consider the facts set out in this statement, I am with best wishes,

Yours sincerely,

CLARENCE POE.

AN APPEAL TO THE NORTH CAROLINA LEGISLATURE AND TO NORTH CAROLINA SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS IN BEHALF OF MAINTAINING THE PROCESSING TAX ON COTTON

To the Members of the North Carolina General Assembly and to the North Carolina Senators and Representatives in Congress:

GENTLEMEN: On behalf of the cotton growers of North Carolina, whose interests we have been commissioned to defend, the North Carolina State Council Cotton Committee, representing 190,000 cotton producers in 79 counties and the legislative representatives of the Grange representing 53 counties, hereby offers the following statement and appeal:

1. We earnestly urge the General Assembly of North Carolina to rescind its hurriedly passed and inadequately considered resolution demanding the repeal of the processing tax, and we would remind our Congressmen that the resolution was passed without any opportunity for a hearing from the agricultural interests of our State and in direct violation of their wishes.

2. A Nation-wide campaign is now on to break down the present A. A. A. program, which has brought incalculable benefits to North Carolina cotton growers and tobacco growers, with the result that North Carolina is the only State whose crop values last year were 150 percent more than in 1932. That the law-making body of the State which has benefited so greatly should make haste to give aid and comfort to the enemies of the program, seems to us a matter for profound regret and amazement.

3. In contrast to the wild and misleading statements that have been made about the processing tax we would remind our lawmakers and the public that this processing tax plus the market price of cotton combine to give the cotton farmer only the same parity price or purchasing power (now about 16 cents per pound) that he received in pre-war years 1909–14. Everyone with any knowledge of farm conditions knows that even this price is too low to maintain modern American living standards for the bulk of cotton growers.

4. We give it as our emphatic opinion that the difficulties of the textile industry are not primarily due to the processing tax, but to other causes, as should be made evident by the fact that the processing tax adds only 3 cents to the cost of a work shirt, only 8 cents to the cost of a pair of overalls, and similarly for other cotton products. Even these small costs, in our opinion, are borne by the consumer. We are sympathetic with all fair and reasonable proposals for helping the textile industry, but would reiterate that if they should succeed in destroying the processing tax, the most far-reaching result would be the destruction of the purchasing power among millions of their own patrons on the cotton farms of the South.

5. We also resent any effort to have the equivalent of the processing tax paid out of relief funds and the impression thereby given that cotton farmers are recipients of charity instead of being entitled as a matter of justice to pre-war parity prices through the processing tax—and also making the receipt of parity prices a temporary expedient instead of a permanent objective of government.

6. We note with regret the statement of some New England mills that they may be forced to close down temporarily unless the processing tax is repealed. We would remind our lawmakers and the public that during the past 50 years the failure of Government to give agriculture equal benefits with industry has resulted in permanently bankrupting tens of thousands of North Carolina cotton farmers, as is proved by the fact that tenancy has increased in this State from 33 percent to 49 percent. We insist that whatever help is given the textile industry must not be through the bankruptcy of agriculture.

7. We hereby request Hon. HAROLD D. COOLEY, the North Carolina member of the House Agricultural Committee, to present this matter to the House committee and have this resolution published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which carried the resolution of our general assembly, and that our Senators present it to President Roosevelt and Secretary Wallace.

Signed on behalf of the North Carolina State Council Cotton Committee:

G. T. Scott, Selma, N. C.; C. A. Johnson, Tarboro, N. C.; T. J. Purdie, Fayetteville, N. C.; W. V. Williams, Wingate, N. C.; L. O. Moseley, Kinston, N. C.; Tom Cornwell, route 1, Shelby, N. C.; W. L. Powell, Windsor, N. C.; J. C. Byrd, route 1, Erwin, N. C.

Signed on behalf of North Carolina State Grange:

Clarence Poe, Past Master and Legislative Representative; B. W. Kilgore, Legislative Representative.

NEW DEAL FAILS TO RECOGNIZE BASIC CAUSES OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain references furnished me by Dr. R. Dielmann, of the Library of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the document deal with?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, this report deals with labor displacement by machinery. In one instance it shows where one machine put 175 men out of work. There are certain excerpts from the report which I wish to include.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I may say to this enlightened gentleman of the Democratic Party that he is doing a real service if he can do something to eliminate mass production, which we must do, if we are going to put people back to work. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, according to today's press, there are more unemployed now than there were a year ago. Notwithstanding the fact that we have appropriated billions of dollars for the purpose of creating employment, we continue to flounder in the bog of unemployment with little, if any, promise of solving this most important problem. I do not wish to be unduly critical of the new-deal objectives, but the fact remains—at least, it is my opinion—that our efforts thus far have been of little or no avail. We have dealt too much with the effects and not enough with the cause.

During and following the World War the development of labor-saving devices took on added impetus. Not only did we develop the machine to the utmost of efficiency, primarily with the objective of economy in production costs, but we also went to the extreme of selling these labor-saving devices abroad to our competitors, establishing American factories abroad, and equipping them with labor-saving machinery. Like a double-bladed ax, the machine has increased unemployment here at home through its displacement of human labor, and at the same time it has in many instances practically closed foreign markets to our manufacturers, because foreigners, with American-manufactured, mass-production machinery, are now equipped to produce the things they require at less cost than they can be manufactured in America and transported abroad.

Organized labor recognizes that mass-production machinery has contributed more than any other agency to our present problem of unemployment. Organized labor proposes to correct this situation by a reduction in hours of employment and is now advocating the 30-hour week. This was also the indirect objective of the N. R. A.

The technotax, which I propose, is a tax to be placed on machines or the products of machines, on a basis of the number of workers displaced. We did not hesitate to suppress, through a tax suggestion, the Maxim silencer as a public menace to life. The use of poisonous gases and other unnecessarily destructive discoveries and inventions, and even narcotics, is limited, controlled, and even prohibited through taxation and otherwise. The modern mass-production machine is likewise a menace to the general welfare of our people. It is not proposed to eliminate or abolish the machine, as we all recognize its efficacy, but it is my opinion that the profits derived from the machine should be more equitably distributed.

Dr. Dielmann, a member of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, has made a study of the displacement of human labor by modern machinery and her statement of fact, dated March 26, 1935, in my estimation, proves conclusively that the machine, with its resultant displacement of human labor, must be held largely responsible for unemployment as we know it today. I shall not include her entire report herewith, which is somewhat lengthy, but the following facts which she has presented are so significant that I feel they merit the consideration of every thinking person:

The Austin Motor works employed 55 men per car manufactured in 1922, and 8 men per car manufactured in 1934.

A survey of the meat-packing industry by the Bureau of Labor Statistics showed three large plants were producing as large an output with 2,072 men in 1931 as they could with 2,585 men in 1914. The survey of three medium-sized plants showed that the 1921 rate of output by 2,020 men could be accomplished in 1931 by 1,264 men.

In 1911 cotton yarn was produced at the rate of 10.08 pounds per man-hour; in 1916, 10.57 pounds; in 1925, 11.59 pounds. Cotton cloth was produced at the rate of 7.95 pounds per man-hour in 1911, 8.26 pounds in 1916, and 10.31 pounds per man-hour in 1925. The number of looms tended by a single worker in the cotton mills was increased from 12 to 60 within a few years.

The invention of labor-saving machinery in printing and publishing business has displaced 3 or 4 workers out of 5.

In 1896 it required 40 compositors 10 hours to compose a 4-page newspaper. In 1916 the same work could be accomplished by 26 workers in 8 hours, and in 1926 by 21 workers in 7 hours.

It required 51 men to produce the amount of coke in the beehive ovens that is now produced by 10 men with mechanized ovens.

In 1921 the average annual output per wage earner in the rubber-tire industry was 449.1 tires; in 1927 it was 822.5 tires; in 1929, 843 tires; and in 1931, 1,015.5 tires.

The man-hour productivity in leather-tanning industries increased 52 percent from 1899 to 1927. Between 1923 and 1931 it is estimated that about 16,277 workers were displaced in 5 branches of the industry surveyed by the Department of Labor.

The Owens automatic machine for glass blowing increased productivity of labor 3,806 percent over the hand process in the manufacture of 2-ounce prescription bottles, 4,009 percent in the manufacture of 4-ounce prescription bottles, 1,349 percent in the manufacture of 1-quart milk bottles, and 3,026 percent in the manufacture of 25-watt electric-light bulbs. From 1899 to 1925 the productivity of labor was increased 318 percent in the manufacture of pressed glassware, 271 percent in the manufacture of window glass, and 201 percent in the manufacture of plate glass. (On this basis the number of glass blowers declined over 300 percent.)

Considerable gains have been made in man-hour productivity in the brick industry owing to improving machinery, mechanical handling, improved quality of the clay, and improved process of burning.

Productivity of labor in blast furnaces measured by the year 1889 as an index had reached 154 in 1899, 298 in 1919, and 711 in 1928. In rolling mills and steel works, taking the same index (1889 equals 100), productivity of labor had reached 153 in 1899, 180 in 1919, and 257 in 1929.

Between 1850 and 1925 the number of workers in the pig-iron industry increased 44 percent, while the production per man increased 4,928 percent and output increased 7,178 percent. In 1919 it required 6.9 man-hours to produce a gross ton of pig iron. In 1927 a ton could be produced in 3.3 man-hours.

One automobile plant required an average of 4,664 man-hours to produce an automobile in 1912, and 813 man-hours in 1923. A new type of metal-heating furnace has increased production per man two and two-thirds times. Machine forging doubled production per man. A special machine for the manufacture of pressed-steel frames operated by 1 man displaced the labor of 175 men.

A company introduced an improved type of drop hammer and increased output 30 to 40 percent while employing 280 men to do the work formerly accomplished by 480 men. It formerly required 3 or 4 days for an open wrench to go from the forging hammers to the stock room. Improved machinery and handling reduced the time to 6 hours.

Employment in the manufacture of textile machinery and parts was 88.1 in 1929, 71.2 in 1930, 61.3 in 1931, 48.7 in 1932, and 61.7 in 1933. It is estimated that 1,620,000 workers in machine and tool manufactories have been unemployed since 1929.

In addition to the foregoing—

We have machinery to milk cows.

We have machinery to pick cotton, throwing thousands of Southern laborers out of work, forcing the Government to maintain them and their families.

We hitch 24 plows behind one tractor and plow thousands of acres of land in one operation. What about the man who formerly followed the plow?

We have teletype machines, supplanting thousands of telegraph operators.

We have the dial system which displaces hundreds of thousands of telephone operators.

We have the ditch digger, with a small crew of 3 or 5 men, who can do more work in 1 day than 100 men did before the advent of road machinery.

These are only a few of the hundreds of labor-saving machines which create unemployment, the use of which, in the majority of instances, results in little or no saving to the consumer.

The machine which takes the place of man does not, however, take over the burden of taxation nor does it consume the products of man as does the laborer. The individual, employed and unemployed, is still called upon to carry the burden of taxation, while at the same time we fail to place a reasonable share of the load upon the profiteers of mechanical progress who continue to take to themselves the economic advantages resulting from mass production.

We should further bear in mind that the mechanical man or machine does no buying; it is merely an inanimate object which adds to the profit of the owner. It does not spread purchasing power, but rather, instead, concentrates wealth.

The motor vehicle, represented in the automobile, the truck, and the tractor, is about the only known labor-saving machine which is taxed—it is taxed through the medium of gasoline—notwithstanding that it serves a dispersed humanity, and from this standpoint should bear the least taxation.

The mechanical man, in the hands of entrenched wealth, has enslaved the population even in greater measure than the white race enslaved the black, which is now history. The modern labor-saving machine, which, as I have just related, has enslaved modern man, is not the only contributing factor to our present business stagnation, but it is at least a major one. In my opinion, the technotax and the control and extension of credit by the Government to industry and to the citizen afford the two basic methods of approach to a solution of our problems and the attainment of actual and permanent recovery.

Our present difficulties are not due to overproduction. This is self-evident to anyone who will consider the present lowered standard of living of the majority of workers, many of whom are virtually in rags as a result of prolonged unemployment and lack of purchasing power. Even the regularly employed and the partially employed have cut their buying to a minimum, due to the uncertainty of recovery. This is proof conclusive that overproduction is not the cause of our unemployment.

The technotax—that is, a graduated or fluctuating tax on the machine—and the control of credit by the Government, however, will permit production to the fullest possible extent consistent with a decent standard of living and, at the same time, applied as a stabilizing influence they will forever prevent ruinous overproduction and the constantly recurring economic ups and downs, more popularly termed "booms and depressions."

Sir William Beveridge stated:

> The cause of a man's being unemployed is not that which led him to lose his last job but that which prevents him from getting another job now.

The above statement epitomizes our present problem, for the unfortunate unemployed today faces the juggernaut of the machine which, in one instance, forces him into unemployment, and, in the next instance, prevents him from obtaining another job.

Stuart Chase said:

> Machinery did not inaugurate the phenomenon of unemployment but promoted it from a minor irritation to one of the chief plagues of mankind.

The statements of these distinguished economists evidence without doubt that technological development has been one of the basic contributing factors to our present unemployment situation. With these pertinent positive facts before us, the question at issue is, Shall we permit the machine to further enslave and hold the unemployed in the bondage of despair, or shall we exercise intelligence and initiate a real new deal by taxing the owners of the juggernauts of mass production and utilizing these funds, the profits of mechanical progress, for the benefit of the people?

We are taught, in the wisdom of the Bible, that man was made to enjoy the fruits of this earth, but if we may judge from the situation in which we now find ourselves, it would, on the contrary, appear to be true that the earth, and even man himself, was created to be the docile servant of entrenched wealth and the modern machine. We must break the chains of our economic serfdom, outlaw forever the exploitation of human life, labor, and inventive genius in the interests of a privileged few, and restore to our people their God-given heritage of freedom and equality, vouchsafed to them in our Constitution.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I feel that the Naval Affairs Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has a right to have their bill taken up now. There will be ample time in general debate for Members who wish to address the House. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY], the chairman, is ready to take up that bill and is trying to obtain recognition for that purpose. These speeches can just as well wait a few minutes until we get into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONNERY. This is information that I want to give the House in reference to the address just made by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will not that keep for a few minutes?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I feel I must object to any further speeches until the House gets into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to submit any sort of request that may discomfort this important bill which this committee has labored on so long, but I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. On what subject?

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. It has to do with national tubercular sanitariums.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why could not the gentleman speak about that under general debate?

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I would rather have this permission to speak in open house if the gentleman would be so kind.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Could not the gentleman speak under general debate on the Navy appropriation bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I have always felt that debate on appropriation bills, or on any bill, for that matter, should have some resemblance to the matter under consideration just as a matter of orderly procedure.

I would very much prefer to make the speech in the House. It does not consume any more time. Thirty minutes one place is the same as 30 minutes at another place.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But it requires every other Member of the House to stay here until we do go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not require the gentleman to stay here.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In general debate the time is divided equally, and in that way the gentleman's side would get 30 minutes more than our side.

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, it is the gentleman's privilege to object if he desires to do so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I object.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER ORDERS AND DECREES OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. The purpose of the bill is to amend the present law with reference to the sale of land in United States courts. The emergency arises because of the necessity for the entry of an order in the United States court at Los Angeles, Calif., tomorrow, if possible, to enable the collection of a judgment which the United States has, growing out of the Fall and Doheny oil lease transactions. It is to expedite the sale of these lands which are situated in several different Federal court districts, and the present law is not considered sufficiently broad to accomplish this.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman consulted the minority members of the committee with reference to his action?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PERKINS], who is ranking member on the subcommittee which considered this particular bill, has expressed his approval of it, and it has the unanimous report of the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, I think the bill is all right, but I do not like this practice. I do not think any committee should call up important legislation like this under these circumstances, without at least conferring with the minority members of the committee. I am for the bill, but I do not like the practice, and in the future I shall object, even though it comes from my own committee.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Reserving the right to object, is this bill general, or does it only have particular application to this case?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is of general application, although its particular purpose in being brought up now is to expedite the sale of these particular lands in several districts of the Federal court.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman think he ought to explain to the House what the bill provides?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will do my best to explain it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893 (ch. 225, 27 Stat. 751, as amended; U. S. C., title 28, secs. 847, 848, and 849), be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. All real estate or any interest in land sold under any order or decree of any United States court shall be sold at public sale at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city in which the property, or the greater part thereof, is located, or upon the premises or some parcel thereof located therein, as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct, said sale to be upon such terms and conditions as said court shall approve: Provided, however, That if said property shall be situated in more than one county, State, judicial district of the United States, or judicial circuit of the United States, whether in one or more parcels, said property shall be sold as a whole or in separate parcels at public sale at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city in which the greater part thereof is located or upon the premises or some parcel thereof as the court rendering such order or decree of sale may direct: And provided further, That if at the time said property is offered for sale it is in the possession of a receiver or receivers, or ancillary receiver or ancillary receivers, appointed by one or more district courts of the United States, said property wherever situated shall be sold at public sale in the district of primary jurisdiction at the courthouse of the county, parish, or city situated therein in which the greater part of said property in said district is located or on the premises or some parcel thereof located in such county, parish, or city therein as the court having primary jurisdiction by such order or decree of sale may direct, unless said court shall order the sale of the properties or one or more parcels thereof in one or more ancillary districts. The United States court having primary jurisdiction shall be deemed to be the court first appointing any such receiver.

"After a hearing of which notice to all interested parties shall be given by publication or otherwise as the court may direct, the court may order and decree the sale of such real estate or interest in land or any part thereof at private sale for cash or other considerations and upon such terms and conditions as the court directing the sale may approve, if it finds that the best interests of the estate will be conserved thereby: Provided, That before confirmation of any private sale, the court shall appoint three disinterested persons to appraise said property or, if the court deems advisable, different groups of three appraisers each to appraise properties of different classes or situate in different localities, and no private sale shall be confirmed at a price less than two-thirds of the appraised value: Provided further, That before confirmation of any private sale, the terms of such sale shall first be published in such newspaper or newspapers of general circulation as the court having jurisdiction may direct at least 10 days before confirmation; and such private sale shall not then be confirmed by said court where a bona fide offer has been made, under such conditions as said court may prescribe, which offer shall guarantee at least a 10-percent increase over the offered price specified in such private sale. The provisions of this section shall apply to sales and proceedings now pending in the courts of the United States as well as those commenced hereafter. The provisions of this section shall not apply to sales and proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act.

"SEC. 2. All personal property sold under any order or decree of any court of the United States shall be sold as provided in section 1 of this act, unless in the opinion of the court rendering such order or decree, it would be best to sell it in some other manner. The provisions of this section shall apply to sales and proceedings now pending in the courts of the United States as well as those commenced hereafter. The provisions of this section shall not apply to sales and proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act.

"SEC. 3. No sale of real estate ordered pursuant to the provisions of this act by any order, judgment, or decree of any United States court, other than a private sale, shall be had without previous publication of notices of such proposed sale being ordered and had once a week for at least 4 weeks prior to such sale in at least one newspaper printed, regularly issued, and having a general circulation in the county, State, judicial district of the United States, or judicial circuit of the United States where the real estate proposed to be sold is situated, if such there be. If said property shall be situated in more than one county, State, judicial district of the United States, or judicial circuit of the United States, such notice shall be published in one or more of the counties, States, judicial districts of the United States, or judicial circuits of the United States where said property is situated, as the court may direct. Said notice shall be substantially in such form and contain such description of the property by reference or otherwise as the court ordering the sale shall approve. The court may, in its discretion, direct that the publication of the notice of sale herein provided for be made in such other newspapers as may seem proper. The provisions of this section shall apply to sales and proceedings now pending in the courts of the United States as well as those commenced hereafter in said courts. The provisions of this section shall not apply to sales and proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE COTTON PROGRAM CARRIES ON

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by Hon. Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, at Atlanta, Ga., on April 13, 1935, on the subject The Cotton Program Carries On.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, this address comes from Henry A. Wallace, a gentleman who is doing more to damage and injure the farmers of this country than any other man.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. RICH. I think we ought to give consideration to these speeches.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the address delivered by the Secretary of Agriculture, Hon. Henry A. Wallace, at a meeting of the cotton growers of the South, at Atlanta, Ga., on Saturday, April 13, 1935, as follows:

I welcome the opportunity to return to Georgia and discuss with this group some of the elements in the cotton situation.

Two years ago this month the Agricultural Adjustment Act was nearing the final stages of enactment in Congress.

One of the principal reasons for adoption of the act was the crisis in cotton. The cotton situation in 1932 and early 1933 was briefly this:

The average farm price stood at 4.6 cents a pound at the low point in June 1932. While the things farmers bought in 1931–32 averaged 14 percent above the pre-war level, the prices they received for cotton averaged 54 percent below the pre-war level. Gross farm income from cotton and cottonseed had fallen from $1,470,000,000 in 1928–29 to $464,000,000 in 1932–33. This meant a decline in the average gross income per farm family from cotton and seed from $735 to $232. This collapse in cotton prices and income, which was calamitous, not only to the South but to the entire country, was caused by the combined influence of increasing production and declining demand. Together these resulted in mountainous cotton supplies which clogged the market and crushed the price.

What is the picture in 1935? The average farm price of cotton as of March 15, 1935, was 11.5 cents a pound. The things farmers bought averaged 28 percent above the pre-war level, while the prices they received for cotton averaged 7 percent below the pre-war level. This discrepancy was made up in part by benefit payments to farmers cooperating in the adjustment program. The farm value of cotton and cottonseed, including rental and benefit payments, had risen from $464,000,000 in 1932–33 to around $862,000,000 in 1933–34, and will be maintained at near that figure in 1934–35. This striking improvement has resulted from the three great component parts of the present cotton program—the cotton-adjustment and benefit-payment plan, the cotton loan, and the Bankhead Act. Devaluation of the dollar, of course, also was a factor. The increase in cotton price and income rests upon a foundation of improved supply. For while still far above normal, the world carry-over of American cotton has been reduced from 12,960,000 bales in August 1932 to 10,634,000 bales in August 1934. Prospects are that the carry-over next August will be about 8,500,000 bales.

But in spite of the improvement in farm prices and in farm income of the cotton growers of the South, arguments have recently been advanced in some quarters that this country should discard the cotton program or, what might easily amount to the same thing, emasculate it of features so vital that their loss would invite its early termination.

The agitation against the present cotton program has taken several forms. The effort of certain textile manufacturers to get rid of the processing tax is the spearhead of the movement. They should realize that the cotton program could not long be maintained without a continuing source of revenue which would not run up the public debt. The cotton program also has been threatened by the demand of American exporters to end production adjustment without waiting for scale-down of the carry-over to anywhere near normal. From these quarters has come pressure for discontinuance of the cotton loans. They also opposed the Bankhead Act in the referendum which resulted in a 9-to-1 vote of farmers in favor of continuance.

The situation developed to a point where it became important for the cotton farmers of the South and the business and industrial groups of the South and North to recognize these attacks, taken altogether, as meaning a push to end the cotton program. Of course, many sincere individuals objecting to phases of the program do not at all intend their opposition to extend to the rest of the cotton plan. Once the cotton-processing tax is removed, the end would be in sight for the cotton plan and other farm programs. The benefit and rental-payment part of the farm program would be destroyed by loss of its continuing source of revenue. Farmers everywhere in the United States, who look upon the Agricultural Adjustment Act as an instrument of equality and of farm recovery in general, had to face the fact that the drives of the different opponents if merged into a successful movement would undermine the act. The responsible officials of this administration also had to face it.

Within the past few days the time came to weigh the advantages of the cotton program against various proposals to end or emasculate it and to make a decision. The overwhelming vote for the Bankhead Act seemed to be a clear mandate from the cotton farmers to continue. So, at least for 1935, the cotton program will go on.

In view of the decision to go forward, announced Wednesday by the administration, I feel it is important for the country, and especially for the cotton and textile industry, to understand the reasoning that lies behind the decision.

From both a national and a regional point of view the best cotton program would be the one which, without exploiting domestic consumers, would bring the largest continuous income to the cotton industry. This is the objective of the present cotton plan.

Therefore, as proposals to alter our course have been made, it has been necessary to weight the arguments for each one of them against the loss of cotton income which would result from termination or drastic change of the program. The test is not whether an about face offers any advantages, but the more vital question of whether these advantages would offset the sacrifices of cotton farmers which would be involved.

To make the situation absolutely clear, the advantages claimed for abandoning or revamping the program will be described one at a time.

The first claim against the cotton program is that it is depriving this country of export markets. This claim is the basis for a contention that abandonment of the program would restore to us the foreign markets assumed to have been lost. Let us scrutinize this contention to see whether its purported advantages are sufficient to justify a return to lower-price cotton, and to offset a big decrease in the purchasing power of cotton farmers.

The often-repeated charge that our cotton program has resulted in the loss of our export markets really consists of two separate arguments. One is that encouraged by our program of cotton-acreage adjustment, foreign cotton-producing countries have increased their cotton acreage. The other is that foreign cotton-consuming countries, unwilling to pay the price for our cotton, have turned to our competitors for their supply.

Foreign cotton acreage did increase 9 percent in 1933. These increased foreign plantings did not follow but preceded our cotton program launched in that same year. For the 1934–35 season, present reports indicate that the foreign crop is about 12,966,000 bales as compared with 13,053,000 bales in 1933–34. In other words, foreign cotton production shows, not an increase, but a slight decrease. Foreign cotton production in 1934–35 is larger in China, Russia, Brazil, and minor producing countries, but these increases are more than offset by decreases in Egypt, India, and Mexico.

Much publicity has been given to the increase in cotton production in Brazil. The production this season is now estimated at 1,591,000 bales, as compared with 969,000 bales in 1933–34 and 448,000 bales in 1932–33. Expansion, which had already gained much headway before our program was launched, has continued. The increase of 622,000 bales since our program was launched represents more than 64 percent increase of Brazilian production, but it amounts to about 6 percent of the United States production in 1934.

The expansion in Brazil had been seized upon and magnified by interests in this country in an attempt to stampede the American cotton growers into abandoning the program which has lifted them out of the mire of a 4-year depression.

The contention that the cotton program has caused our customers abroad to turn elsewhere for their cotton arises primarily from the decrease in American cotton exports since last August 1.

Total exports of American cotton during the period from August 1, 1934, to April 1, 1935, were 3,565,000 bales, as compared with 6,098,000 bales in a like period 1 year earlier, and 6,085,000 bales 2 years earlier.

It is easy, especially for those who wish to do so, to jump from these figures to sweeping conclusions. But when we analyze the reasons for this decrease in exports we discover that much of it is due to the fact that foreign users of cotton, instead of buying new American supplies, have been using up the stocks of American cotton already on hand. Whereas foreign nations since August 1 of last year through February 1935 have cut their imports of American cotton by 41 percent they have reduced their consumption of American cotton by only 26 percent.

We must face the fact that there have been shifts in consumption abroad from American to foreign growths during the first half of the 1934–35 season. Foreign consumption of American cotton during this period was estimated at 3,629,000 bales, whereas the consumption of foreign growths was 8,101,000 bales. This represented a decrease of 1,276,000 bales in consumption of American cotton from a like period 1 year earlier and an increase of 1,521,000 bales in consumption of foreign growths.

These figures reveal a serious decline in foreign imports and consumption of American cotton. It is important to determine how far the cause of this decline is the cotton program and how far it lies outside. Studies made by representatives of the Department of Agriculture and others show that one reason for this shift is the unwillingness of this country to accept goods or services in adequate amount in return for exports of our cotton. This has made it extremely difficult for some countries, especially Germany, to get the American dollars they need with which to buy cotton from us. Germany, for example, was able to sell to us in 1934 only one-third as much in value as in 1929, and therefore has made only about one-fourth her usual purchases of American cotton. There is no way to evade the truth that trade is a two-way affair, and that to have exports we must accept imports.

Economic trends set in motion by the World War have aggravated our difficulties in relation to cotton exports. A review of some of the events since the war reveal clearly the fundamental causes of the decline of our cotton exports.

For a hundred years cotton has linked the United States with the rest of the world. Several times before the war England became uneasy about the high price of American cotton and attempted to increase her production in the Egyptian Sudan, in India, and elsewhere. These foreign efforts at expansion, aimed at our exports, for the most part failed. Limitations on labor, transportation, and the requirements of soil and climate to cotton culture made it difficult for other countries to increase their competition with our exports. But these limitations did not constitute the only factor that permitted America to remain dominant in the world cotton market. The real cause of our preeminence, in addition to our natural advantages in producing cotton, was the fact that the United States was a debtor nation. We owed many millions of dollars to bondholders in England, Germany, Holland, Belgium, and France. American tourists spent money in England and on the Continent. Foreigners who had come to America to win fortune sent hundreds of millions of dollars back each year to the old folks. To make it possible to send all of this money abroad each year it was necessary for us to export much more than we imported.

Cotton was our biggest single export. Before the war it was a sad thing for the United States when the cotton crop was short, because it might mean that we would have to export some of our gold instead of cotton—and in those days when we exported gold it undermined the base of our credit structure and hard times were likely to follow soon thereafter. It is a small wonder, therefore, that not only the people of the South but also the bankers of New York City and the manufacturers of the rest of the Nation came to have profound interest in cotton as one of the leading barometers of American business.

Today, 17 years after the World War, this picture has changed. Today we are a creditor nation to a greater extent than we were a debtor nation before the World War. The foreigners within our borders send less than half as much to the old folks across the water as they did before the war. Our tourists since the depression have spent very little in Europe. Our tariffs, in spite of the foreign trade agreements, are still higher than they were before the war. All of this means that it is becoming increasingly difficult for foreign nations to obtain dollars with which to purchase American cotton.

The price differential in favor of foreign as against American cotton in the first half of the current season was a factor in causing the shift to the cheaper foreign growths. If our price were consistently above its normal relationship with the world price there is no doubt that this shift would continue. But to a considerable extent this price differential already has been corrected and some observers hold that foreign spinners will soon be seeking increased American supplies. Failure of the return to a normal relationship between American and foreign prices thus far to bring a wave of foreign buying may be due to tendency of foreign buyers to withhold orders in the hope that the current drive for an export a subsidy may give them cotton at lower prices.

There is still plenty of American cotton available for export—in fact, considerably more than was available during the decade of the twenties. The controlling factor in our exports is not supply. Price is not the main factor, except where an abnormal differential develops between our prices and prices of competitive growths. Prices might have gone to 3 cents a pound gold in 1933 if there had been no control program. And while such prices would have brought a temporary flush volume of exports, they would also have ruined the cotton farmer and the South. Over a long period, and assuming our prices are in line with foreign growths, the controlling factor in our cotton export trade is the amount of American dollars in the hands of foreign nations wanting our cotton. This situation will get worse instead of better unless and until the American people are willing to accept greatly increased quantities of imports. There is no other way that I know of, short of giving our cotton away through ruinous prices or insecure loans, to regain our former volume of cotton exports.

But with cotton prices at present levels, there is no evidence that further marked expansion of foreign cotton acreage will result from efforts of the American Government to maintain some stability in the price and production of American cotton. American cotton farmers probably can continue efforts to work the carry-over of American cotton down to more normal proportions for a period of 2 or 3 years longer without causing any important change in the world cotton-production picture. Eventually, however, if we continue to bar imports, it is obvious that foreign cotton consumers will look for their cotton to other countries, namely, to those with which they have trading opportunities. This would ultimately result in foreign expansion of cotton production at our expense.

Proposals that this country should do anything and everything, aside from accepting foreign goods in exchange, to preserve its cotton exports do not offer the South any advantages comparable to the loss that would result in dismantling the cotton program. That such proposals would mean discarding the program is almost openly admitted by their sponsors.

Summing up the export discussion, I think it is clear that proposals for increasing exports through low prices would not compensate the cotton-growing industry for the loss in income that would result to them from discarding or transforming the present program. Of course, revision will be made in the future, but proposals for modification must be scrutinized and accepted only if and when they offer decisive advantages over the present approach.

After the argument about exports, a second main contention commonly made against our cotton program is that adjustments in production are forcing tenants and share-croppers off the land.

I have seen this claim published several times in forms so extreme as to be ridiculous, showing on their face that they originated with people who know nothing about the South, its people, or the cotton industry. I have read that our cotton-adjustment program was making millions of farmers homeless.

What are the facts? One is that the number of people on farms in the South increased 1,250,000 from 1930 to 1934. In Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana, the increase in that time was 440,000. While employment in the manufacturing industries fell 40 percent from 1929 to 1933 farm labor in the country, including the South, increased over 100 percent. As industrial employment revived in 1933 farm-labor supply declined, but on January 1, 1934, it was still 60 percent above 1929, while industrial employment was more than 20 percent below.

The shock of unemployment in the cities has been thrust on to the farms. It is ironic to hear some of the very people who plowed their employees out into the streets, letting them drift back into the country, tell what a hardship the cotton program is for the farmer.

I know that the lot of the share-cropper is hard. I know it is a great unsolved human problem. I have watched with foreboding the increases in tenantry which in both the South and the West accompanied ruinous farm prices. I have whole-heartedly endorsed the statesmanlike proposal of Senator BANKHEAD, now pending in Congress, for Government leadership in encouraging a transition from tenantry back to landownership. I do not know a better way to approach the problem, and I am not leaving out of account the possibilities for improving the effectiveness of provisions in our own programs designed to minimize labor disturbance.

But I would like to ask what help any farmers, tenants, or owners would expect to get out of a relapse back to 5- or 6-cent cotton. The fact is that as the cotton income of the South went down, up went the numbers of people living on the land to share in that income.

Solution of the problems of tenantry and share-cropping is not to be found in discarding a program which has meant substantially larger cotton income to divide among the farmers, but rather in agricultural and industrial recovery, restoration of two-way foreign trade, and in such measures as the pending Bankhead bill.

The third major argument against the program has come from domestic textile interests. They are proposing to eliminate the processing tax and find some other source of revenue for making benefit payments. Actually, as I pointed out a few minutes ago, this proposal implies sweeping revision and probably ultimate abandonment of the cotton program as it now exists.

This proposal is based on the argument that the processing tax increases manufacturing costs, decreases consumption, and is the main reason for the shut-down of textile mills.

Before discussing these points, I wish to acknowledge that the textile industry does have difficult problems. The industry is highly competitive and like agriculture suffers from a productive capacity which can quickly outrun demand and oversupply its market.

But I cannot agree that the removal of the cotton-processing tax would make any material contribution to the solution of difficulties which seem to be entirely apart from the cotton program.

We have had a group of technical people at work studying the effect of the cotton-processing tax on cotton consumption. In these studies they have not found that the tax has had any material effect on cotton consumption. While it is paid by the consumer, not by the mill, the increase in the retail price due to the tax is so small as to be a minor burden on the consumer. On the average, the cotton-processing tax adds 1.3 cents to the cost of cotton required to manufacture a yard of muslin; approximately 3 cents for a work shirt and about 8 cents for a pair of overalls.

The level of industrial production and the level of cotton consumption rise and fall together. Since about 40 percent of the cotton domestically consumed is processed for industrial uses, total domestic cotton consumption is closely related to the level of industrial production. For the rest of the domestic market the general level of consumer purchasing power is the important factor. So it seems logical to conclude that the best way to help the textile industry would be to increase general industrial production and labor pay rolls rather than to eliminate the processing tax. This is the objective of the administration's general recovery program, of which the adjustment plan is the farmers' part.

As a matter of fact, the cotton-textile industry has maintained a high level of activity as compared with other industries. The index of cotton-mill consumption has averaged 94 percent of the 1923–25 average from October 1, 1934, through February this year. For the 1934–35 season through January the index averaged 87 percent in comparison with an average of 57 percent for all nonagricultural industrial production. This high level of activity has been maintained with the processing tax in effect. While the price of cotton has been doubled and the processing tax has been added since 1932, cotton-mill consumption in 1934 was 400,000 bales greater than in 1932.

Because of accumulated inventories, the textile industry has just obtained an order which will permit it to curtail operations by 25 percent for a period of 12 weeks. The purpose of this order is to protect prices and margins and to regulate production to a demand that can be filled at a profit. Cotton farmers have been attempting to utilize the same principle during the past two seasons. In 1933, when stocks of raw cotton had accumulated and prices had fallen, cotton farmers organized under the Government, borrowed the technique developed by industry and applied it with far more justification to their own business. The textile industry is currently urging that the tariff be increased or a quota be fixed on Japanese textile imports. The argument is made that the present tariffs are inadequate to protect the textile industry and its workers. To maintain their price levels the textile industry is using the powers of government both through the N. R. A. and through high tariffs. Cotton farmers, through the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and processing tax, are making a similar effort to maintain prices and income.

The processing tax and benefit payments are the only effective tariff the cotton farmer has ever had. The farmer has not been making any drive that I know of to knock out the textile tariff. Why should the textile industry be attacking the cotton farmer's tariff? If the textile people are opposed to tariffs, why do they not come forward with a proposal to discard their own tariff, instead of the farmer's. But actually they are asking not the decrease or removal of their tariff but to increase that while knocking out the financial basis of the farmer's benefit payments. In its demand for removal of the processing tax, which is analogous to the farmer's tariff, the textile industry is in effect saying that farmers should sell cotton on a price level lower than the industry expects its customers to pay for finished goods.

Actually it is doubtful that a processing tax is as burdensome generally as an equal rise in price. Although the tax requires the keeping of certain records and the making of reports to revenue collectors that would not be required if there were no processing tax, yet the tax does not require as much capital to finance the commodity from the producer to the processor as would be required if prices were higher by the amount of the tax. Moreover, the payment of the tax does not occur until after processing has taken place. The truth is that processors have received a certain amount of financial assistance because in some cases the processed articles have been sold and payment received, with tax included, before the processor paid the Government. In addition, it might be noted that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit a postponement of the payment of the tax for a period of 180 days.

The real basic objection to the tax probably is the fact that some domestic processors feel they are losing the advantage of low prices to the farmers.

Although the administration has decided that there is no intention of substituting work-relief funds for processing taxes, the campaign to remove the cotton tax has continued. Those who are urging that the tax be removed are in many instances deliberately misleading the public about the nature and effect of the tax. All the difficulties of the textile industry are being blamed on the processing tax. Even a New England mill making rayon, which is not subject to any processing tax whatever, was recently closed "because of the tax" according to the papers, and apparently some workers unthinkingly accepted that excuse.

In a radio speech the other night a Member of Congress discussed the distressed condition of New England mills and advocated removal of the tax and an embargo on textile imports as the remedy. It was inferred from this address that the processing tax was giving foreign spinners an advantage in the domestic market. Such is not the case, as a compensatory import tax is levied on all textiles coming into this country. In other words, the processing tax maintains the status quo as far as imports or exports are concerned. The equivalent of the tax is collected on imports and a refund is made on exports.

New Orleans cotton merchants, in a recent assault upon the cotton program, fell into the same error. "The way is open", their brief read, "for other cotton-manufacturing countries (not having the disadvantage of a processing tax of 4.2 cents per pound) to bring their manufactured goods into this country over the tariff and sell to our domestic customers." Those who make such statements as this either have never read the Agricultural Adjustment Act or are deliberately seeking to deceive the public. The equivalent of the processing tax is collected on all imports of cotton goods.

It is apparent that the agitation against the cotton-processing tax will continue. Efforts are being made to turn cotton farmers against the tax—a device which contributes $100,000,000 a year to their purchasing power and to which they are entitled as a matter of economic justice. Efforts are being made to arouse textile workers against the tax on the pretext that it is the cause of difficulties which they have endured for many years, and which were most intense in 1932. It will be necessary for textile workers and farmers as well to examine carefully the basis for the attack that is continuing, and seek to appraise the real cause of distress.

No one more than I would like to see the textile mills of the South and New England prosper, and their employees steadily at work for good wages. Improved incomes for the textile workers are important not only for them but for general recovery. Improved incomes for other workers, including the farmers, are important to the textile industry.

The textile industry would have nothing to gain but a great deal to lose if it contributed to dismantling the cotton farmers' program. If poverty prices of cotton were a basis for prosperity in the textile mills, then why weren't they rolling in wealth in 1931 and 1932? The true basis for the textile industry recovery is the spreading of purchasing power through the population, including the city workers and the farmers. Sixteen cents a pound for cotton.

which is about the present cost to the mills in price plus tax, has not in the past been regarded as an unfairly high price. It has been not a symptom of distress in the textile industry, but of prosperous business conditions in the country as a whole.

Evidence of the effect of the increased purchasing power in the South is found in the 38-percent increase in 1 year in industrial commodities shipped by rail from 16 industrial States of the North and East and delivered in 10 agricultural States of the Southeast. Waybills for four southeastern railroads were examined for the year ending June 30, 1933—before the cotton program started—and for the year ending June 30, 1934, after its effects began to be felt. Many of these increased shipments came to Atlanta, railroad center of this area.

The country got into grave crises in 1932 and 1933, when the bottom dropped out of farm prices.

I have found that all through history during recovery periods there are two classes who do not go along with their government on broad national policy. In the first class are those who are impatient of the rate of progress of recovery, or who want recovery to develop into a crazy boom. Such impatient groups are those who go through the South trying to excite unthinking citizens by screaming about the iniquities of 12-cent cotton and that it is criminal that cotton has not risen from 5 to 20 cents a pound.

The other class is made up of those who are thinking in terms of a minority engaged in an industry, rather than the 2,000,000 cotton farmers comprising the great majority.

The cotton program, and the other farm programs, are to be maintained, not for the good of agriculture alone but in the general public interest.

The form of the cotton program is not fixed but flexible, so that modifications to fit changing needs and conditions are continually possible. For example, the cotton-loan program may be adapted to the ever-normal granary idea of which Senator SMITH'S cotton-option plan was a forerunner. Similarly, there will always be need to give consideration to proposals offered by men like your Senator GEORGE and Senator RUSSELL, who are interested in agriculture.

The problems facing the cotton growers don't stay put, neither do they affect the South alone. They are related to the problems facing farmers in other parts of the country, and to the problems confronting the large industrial groups. We must strive for a greater readiness to adapt measures to changing situations for a greater sense of unity and a greater degree of cooperation if we are to make progress.

For 13 long years agriculture has striven for a recognition of equality with other groups. Certain expedients were offered during the decades of the twenties which sought no fundamental solution, but merely attempted to quiet the noisy clamor of us "wild men from the West", and to continue the patient forbearance of stolid southern planters, for years victims of high-tariff policies for industry. We would not maintain that the Agricultural Adjustment Act is the final answer to these years of effort, but certainly it represents a definite achievement for agriculture. When the act was passed the Federal Congress recognized that no enduring prosperity could be had with the purchasing power of the Nation's farmers driven to starvation levels.

Now that the plan has been developed to meet a crisis, those groups who fancied prosperity accompanied a depressed agriculture have organized to protest against an agricultural program which has borrowed a little of their historic technique. During the 2 years of operation of the cotton program these protests have come from many different groups. From the efforts on behalf of cotton have arisen the clamor from the exporters who claim that the Government's operations are destroying their business. The textile manufacturers blame the processing tax for all their long-standing difficulties. Organizations have been developed to turn public sentiment against these programs.

The current resistance to the pending amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act is really an attack upon the entire program. The forces that have been set in motion could become so intense and so powerful as to destroy the whole broad program of agricultural adjustment. My own feeling is that the very groups who are fighting the Agricultural Adjustment Act are short-sighted and, perhaps, unwittingly might force upon this Nation fantastic measures which would do much injury and accomplish no good. For the sake of temporary gain the processors and handlers of farm commodities might find themselves faced with something extreme if they succeeded in overthrowing the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I would sound a solemn warning to these groups and in the national interest appeal to them to take the longer view. While this Nation is deciding whether it will take the leadership in an effort to restore an international economic order, it is essential to permit these adjustments in this difficult period of transition. Farmers are poorly organized, and it is difficult for them to make their protests articulate. For that reason, the Government has a special duty to see that farmers get a fair break. But I sometimes think that the pressure of these special pleaders can be made to appear so powerful that the real interest of agriculture which is, of course, the general public interest, may be sacrificed.

Farmers everywhere need to do some hard thinking and to express their point of view as to whether they want the mechanism of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to be thrown overboard because certain special groups believe it to be in conflict with their immediate self-interest. For that reason, I repeat my appeal for an understanding and an alliance between the great agricultural sections of the South and the Middle West. If the cotton program goes by the board, the corn, wheat, tobacco, and other programs will follow. The unity of the farmers will be broken.

As farmers and as citizens, it is your duty not only to appraise the value of past and current activities but to determine what course the agricultural program shall take in the future. We believe it is your desire that we shall continue with the cotton program. It is therefore our purpose to carry on.

INVESTIGATION OF PLUMBING AND SANITARY SYSTEMS IN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. J. Res. 254) providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the House joint resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand this resolution has not been before any committee of the House?

Mr. DINGELL. This has not been before any committee of the House. This resolution was drafted yesterday morning. However, I did consult with the House leadership, and this resolution has no provision in it that encroaches or infringes upon any committee. It is simply a question of authorizing the United States Public Health Service to make a survey and to report to the Congress, without any appropriation, without any cost whatsoever to the Federal Government.

I might say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the United States Public Health Service has sanitary engineers who are prepared and ready to go ahead if the House will direct them to do so.

I might further state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that it is a very serious matter and it is immediately pressing.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Why is it any more urgent now than it was last year?

Mr. DINGELL. It was 10 years behind time a year ago. Today might mean the illness or possibly the death of a Member or visitors in this building.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is wrong practice to bring up bills that have not been considered by committees. I do not see any particular urgency about this resolution, and, therefore, I am going to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DINGELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, it was generally agreed between the gentlemen on the opposite side that they would not object.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken. There was no agreement on my part. I have objected, Mr. Speaker.

PROTECTION OF LAND AGAINST SOIL EROSION

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill, H. R. 7054, an act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after "provide", insert "permanently."

Page 3, line 8, after "of", insert "State and."

Page 3, line 23, strike out all after "except" down to and including "enactment", in line 5, page 4, and insert "for a period not to exceed 8 months from the date of this enactment, the Secretary of Agriculture may make appointments and may continue employees of the organization heretofore established for the purpose of administering those provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act which relate to the prevention of soil erosion, without regard to the civil-service laws or regulations and the Classification Act, as amended."

Page 4, line 5, strike out "and expert" and insert "or practical."

Page 4, lines 6 and 7, strike out ", connected with any educational or research institution."

Page 4, line 7, strike out "jointly."

Page 4, line 8, strike out "and by such institution."

Page 4, line 16, strike out all after "act" down to and including "$100", in line 17.

Page 4, line 19, after "agency", insert "to be known as the 'Soil Conservation Service.'"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas explain the purport of these amendments?

Mr. JONES. Most of the amendments are simply changes of language. The first one inserts the word "permanently", which I do not think changes the meaning of the sentence at all. The words "public health" are included in line 11 among the purposes for which soil-erosion prevention is necessary, but this does not affect the real purpose of the legislation.

The only change of consequence is on page 3, line 23, changing from 4 months to 8 months the period within which appointments may be made in the emergency service without regard to the civil service; and this is to give them a little additional time to work out the program. This is a very important matter, that is pressing in its nature, as the gentleman knows, he having taken an interest in this legislation from the beginning. We do not want the officials to be handicapped in getting the program started.

A further change was that made in relation to the joint employment of those working for other institutions. This change will make it unnecessary for two separate agencies to join in the actual employment. They still have the privilege of employing and compensating on such basis as may seem fair to the employees of other institutions. I do not think it changes the material effect of the section, but it does make easier the matter of employment.

The change made in line 26 simply gives the name to the service, which is not important one way or the other. This covers it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I merely want to call to the attention of the House, in answer to my colleague the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], the fact that, as a result of a conference between the entire Democratic delegation in the House of Representatives from New England with the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper, that President Roosevelt has appointed a Cabinet commission, consisting of Secretary of Commerce Roper, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Labor Perkins, and Secretary of State Hull, to take up the entire matter, both from an emergency standpoint and with the idea of planning for the future of the textile industry in both the North and the South.

Secretary Roper informed me today that hearings will begin on Thursday morning of this week and will continue for some time. The Cabinet committee is going into the matter thoroughly to study the textile situation in reference to Japanese imports, the A. A. A. processing tax, and all phases of the textile situation, with a view of helping the textile mills during the present emergency and with a long-time plan for the future.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time merely to show that the President of the United States has shown by his appointment of this Cabinet committee that he realizes the importance of this matter, is on the job, and, I believe, will do everything in his power to aid the textile industry. [Applause.]

NEW-DEAL SOCIALISM—AND MR. HEARST'S SPLEEN

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, "Sane Government or New Deal Socialism—Which? America Must Choose", is the heading of a half-page editorial on the back page of the Washington Herald of April 22. Presumably the same editorial appeared in the other dailies owned by William Randolph Hearst on the same day in different cities.

If there has ever been a more venomous campaign in favor of reaction and against every form of social justice than that now being conducted by William Randolph Hearst in his newspapers, I am not aware of it. Even the most moderate reforms tending to alleviate the suffering of American citizens under our cruel and rapacious industrial system are the targets for bitter abuse in editorials signed or inspired by Hearst. All the way from the tamest progressivism to democratic socialism and Marxian communism, Hearst pours his editorial poison on advocates of any proposal that involves benefit to the producing class. This journalistic and political mountebank seems to have developed a definite monomania on the subject of socialism. This is the most charitable characterization of his furious and frantic fulminations. Either we must assume that the explanation is pathological or accuse him of the most brazen and deliberate misrepresentation and insincerity.

Typical of the false statements with which the Hearst editorial is reeking is the reference to "these two great Soviet Republics", meaning the United States and Russia. Nobody outside of an insane asylum should have any illusions about the program of the new deal being similar to the policies of Soviet Russia. Russia is attempting to carry out a completely collectivized society. The United States, under the new deal, is simply attempting to regulate private industry more strictly without abolishing private capitalism. The best economists of our time, instead of finding fault because of the regulatory features of the new deal and favoring a return to the "leave-things-alone" plan, believe that the real mistake is in not carrying regulation out to its ultimate, which must, in my judgment, mean public ownership of basic public utilities.

Hearst refers to "our socialistic administration in Washington", knowing full well that the administration is not socialistic, and that some of its most energetic opposition comes from those who are convinced that socialization of these basic public utilities is the only path out of the economic wilderness.

"Confidence!" The editorial is saturated with appeals to the Government to "restore confidence!" In Hearst's judgment, it is all-important for the profiteer, the exploiter, the man who has squeezed millions and billions out of the common people through high prices, inferior goods, and watered stock to "retain confidence." What matters the empty stomach of the jobless man or woman? What matters the plight of the citizen with ragged coat or tattered dress? What matters the misery of the unfortunate who has no home? All these things are of no consequence. But, for God's sake—and, the sake of the legalized robber in Wall Street—let us make sure that big business does not lose "confidence"!

Could anything be more hypocritical, more asinine, more disgusting?

It is as if we were to go to a man who has been robbed of his money, had most of his clothes torn off, had his house burned down, and been beaten to a pulp in the bargain and tell him that he must stop his complaining, make no effort to bring the guilty to justice, and cooperate in restoring "confidence" to the thug and roughneck who subjected him to such indignities.

Hearst knows as well as you and I know that radicalism is as American as the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, instead of being an alien product. Our greatest Americans have always been radical, that is, they believed in getting at the root of things. That is what radicalism is—seeking root remedies. It is not necessary to quote Marx or Ruskin or Fourier. Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Horace Greeley, Edward Bellam, Wendell Phillips, and other native-born American iconoclasts had drastic things to say regarding the evils of concentration of wealth in the hands of a few.

I commend to the attention of Hearst—knowing, however, the futility of commending anything to him except the ruthless desire of Wall Street to go on exploiting without limit—these words of Andrew Jackson:

> It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the axis of government to their selfish purposes. * * * In the full enjoyment of the gifts of heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy, and virtue, every man is entitled to protection by law; but when the laws undertake to add to these natural and just advantages artificial distinctions, to grant titles, gratuities, and exclusive privileges, to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful, the humble members of society—the farmers, mechanics, and laborers—who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their Government.

Abraham Lincoln's immortal words have often been quoted, but they can never be quoted too frequently:

> This country with its institutions belongs to the people who inhabit it. Whenever they shall grow weary of the existing Government, they can exercise their constitutional right of amending it or their revolutionary right to dismember and overthrow it.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 7672, Rept. No. 746) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, was committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McLEOD reserved all points of order on the bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue throughout the day, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] and myself. I may say that my thought is that tomorrow we will agree to a limitation of the time for general debate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee if this division of time will be so arranged that the opponents of the bill will be able to secure ample time to present their views?

Mr. CARY. Yes; we shall not take up the question of limitation of debate until tomorrow.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say to the Members of the House, and especially to those representing the Appropriations Committee, that I want to go on record as objecting very strenuously to this practice of bringing important bills before us by this method. No Member of the House not a member of the subcommittee has seen the bill or the report; I have asked for it for many days and always been turned down; it has been impossible to even look at a copy; you have kept it all under cover. This is a measure of great national interest. When are we going to have an opportunity to study the bill? Let me ask again, for it is of interest to those of us concerned. Although you state you intend to have general debate, which will continue throughout the present day, when are we going to have time to study the bill before it is read for amendment?

Mr. CARY. We expect to have 2 or 3 days of general debate upon this bill. We shall not begin reading the bill before day after tomorrow, and the gentleman will have ample opportunity to examine it.

Mr. TOBEY. But you have not so stated before. I want to say here and now for the RECORD, and publicly, that I object to, and deprecate very strongly, the practice of bringing major bills before the House, even though they have been carefully considered by the committee, without an opportunity being afforded the Members to study the bills before they are introduced and we are compelled to act upon them. In saying this I know I express the feelings of Members on both sides of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman that is a practice that has been indulged in by his party for the last 12 years.

Mr. TOBEY. May I say to the gentleman from Texas——

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is too late in making his objection. The Chair stated the question several times, and the gentleman did not object when the Chair put the request.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. Is it understood that the opponents of this bill, and I agree with what the gentleman from New Hampshire said, will have an opportunity in general debate, not only today but as long as general debate continues, to discuss this matter? I may say that I may or may not be an opponent.

Mr. CARY. Certainly. I assented to that, and I gave the gentleman assurances to that effect privately a few moments ago.

Mr. SISSON. I want it understood now.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7672, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, the challenge has just been made by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] for southern Members to discuss the cotton-textile situation. I gladly accept that challenge this morning.

It is not inappropriate while we are considering the national defense in the form of the annual naval appropriation bill that we should also consider another form of national defense—the well-being, the security, and the right to live of the American farmer. In the bill under consideration we seek to protect the Nation from external enemies. I propose to discuss certain sapping and undermining influences now going on that would again seek to bring distress to our largest group—to take from them the well-earned fruits of an age-old battle—and thereby disturb the domestic tranquility and again bring ruin to American agriculture.

During the past few weeks much has been said on the floor of this House and in public prints about the efforts of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration to obtain a measure of economic equality for the farmers of this country. Led by the New England textile interests, the attack on the Administration's agricultural program has become so intense as to warrant a careful appraisal of the nature and purpose of these attacks. I therefore ask the indulgence of this body to analyze briefly the current agitation against the Administration's agricultural programs.

First, permit me to point out that my State is not only at the top from an agricultural point of view, but is also the leading textile State of the Union. In 1934 the State of North Carolina was among the first nine in cash agricultural income. Twenty percent of the Nation's cotton spindles are located in North Carolina, making it first among the States where the Nation's fiber is processed. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I feel it particularly appropriate for a Member of Congress, representing a State which is both a great industrial and agricultural area, to express his point of view on the present situation.

When the Agricultural Adjustment Act was up for consideration in the Seventy-second Congress it was claimed the farmers would not cooperate. We were told that the farmer was an individualist and would not fit his operations into a cooperative scheme for the general good. Events have put the skeptics to rout upon this score and "given the lie" to the charge that farmers would not work together. Throughout this country more than half of the Nation's farmers—3,000,000 of them—are today engaged in a great cooperative effort to obtain their fair share of the national income. Perhaps the most amazing demonstration in the history of agriculture's long struggle for economic equality was given in my own State in 1933.

My colleagues from North Carolina and from other States in the flue-cured tobacco area will bear witness to this: You will recall that in the summer of 1933 the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was negotiating a marketing agreement with the buyers of flue-cured tobacco. These buyers were reluctant to enter into this agreement, fearful that the farmers would not agree to control production in the following season. This challenge was made to the 400,000 farmers producing this type of tobacco. And, Mr. Chairman, in about 10 days more than 90 percent of these farmers had signed agreements to adjust the production of their crop during the following season. And now, after two seasons of successful cooperation, efforts are being made to destroy the mechanism which has made it possible for farmers as a group to do what they could not do as individuals. The Congress in enacting the Agricultural Adjustment Act recognized the disparity between agriculture and other groups in our national economy. Now comes a drive to abandon that concept; an effort of nonagricultural groups to delude even the farmer that it is to his own interest to go on the dole and discard the processing tax. It is being urged that we abandon this tax which offers a continuing opportunity for agriculture to obtain a just share of the national income.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, just how far these special pleaders have succeeded in influencing the point of view of the legislative body concerning the processing tax. To my own mind, the processing tax is a matter of simple justice to agriculture. Those who claim the tax is a burden on the consumer are saying that the consumer cannot pay to farmers prices in line with those charged by manufacturers and other nonagricultural enterprises. I believe that the farmers of my State comprehend the nature and purpose of the processing tax. I think they recognize that the tax is just as much a part of their price as the money they receive from buyers on the warehouse floor or at the cotton gin. Therefore, those who contend that the processing tax should be repealed are in effect saying that the farmer should be returned to starvation prices for his products. Stripped of nonessentials, the drive to eliminate the processing tax on cotton is a drive for cheap cotton. Of course, they add, we can put the farmer on relief, pension him, give him a dole. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of North Carolina do not want a pension or a dole. They do not want to be put on relief. All they ask is that to which they are justly entitled. And I am confident that this is the attitude of the great majority of American farmers.

I repeat that the processing tax is a part of the farmers' price, and those who are genuinely concerned with the farmers' welfare should be vigilant in preventing its removal. For there is no doubt that, once the processing tax is removed on cotton, it will then come off tobacco, corn and hogs, wheat, peanuts, and other products upon which it is levied. This will mean that farmers will be deprived of a continuing source of revenue with which to maintain these programs and that, after 2 years of successful activity on behalf of the farmer, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration will be scrapped.

Those who are lending themselves to the effort to substitute work-relief funds for the processing tax may not realize the certain consequences of their efforts, if successful. To me, it means but one thing—the end of 14 years' effort and struggle to obtain a measure of economic equality for agriculture. I cannot look upon the beneficial results of these programs in the State of North Carolina and subscribe to any such course of action.

A brief glance at the figures on cash farm receipts in North Carolina tells an astounding story of recovery. They reveal the operation of a Government program that has worked. In 1932 the cash income to farmers of North Carolina was only about $86,000,000. That low level of purchasing power brought with it conditions of poverty and heartbreaking misery. Farmers were losing their homes. Low prices were driving them off the land. It was a year of suffering and despair for this vast group. No man can predict what would have been the outcome if things had been left to drift. Cotton was bringing 5 cents a pound; peanuts were hardly worth harvesting; tobacco prices were around 11 cents per pound. I have little patience with the idle talk that efforts which have been made since those dark days are threatening our form of government. If ever this Nation was in danger, ladies and gentlemen, it was in 1932—a people with their morale shattered, hope almost gone, and farmers driven to desperation by long years of struggle to get a decent, fair deal in the national economy.

The transformation that has taken place in North Carolina agriculture in 2 years is almost miraculous. From the low income of about $86,000,000 in 1932, the total cash income to North Carolina farmers has more than doubled for 1934. The total cash income to farmers in 1934 was about $216,000,000, including rental and benefit payments. Rental and benefit payments in 1934 were $12,579,000. Think of it; from $86,000,000 to $216,000,000 in 2 years. And yet, it is being urged that the opportunity to maintain and further this improvement be abandoned.

I do not think that we should be deceived about the campaign that is now under way against the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. A high-pressure lobby, which bitterly resisted the enactment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, is engaged in an intensive campaign to wreck and destroy it. The New England textile industry, leading the fight for the repeal of the cotton-processing tax, is seeking alliance with southern cotton interests. This strange coalition of interests, fighting for a continuance of monopoly privilege or temporary profits at the expense of the long-exploited farmer, are even seeking to turn the farmer against the program which has brought agriculture undoubted benefits. And we should never forget that the first step toward disintegration of the farmers' program will be the elimination of the processing tax. That is fundamental, and no other construction can be put upon it.

The cotton-processing tax, which is the keystone upon which the cotton program is based, has made possible rental and benefit payments amounting to $112,800,000 for the 1933 cotton program and $115,800,000 for the 1934 program. But the benefit to cotton farmers has not been confined to this addition in income. Because of an improved supply situation, and because of other recovery measures, the gross income from cotton and cottonseed has shown a remarkable advance. The income to cotton farmers rose from $464,000,000 in 1932 to $862,000,000 in 1933. And it is estimated that the income will be at about that level for 1934. And yet it is suggested that we scrap the program which has doubled the income of cotton farmers and greatly improved the economic position of other agricultural groups.

This great agricultural program transcends narrow partisan lines. It is a national effort on behalf of all farmers. I was indeed gratified to note in the RECORD of April 15 the statement from the minority leader of the Senate, Mr. McNARY, who has sponsored an amendment to make hops a basic agricultural commodity. The Senator from Oregon, in speaking upon that amendment (p. 5646 of the RECORD), said, among other things, "I have been a loyal supporter of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration." The measure introduced by the Senator from Oregon makes it possible to levy a processing tax upon the commodity which was designated as basic. For my own part, I feel that this program should be extended to include other commodities which have not as yet felt its benefits, and I agree with Senator MCNARY that it was generally understood that such right would be given. For some time a group of us in the House have been interested in giving the man who produces potatoes, the second food crop in value in the Nation, the opportunity to organize under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and under its beneficent operation bring some stability to the production and marketing of this important crop. Maine potato farmers today are on the verge of ruin and chaos because of the fact that potatoes are the only major crop for which there has been no program. I have presented a bill, written by growers, and approved by growers in 32 States, and they are demanding that action be taken at this session of Congress. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this processing tax fight is not a partisan struggle, and the efforts to disembowel the Agricultural Adjustment Administration should then be stoutly resisted by every member of this body, who has the interest of agriculture at heart, regardless of party.

Now let us examine briefly the claims of the textile industry in its clamour for the elimination of the cotton processing tax. As I stated in the beginning, I come from the leading textile State of the Union. This industry, which has rapidly developed in North Carolina, has made the State one of the leading industrial States of the Nation. This industry is in difficult circumstances. I recognize that fact and am in sympathy with their predicament. But I do not concede, nor will the facts reveal, that the processing tax is the cause of their difficulties.

The truth about the matter is, that like all other business in different periods of our national life, the textile interests have likewise always had their troubles. The Raleigh (N. C.) News & Observer each day gives the headlines of what people were talking about 25 years ago. In its issue of April 17 I find, under the heading "April 17, 1910", the following:

"Financial suicide" is ahead for cotton mills under present conditions, declares a call for a meeting of textile men in Charlotte. Thoughtful mill men advocate stopping all night work as a means of preventing overproduction that is ruining the industry, but some operators refuse to see it that way.

Now, what are the facts? I do not pretend to be technically qualified to analyze the economic crises confronting this industry. Moreover, I doubt if some public officials, who are the spokesmen for the textile interests, are possessed of peculiar knowledge of technical conditions in this highly specialized, intensely competitive industry. But there are certain elemental facts which should be plain to all. These facts provide a clue to the real difficulty in the industry and are entirely unrelated to the cotton processing tax.

We are all familiar with the rapid shift in the textile industry from non-cotton-growing States to the South. The new mills in the cotton-growing States, with new machinery and more advantageous industrial conditions, apparently have enjoyed a competitive advance over the older mills in New England. The result has been a drastic liquidation of mills in the non-cotton-growing States. This trend began long before the processing tax. The number of spindles in place in the United States has been reduced from about 38,000,000 in January 1925, to about 31,000,000 at the end of February 1935. Certainly the substitutes for cotton goods have a place in this picture. In spite of this reduction, however, the industry still has an excess producing capacity. If 27,000,000 of these spindles were operated at 60 hours per week they would consume approximately 6,000,000 bales of cotton annually. If the same number of spindles operated 80 hours per week, annual consumption would be 8,000,000 bales. This total has never been reached in the United States in any one year. During the past year, most of the industry has attempted to operate at a level of 80 hours per week. Is it any wonder that they accumulate heavy inventories and are forced to curtail production? But can this situation be blamed on the processing tax?

What has been the condition of the textile mills during most of the period the processing tax has been in effect? The report of the Federal Trade Commission shows that the level of profits has been high, in fact, the highest in recent years. During the last 6 months of 1933, according to this survey, 206 cotton spinning and weaving mills made a total profit of about $25,000,000 on their sales. This was the equivalent of about 10 percent of the sales value of their products. The cotton-processing tax was in effect then. Was it an unbearable burden then? If so, how did the industry manage to make such substantial profits during that period? It is claimed—and I have no doubt that it is true—that since June 1934, cotton mills have been operating at a loss. But does not the fact that substantial profits were made during most of the first year of the cotton-processing tax demonstrate that the tax is not the real cause of their difficulties? It is hinted—I have not seen the direct allegation—that the cotton tax is drastically reducing consumption. Domestic cotton consumption was 400,000 bales greater in 1934, with 12-cent cotton and the tax, than it was in 1932 with 6-cent cotton and no tax. As a matter of fact, the cost of raw cotton, although a major element for the spinning and weaving mills, constitutes only a minor part of the cost of cotton articles to the ultimate consumer. The average amount of the processing tax paid with respect to some common cotton articles is as follows: Full-sized bed sheet, about 8 cents; pair of pillow cases, about 2 cents; face towel, about 1 cent; pair of overalls, about 8 cents; work shirt, about 3 cents; pair of women's hose, less than 1 cent.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this slight addition to the retail cost could have no appreciable effect on cotton consumption. What valid reason, then, can be urged for the removal of the tax? I have heard none, except that cotton mills may feel that they have lost some advantages gained by low prices. Why do not the proponents for repeal of the tax be candid and admit that what they really want is cheap cotton? Cotton growers would then know how to meet that argument. I ask the representatives of the New England textile industry advocating the repeal of the processing tax to submit for the record just what benefits would follow? Would the cost of finished goods to the consumer be reduced? Would production increase? I submit, Mr. Chairman, that as distressing as is the plight of the textile industry, the removal of the tax would make no material contribution to their difficulties.

New England textile interests have fared exceedingly well under the processing tax. Last year cotton-mill consumption in New England was the highest in 4 years. The figures show that during the cotton year 1933–34, mill consumption in New England was 985,000 bales, the highest since 1929. Now, I pretend to no intimate knowledge of the New England textile industry; but I suspect that with the revival of business activity last year many of these mills, which had long been idle, dusted off their obsolescent spindles and commenced operations. Now that competition has thwarted a perfectly natural desire to continue peak operations at a profit, these interests organize in an effort to take it out on the farmer. Why, Mr. Chairman, the processing tax does not guarantee that the New England textile mills will have the opportunity to run full time. And if they cannot pay the farmer a price for his cotton which is in line with what they expect their customers to pay for their goods, they have no business operating. [Applause.] If starvation prices for cotton is the cost of continued operation for the New England textile industry, they ought to close down.

The entire cotton-textile industry awaits a revival of consumer purchasing power and an increase in industrial production. To deprive cotton farmers of $100,000,000 a year would bring about neither, but serve to retard both. I fear that the current agitation against the processing tax is in reality a smoke screen, intended to obscure the more fundamental causes of the industry's difficulties. These difficulties are entirely apart from the processing tax, and the industry should frankly admit it.

Now, in spite of all of this, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], either on the floor of the House or in newspaper interviews, have issued copious fulminations ascribing to the processing tax all the ailments of the textile industry. They have sought to build up a sentiment in New England that this tax is the ogre that is destroying them, and in a sectional appeal they seek to undermine the very bedrock on which hope has at last come to the cotton farmer. Certain industrialists with parrotlike precision have been echoing the same expression, but in the last few days, as the fallacy of their argument has been exposed, they have been forced to broaden and amend their bill of complaint.

On April 18 Mr. Frank W. Dunham, of Fall River, Mass., who is the head of the chamber of commerce committee on industrial conditions in New England, and who at first was obsessed that the processing tax was the cause of all the trouble, said in a statement issued from Boston:

> Our situation is caused by the processing tax, Japanese competition, North-South wage differential, State legislation, and local taxation, as well as overproduction.

Now, let us examine another phase. In the year of 1921 there were 337 mills in operation in the New England States. By 1933 they had progressively dropped until there were only 194. In that period 143 mills were either closed or removed their operations to some other section, and the decline in spindles in that period was 8,003,000. I need not remind the House as to who were the Presidents during that period and what party was in control here in Washington. [Applause.]

This statement of the great migration of cotton mills during that period from New England is most interesting, Mr. Chairman, and I shall include it for the RECORD.

New England textile mills

Year	Mills in operation	Spindles
1921	337	18,702,000
1923	357	18,930,000
1925	332	18,333,000
1927	302	16,871,000
1929	259	14,549,000
1931	225	12,168,000
1933	194	10,810,000

Employees and wages in New England textile mills

Year	Number of employees	Wages
1921	187,071	$173,938,000
1923	195,947	199,374,000
1925	164,954	158,774,000
1927	156,642	154,795,000
1929	127,041	119,053,000
1931	91,127	76,482,000
1933	91,566	63,184,000

This shows that during the period from 1921 to 1933, 95,505 employees were thrown out of work representing wages of $110,754,000.

Where are the 95,505 men and women in New England who earned their bread in the sweat of their face, tending the textile machinery of these States who, during this period, were expelled from their spindles and looms by an economic and social order prevailing under three Republican Presidents, one of whom was New England bred and born. [Applause.] The tragedy of this period constitutes an epoch unequalled in the industrial history of this country.

In the 1924 campaign the slogan of the Republican Party was, "Keep Cool with Coolidge."

During the winters of 1925 and 1926 this slogan was transposed in the homes of the textile workers to mean, "Keep Cold with Coolidge", for at no time before and no time since have the textile workers of this Nation contended with lower wages, idle spindles, empty looms, or a more desperate social and economic condition than then prevailed unless it was the years 1931 and 1932, during the reign of Herbert Hoover.

When all of this was going on where, may I ask, was the charming and gracious lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS]? [Applause.] Did she rise to protest? Not one sound or chirp did you hear from her.

Where was my close friend, the then complacent assistant minority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]? Was his composure disturbed? Was he then addressing mass meetings on Sunday at Salem and Fall River? Did he then lead a march on the White House as he proposes to do tomorrow? [Applause.]

Where was the Jeremiah from New England at that time—my delightful friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]? [Applause.] Did we then hear his wails and lamentations? [Laughter and applause.]

Where, at that time, was the high priest of protection, my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]? [Applause.] Sitting on the verandas of his palatial hotels in the Massachusetts hills, he was thinking only of prohibitory tariffs and embargoes.

> Oh, where was Roderick then!
> One blast upon his bugle horn was worth ten thousand men.

They remind me of a little darkey down in my county who, with the temperature at 105, was chopping cotton. The sun was boiling down on him. The more he chopped, the hotter he would get and the more he would sweat. Finally, admitting defeat, he threw down his hoe, stuck his hands on his hips and looking up at the sun, said, "Sun—where wuz you last winter when I needed you so bad." [Laughter and applause.]

It is passing strange and singular that with all the criticism made by New England Representatives against the Agricultural Adjustment Act that they are silent in a thousand languages when it comes to another act of this administration—the N. R. A.—that any responsible New England cotton manufacturer will today admit is the reason why there is any textile mill now running in that section. Show me any New England Republican who will refuse to vote for the extension of the N. R. A., and I will show you a candidate for admission to the Smithsonian Institution. [Applause.]

Why, they even went down to North Carolina and tried to ensnare us into a cabal that would set at naught all that has been accomplished for the North Carolina farmer. A memorial to Congress was rushed through our State legislature, without committee consideration, in which the processing tax was in effect branded as a monstrosity, and it was suggested that the cotton farmer be provided for from relief funds. That memorial was placed in the RECORD 2 weeks ago. Now, our general assembly in North Carolina is a fine and patriotic body, but they make mistakes just as we do. When the full effect of what they had done was realized, a recalling and rescinding resolution was offered, debated, and fully considered, and on Thursday it was passed by the lower house by a vote of 52 to 18, and by its terms it "repeals, rescinds, and vacates the memorial favoring repeal of the processing tax as though said memorial had never been introduced, passed, or ratified." The information I have is that soon the North Carolina Senate will pass it, and it will be sent here to us.

Newspaper reports of Saturday state that so aroused are the farmers of Texas that hundreds of them will come here in May to demand that their program not be interfered with.

I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the agitation concerning Japanese textile imports. The President has directed a group of Cabinet officials and technically qualified experts to make a complete study of this situation. But I do want to say this: The cotton-processing tax has absolutely no effect upon either the volume of textile imports or exports. So confused has the issue become that the charge has been made that the processing tax was responsible for the increase in Japanese imports. No responsible person would make that statement, except to deliberately deceive. The facts are plain that the Agricultural Adjustment Act levies a compensatory import tax on all cotton goods at a rate equivalent to the processing tax. Therefore, it cannot be sustained that the processing tax is in any way responsible for the volume of imports from Japan which are exceedingly small in comparison with our total domestic consumption.

I have dwelt too long on the difficulties confronting the textile industry; but I want to emphasize the great necessity for all who are interested in agriculture to unite, resist, and overcome this campaign of misrepresentation to destroy the farmers' program. I cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing the complete confidence the farmers of my State have in that able and brilliant Administrator of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, Chester Davis. [Applause.] The valiant efforts of Mr. Davis and his associates have contributed more to the recovery of agriculture than anything that has happened in a generation. They have taken the mandate given them by Congress and, in a magnificent fashion, have made a reality of what was to us only a possibility. It is our duty to uphold them and not lend aid and comfort to those who in the beginning opposed this great effort and have now renewed their attacks. And I would urge my colleagues from the agricultural sections not to be misled by the high-pressure tactics of those who would abruptly abolish a program of proven worth.

The farmer is generally a voiceless individual. It is difficult for those who have his interests at heart to know his attitude and views. But, Mr. Chairman, we of the South have a definite method of ascertaining just how our farm constituents feel about the cotton and tobacco programs. In the referendum on the Bankhead Act, an overwhelming endorsement of 9 to 1 was recorded. In the State of North Carolina 128,000 farmers voted to continue the program and only 9,000 voted against it. In the entire Cotton Belt 1,361,000 farmers registered their approval for continuing the program and only 160,000 dissented. The vote in the tobacco referendum was even more decisive. We have no evidence that this overwhelming approval has changed.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, as far as the farmer is concerned this referendum is a clear mandate to carry on. It has not been demonstrated that the processing tax, the vital part of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, is economically unsound nor is it causing an undue burden either upon the processors or the consumer. Therefore, what reasons have we for joining in the revival by lobbyists and special pleaders of these intensive efforts to abandon the program. These same groups attempted to defeat the passage of the act. Now they are undertaking to sabotage it by ripping out its most vital part. I am confident they cannot succeed. But, if they should, I predict an uprising of farmers without parallel in this Nation's history.

I therefore appeal to all who are interested in a continuous opportunity for the American farmer to receive justice to stand fast against the current assaults. For many years farmers have sought an opportunity. They cried out for both a program and a leader. The American people in 1932 supplied a leader in the person of Franklin D. Roosevelt [applause], and under his inspired and thrilling leadership the American Congress gave the farmers of the Nation a program. Shall we now be deceived into sacrificing that which they have won? [Applause.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may desire to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, it is my privilege at this time to present for your consideration the annual naval appropriation bill. I regret very much that it becomes necessary to present to the Congress a naval appropriation bill of such great magnitude as the one presented today, but in view of world conditions and of the announced policy of this Government as to its Navy-building program, this bill, I think, is proper, and nothing short of it will meet the demands of the day.

It is a duty that falls upon me to present this measure, and I have no wish or desire to evade that duty, holding, as I do, convictions respecting an appropriate measure of naval preparedness. A rich heritage was left to us by Washington through his advice and counsel. Never before in the history of this country has it been more important to heed his warnings than today. They are as sound and applicable to present-day conditions as they were when he delivered them to his people. The subject always nearest to his heart was the safety and security of the United States. His advice to us is "to be prepared for war is one of the most effectual means of preserving peace."

Washington further said to us that "a free people ought not only to be armed, but disciplined, to which end a uniform and well-digested plan is requisite; and their safety and interest require that they should promote such manufactories as tend to render them independent of others for essentials, particularly military supplies."

The bill we present to you today is not with the fear of imminence of war, but it is purely a defensive measure; one that tends to keep us abreast with the great nations of the earth as to national defense. Its objects are purely defensive. I am thoroughly of the opinion that the question of national defense is of paramount issue to the American people today. In view of world conditions with war clouds hanging over Europe, with every important nation of that Continent expanding its military and naval forces, replacing and rebuilding their armaments, spending untold millions for armies and navies and going to the extent of conscripting soldiers, building the greatest war machines that have ever been built, it is necessary for us to take notice and so prepare ourselves that we may be able to defend this fair land of ours in case such an emergency should arise. I think it is the duty of this Congress to take such steps toward national preparedness as will guarantee the safety and perpetuity of our ideals and of our institutions. It is the only safeguard we have for this great Republic.

We thought a few years ago that the bloody conflict—the World War—was a war to end war and bring peace upon this earth. Today, when we realize what is going on among the principal nations of the earth in the way of rearmament, the rebuilding of navies and armies and air forces, it is a fearful indictment against the onward march of a great civilization. It seems as though the nations of the earth have learned nothing from the lessons of the past. America should make no mistake in a program of preparedness that will protect us in the future. One that will absolutely guarantee our safety. I believe a great national defense for this country will not only secure our peace and keep us out of war, but more than likely secure the peace of the nations of the earth. To my mind, there is but one course for us to pursue, and that is maintain an army that is unequaled, a navy that will be the mistress of the Seven Seas, and for each of these a component air corps that will meet all the needs of the present day.

Since the World War we have not been as alert as we should have been with respect to national defense. We have depended upon treaties as a means of preventing war and we have thereby permitted our program of national preparedness to lag far behind. We owe a great debt of gratitude to the American Legion for the persistent efforts this organization has made in trying to bring to the American people the importance of this great question. That organization has done more than any other in America to make us conscious of the fact that we have not been adequately prepared. Our present policy and the program upon which we have embarked has been very much exhilarated by their efforts. [Applause.]

The United States naval policy is an official enunciation of a number of tenets or doctrines, foremost among which stands this declaration, "to create, maintain, and operate a navy second to none and in conformity with treaty provisions." I endorse that principle, unreservedly, 100 percent. [Applause.] I believe its observance will guarantee our peace.

I am thoroughly convinced that this policy meets a responsive cord in the hearts of a great majority of the people throughout this broad land of ours. None of us is willing to take a chance upon the security of this Republic.

I realize that we have another class of citizens whose numbers are legion who hold the contrary view. I have no quarrel with them. Among their number will be found many prominent, patriotic, and learned persons who are entitled to their views, just as you and I. We disagree as to how we should attain peace. That is the fervent desire of all of us, and I agree that if it were possible to induce the nations of the earth to disarm that it would be better for all countries, but our experience in the past with trying to bring about disarmament has been so unsatisfactory that I do not believe we can afford to depend upon it in the future, at least until the other nations of the earth are willing to agree with us upon this subject and then live up to the agreement, which they have not heretofore done.

My friends, I pride myself on not being an alarmist. I do not think we are in immiment danger of war, but I do think that the conditions that now exist throughout the world call for our most serious consideration and that we should take every precaution possible for our own protection and self-preservation. I yield to no man a stronger desire for world-wide accord and amity and lasting peace, but I cannot blind or deafen myself to conditions obtaining throughout the world as we know they do at this time.

Regardless of the noble struggle that has been made during the past decade for world peace, it is indeed a sad picture presented to us today by the leading nations of the earth in this respect. There is occasion for alarm. In every quarter of the globe strife, turmoil, bitterness, and animosity prevail. I think the whole condition is brought about by an insatiate desire for political power and prestige. It is, indeed, a pity that the peace of the world must be disturbed by the selfishness of a few in power in Europe.

One would gather that Europe is a seething maelstrom—Europe—where upon every street, highway, and bypath may be seen literally hosts of human wrecks—grim reminders of that terrible holocaust which ended less than a score of years ago—the World War. It is a sad commentary, indeed, upon the advance of our civilization and it is convincing evidence to me that America must be prepared for any eventuality that may react in ways inimical to our rights, to our national interest, or to the security of the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity. We must gain experience from the lessons of the past. Have we forgotten that only a few years ago when the great World War broke out in Europe we were not adequately prepared? It was then that Germany undertook to drive us from the seas, stop our commerce, and insult our Navy. Of course, the maintenance of a great navy is an expense and a burden upon our people, but I am thoroughly convinced that had we spent a few million dollars additional for the increase of our Navy back in 1914 and 1915, we never would have been drawn into the World War and thereby would have saved billions of dollars and protected the lives of thousands of our soldiers, who made the supreme sacrifice in that struggle, and saved ourselves from the horrible grief and great expense incident to our participation in the World War.

Germany knew then that we did not have an adequate national defense. She gambled that she could defeat France and England before we could become prepared and enter the struggle—hence the insults she hurled at us. We did get prepared in time to save the Allies but it was a horrible expense in money and property and a great sacrifice in human beings. Proper preparation and defense would have saved us from all this trouble.

I do not know why we should or why we need be involved by these distressing and threatening conditions now prevailing far from our shores; neither do you, but we cannot foresee what may happen and I am unwilling to expose this Nation to the danger of being unprepared. I am happy, indeed, and I know you are, that the present occupant of the White House subscribes to that declaration in our naval policy, which I quoted at the outset of my remarks. He has abandoned the principle of limitation of armament by example and has substituted therefor a program looking to the possession by 1942 of a treaty navy comparable to, if not better than any in all the world. I am sure this Congress will follow him in this policy as it has been following him in all of his great programs since he became the Chief Executive of this Republic. [Applause.]

The expense incident to such a course is great, it is true, and I am not unmindful of that fact and shall discuss it in a moment, but likewise are the budgets of cotreaty powers similarly burdensome. They evidently have no regard for expense and are determined to build vast navies to the treaty strength, because we gave them every opportunity to mark time after the Washington Treaty. We undertook to set the example for the other cotreaty nations by limiting the building program under the treaty and instead of building to the limit that was authorized by that treaty, we did nothing for a number of years, thinking that our course would induce the other nations to do likewise and thereby bring about a real disarmament. But what did they do? Let me give you the figures upon shipbuilding since the Washington Treaty of 1922. It will convince you that we were earnestly leading the way for a real disarmament program but it was not followed by Great Britain, France, Italy, or Japan.

In 1922, which was the year the Washington Treaty was signed, we did not lay down a single ship of any description. Great Britain laid down 4 with a tonnage capacity of 84,140. Japan laid down 34 with a tonnage capacity of 119,441. France laid down 5 with a tonnage capacity of 9,633. Italy laid down 13 with a tonnage capacity of 32,345.

In 1923, we continued our policy and did not build a ship of any description, neither did Great Britain that year, but Japan laid down 11 ships with a tonnage capacity of 14,851. France laid down 29 ships with a tonnage capacity of 49,746. Italy laid down 5 with a tonnage capacity of 19,311.

In 1924, we again did not build any ships of any description. Great Britain that year built 7 with a tonnage capacity of 51,381. Japan laid down 16 vessels with a tonnage capacity of 50,433. France laid down 11 with a tonnage capacity of 26,197. Italy laid down 9 with a tonnage capacity of 7,163.

In 1925, we only laid down 1 ship, that a submarine of a tonnage capacity of 2,710 tons. Great Britain laid down 5 ships with a tonnage capacity of 24,453. Japan laid down 11 with a tonnage capacity of 30,835. France laid down 8 with a tonnage capacity of 19,625; Italy 24 with a tonnage capacity of 41,572.

In 1926 we laid down 7 vessels, 1 a cruiser and the other 6 river gunboats to be used upon the Yangste River in China. These gunboats are exempt from treaty limitation. The seven had a tonnage capacity of only 11,860. That year Great Britain laid down seven ships with a tonnage capacity of 25,444. Japan laid down 13 ships with a tonnage capacity of 21,152; France, 15 ships with a tonnage capacity of 33,187; and Italy, 9 ships with a tonnage capacity of 5,839.

In 1927 we laid down 3 ships with a tonnage capacity of 14,506; England, 13 ships with a capacity of 84,810; Japan, 9 ships with a capacity of 31,450; France, 22 ships with a tonnage capacity of 74,640; and Italy, 17 ships with a tonnage capacity of 34,439.

In 1928 we laid down 6 ships with a tonnage capacity of 54,700; Great Britain, 17 ships with a tonnage capacity of 30,205; Japan, 14 ships with a tonnage capacity of 32,485; France, 18 ships with a tonnage capacity of 46,865; and Italy, 17 ships with a tonnage capacity of 32,821.

In 1929 we did not lay down a single ship. Great Britain laid down 21 with a tonnage capacity of 27,289; Japan, 11 with a tonnage capacity of 22,519; France, 27 with a tonnage capacity of 67,982; and Italy, 13 with a tonnage capacity of 29,241.

In 1930 we laid down 4 ships with a tonnage capacity of 31,240; Great Britain laid down 12 with a tonnage capacity of 19,757; Japan, 6 with a tonnage capacity of 9,635; France, 8 with a tonnage capacity of 31,175; and Italy, 13 with a tonnage capacity of 40,835.

In 1931 we laid down 7 vessels with a tonnage capacity of 56,575; Great Britain, 22 with a tonnage capacity of 43,250; Japan, 11 with a tonnage capacity of 25,952; France, 20 with a tonnage capacity of 59,853; and Italy, 37 with a tonnage capacity of 46,465.

In 1932 we laid down 3 with a tonnage capacity of 4,210; Great Britain, 3 with a tonnage capacity of 3,490; Japan, 2 with a tonnage capacity of 2,427; France, 8 with a tonnage capacity of 39,894; Italy, 16 with a tonnage capacity of 17,406.

In 1933 we laid down 13 ships with a tonnage capacity of 28,600; Great Britain 44, with a tonnage capacity of 95,234; Japan 20, with a tonnage capacity of 38,710; France 5, with a tonnage capacity of 22,714; and Italy that year did not lay down a single ship.

In 1934, up to December 1, we laid down 26 vessels with a tonnage capacity of 94,900; and Great Britain in that year laid down 19, with a tonnage capacity of 36,170; Japan 5, with a tonnage capacity of 12,460; France 1, with a tonnage capacity of 7,500; and Italy 2, with a tonnage capacity of 70,000.

I hope you will take occasion to see for yourselves by consulting the folder in the hearings on this bill inserted between pages 78 and 79. There you will find that from and including the year of the Washington Treaty in 1922 to and including the year of the London Treaty in 1930, the United States laid down only 21 vessels; the British Empire laid down 86 vessels; and Japan laid down 125 vessels. In other words, my colleagues, with seeming utter disregard of the cost, those nations launched upon building programs that left us no alternative but to build ships to catch up and provide ourselves with naval strength such as the treaty permits. We are committed to that policy and our safety demands that we build to it.

Why did we enter into the Washington Treaty and the supplementary and complementary London Treaty if we did not intend to maintain the relative strength therein provided? Of course, we all hoped that it would not be necessary to build the full tonnage allowed in each category, but no one here, I am sure, will contend that it was not the intention of this Government to maintain the treaty-fixed ratio whether at the maximum or some lesser tonnage. Our action for several years clearly demonstrated that we were trying to reduce the tonnage and to induce the other cotreaty nations to do likewise, but in this we failed. They did not take heed of our example. We now find ourselves in the position of having to build, at this time, ships that we failed to build in the years gone by since the treaty was entered into.

I have no thought of condemning the efforts that were made to realize that hope by not building ships with the expectation that the other treaty powers would pursue a similar course. I think it was a laudable thing to do. The world is suffering today because the other powers did not follow our example and do likewise. Possibly we were somewhat slow in discerning the futility of that course, but the aim was reproachless, and I can conceive of no more tangible way for us to have manifested or demonstrated our sincerity of purpose than the modest amount of construction we undertook, as I have indicated, during the years from 1922 to 1930. During the first 3 and in 1 other of those 9 years we did not lay down a single vessel, and in 1 other we started but one submarine.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. With respect to the expenditures the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky has just been speaking of, we spent two or three times as much money on our Navy as Japan spent, or France or Italy, and in every year except one we spent much more money than England. What did we do with this money if we did not use it to lay down ships or in some way prepare against this imaginary war?

Mr. CARY. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken in his statement.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I am not in error. These are the correct figures, and I think some of the members of the committee will verify them.

Mr. CARY. The point I have been trying to present to this House is that during those years we did not spend any money on a building program. I have presented the facts just as they are. It was during those years that we lagged behind while other countries continued their building programs and that is why we find ourselves where we are today. We realize this now and we must necessarily spend more money next year, as we are doing this year, and will have to do for another year or two, in order to make up for what we failed to do during that period of 9 years.

Mr. BIERMANN. I think we are talking about different things. I am talking about the amount of money spent in dollars and cents. There are very few here who can follow this matter in terms of battleships. Ever since the Washington Treaty we have spent more on our Navy than any other nation, with the exception of 1 year, when Great Britain spent more, and I shall ask any member of the committee here to challenge these figures if they can.

Mr. CARY. I do not intend to dispute the gentleman's figures, but, of course, he must realize that we get less Navy per dollar expended because of higher wages and consequently higher material costs.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. For a question; yes.

Mr. MAY. During the same years we were not only not building ships, but we evidenced our good faith in wanting peace, by sinking and destroying several of our important battleships.

Mr. CARY. That is true. We were trying to set an example, hoping that cotreaty and other nations would follow our example, which they did not do.

Mr. DITTER and Mr. MAVERICK rose.

Mr. CARY. I yield first to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman from Kentucky has requested that Members refrain from interrupting him until he has finished his remarks. I believe the gentleman should have that courtesy extended to him by the Members of the House and after he has finished his remarks, I feel certain he will be pleased to yield to those who wish to ask any questions.

Mr. CARY. I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania. I should be pleased to finish my remarks and then I shall answer any questions that I can.

Now as to the cost. There is no getting away from the fact that the cost of the course we are launched upon is staggering. The very capable officer who now occupies our highest naval office, Admiral Standley, just recently has completed a study of the cost of maintaining a treaty navy. In testifying before our subcommittee he stated that it would cost $555,000,000 per year to maintain the Navy at treaty strength, which we are committed to do. We have gotten so accustomed to speaking in terms of billions that I am afraid the mere statement of that amount will not convey its magnitude. It is a tremendous peace-time burden; a burden our people should not have to bear; but until the time comes when the nations of the earth are willing to enter into a real disarmament agreement and stop the folly of rearming there is but one course we can pursue and that is to prepare and maintain an adequate national defense. The cost of maintaining a treaty-strength navy, as testified to by Admiral Standley, exceeds, my friends, the total of all the ordinary expenditures of our Government for everything, Army, Navy, civil departments, pensions, and interest on the public debt, for any year of our Government prior to 1904, save and except only the year 1899 when there was an expansion owing to the War with Spain.

It is an appalling figure to contemplate, Mr. Chairman, when you and I know that we must soon stop this spending orgy and apply all of our faculties and all of our energies to the process of liquidation. This must be true of the other nations of the earth. I hope the time is not far distant when all of the peoples of the earth will direct their thoughts and their energies to this end. The burdens of all the peoples of the earth will then be much lighter.

In this naval bill we are considering our committee has done all that was possible to reduce it and has reported no expenditure that we have not considered absolutely necessary. It concerns so largely our national finances that I feel I should be derelict to my duty if I did not pause to give you some figures with respect thereto.

The time has come when Congress must take stock of our financial condition. There must be a halt to spending wherever it is possible. This we owe to the country.

On November 30, 1934, according to figures but recently published, the public debt had reached a total of $27,760,967,705, all interest bearing save roundly $462,000,000. At the close of the fiscal year 1936 the Budget has estimated that the total indebtedness will be $34,239,000,000, which is comparable to $25,488,000,000 in the fiscal year 1919, in which the World War came to a close and the public debt reached its peak.

Here are some figures that I think deserve the most serious consideration of the Congress. Without any provision whatever for a sinking fund or for debt retirement and allowing only a margin of $120,000,000 for deficiencies and unforeseen demands in regular expenses, every penny of our 1936 regular revenues has been earmarked in the Budget for regular expenditures, as follows:

Expenses of regular departments and establishments	$1,622,000,000
Veterans' pensions and benefits	740,000,000
Interest on national debt	875,000,000
Tax refunds	65,000,000
Total	3,302,000,000

My colleagues, as the chosen representatives of the American people, I ask you, what is the answer to be? How much longer can we go on with this financial strain? I am not prepared to say, but I am prepared to say that the expenditures classed as regular, and this bill is in that category, must be checked. They have got to be watched, curbed, and confined to absolute necessities, and that applies to the measure we are now considering. Not only do I believe it applies to the regular expenditures of the Government but I have come to the conclusion that all expenditures of the Government must be curbed.

We find ourselves in this unfortunate position now; and that is, whatever the cost, our charted course is to maintain that sort of a navy that other powers make it necessary for us to maintain. I believe the American people demand that and will accept nothing less. Therefore it is imperative that we confine the appropriations in this and future bills to nothing but essentials, and we must be prepared to resist the urge that comes from hither and yon, possibly backed by a few telegrams and letters much of the same tenor, to add money here and there, not recommended by the Navy Department or the responsible heads of the Navy Department, and, to be perfectly frank about it, usually of a selfish character, and which would mean, if granted, just that much less money for essential Navy purposes.

The Governments of Great Britain and Japan, however strange it may seem, have shaped our naval policy. The course they have pursued is responsible for the size of the bill I bring to you today. Had they gone along with us after the London Treaty and reduced their building programs, I have no doubt but that the other powers of the earth would have followed, and the mad rush that has gone on for the past few years in expanding navies and increasing armies would not have occurred. The course they have pursued is responsible for that ultimate annual cost figure of the Chief of Naval Operations of $555,000,000; and, of course, allowing for differences in personnel and material costs, their action has imposed and will impose a relatively and proportionately large burden upon their own exchequers.

Mr. Chairman, so long as world conditions obtain as they do today, I am in favor of a navy unequaled by any, for a national defense that will insure the safety of this Republic; but I do hope that the time is not far distant when the peoples of the earth will not continue to submit to the burdens of maintaining vast military and naval establishments, sooner or later to be employed in wrecking and destroying human lives and creating human misery, if the past be any criterion. May we hope that an enlightened world will demand that these vast outlays for military and naval purposes must and will be diverted into channels leading to a richer and a happier civilization. [Applause.]

I can conceive of no nobler step than for America to lead the way. We cannot afford, nor can the other naval powers afford, to lose the benefits arising from the Washington and London Naval Treaties. Despite all the criticism of the sacrifices we made at the Washington Conference, the initiation of the principle of limitation was well worth the price, particularly so when viewed in conjunction with the later complementary treaty concluded at London in 1930. All thinking, unselfish, peace-loving people the world over had hoped that the latter treaty was but the forerunner of successively smaller armament limitations. Any nation that would do aught to prevent the consummation of that end would be guilty of the commission of a despicable crime against its own people and against civilization the world over and ought to be treated as an outlaw by other world powers.

But, Mr. Chairman, whatever the results may be in the future as to disarmament, I am confident I voice the predominant sentiment of the American people when I say we shall not permit any difference in existing ratios to obtain, treaty or no treaty. [Applause.]

The bill I am presenting to you today, calling for an appropriation of $457,786,261 is to a very great extent in that large figure because of the determination of our Government that no difference shall be permitted to obtain as to ratio. We have in vessels, built and building today, all of the tonnage to which we are entitled in the several categories. Our program henceforward, or at least until a new treaty becomes operative, or treaty limitations cease to prevail, which God forbid, will consist solely of the replacement of overage tonnage.

The Budget estimate aggregates $485,443,847. That sum exceeds the amount currently available for 1935 by $174,879,498. Fully 85 percent of that increase is responsive either to legislation or to the present policy of expending our Navy to treaty proportions, which is contemplated by existing international agreements and by the terms of legislation in consequence of which funds were placed at the disposal of the Chief Executive for employment in naval building programs and by the terms of the Vinson-Trammell Act of the last Congress, authorizing the provision of funds to build and maintain, in an under-age status, the whole number of our treaty quota of naval vessels and such number of aircraft as may be deemed commensurate with a treaty navy. Not a single penny of the increase may be said to be influenced by any thought of the imminence of war.

I shall analyze that increase for you. That portion which is attributable entirely to the expansion of the Navy afloat and in the air is constituted as follows:

New ships, building and to be built, 54 all told	$95,480,666
Additional aircraft over and above replacement aircraft, number, 273	12,500,000
Ordnance for additional aircraft, over and above replacement aircraft, now in course of procurement under allotment of the appropriation "Emergency relief and public works, 1934 and 1935"	1,200,000
Additional pilots	3,198,461
Additional enlisted men—11,000 total but 5,500 average	5,463,450
Additional midshipmen	531,492
Total	118,374,169

In addition to these we find the following outstanding items contributing to the Budget increase:

For raising salaries to the 100-percent level	$13,133,403
For replacement airplanes (282) and increased maintenance and operating charges	17,380,194
For a special ordnance project	5,000,000
For ordnance implementation of the Marine Corps	800,000
For public works, for which no regular annual appropriation has been made since the fiscal year 1934	4,500,000

That is about as much detail as I see any occasion to burden you with. It accounts for the major items. The remainder is quite widely distributed and is assignable to a larger operating force plan, to work and procurements deferred through lack of funds, in part traceable to the administratively enforced economies in the fiscal year 1934, and to increased costs of materials.

It is not an exorbitant budget; it is not an extravagant budget, considering all the circumstances. On the contrary, it is a budget in nearly all directions composed of essential items and I should pronounce it as very well balanced.

Your committee has effected reductions totaling $27,657,586. To be perfectly frank about it, however, $19,690,000 of that amount is a mere postponement. By that I mean if you adopt our recommendations it will be necessary next year to appropriate $19,690,000 of the amount we have deducted. That bears out what I have just said respecting the naval budget. I seriously doubt if a greater reduction could be made without hurting or without running counter to our treaty-navy aims. I shall come to that deferment of appropriations in a moment.

You will find a table commencing on page 4 of our report in which is stated every money change the committee has made in the Budget estimate, with a brief statement of the reasons for its action. I do not propose to take your time to discuss all of those changes. There are about six major propositions involved in the entire bill, and I shall endeavor to make clear to you the basis of our action with respect thereto. I shall take them up not in the order of their importance but as they first occur in the bill before you.

AVIATION CADETS

The House on March 27, last month, passed H. R. 5577, being a bill to provide for aviation cadets in the Naval Reserve. The bill was reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY], from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and was very ably presented by him and the distinguished Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I think it is a splendid measure and that it will get us in a most effective and efficient way aviators that we will sorely need as our air program develops. By the induction of men of the right caliber into this service, in the years to come I can see that they will constitute the leaders of commercial aviation in this country.

As the Budget came to us, it provided for developing 348 enlisted men as pilots and carried the money for so doing. The aviation-cadet arrangement was later determined upon as a better solution and will cost, for the first year, but relatively little more. My judgment is that the advantages of the new arrangement fully warrant the added cost.

For training enlisted men as pilots the Budget carries $2,714,250 under "Aviation, Navy"; and $389,009 under "Pay of the Navy."

The cadet arrangement becomes entirely an expense to the Reserve appropriation, and we have transferred those two amounts to the Reserve appropriation and added $124,573, or a total of $3,288,252, which is the sum estimated necessary to pay the cost. In connection with the amount transferred from "Aviation, Navy", I feel I should call your attention to the fact that the Bureau of Aeronautics does not willingly relinquish $1,468,650, for the reason that the Bureau's original estimates were reduced by the Bureau of the Budget, but the committee does not understand that the Budget cut was intended to disturb the amount allocated in the Bureau's estimate for training enlisted pilots.

As to the transfer from "Pay of the Navy" of $389,009, but $189,776 of that amount was suggested by the Department, the difference of $199,233 represents the amount included in the estimates for the pay, subsistence, clothing, and transportation of 348 enlisted men which it was originally planned to train as aviators. Since they are not to be used for that purpose they would therefore be surplus to the increase in enlisted strength of 11,000 men for which the estimates include provision, so we have used that amount to help pay the cost of the aviation-cadet arrangement.

RESERVE FORCES

From the standpoint of the aviation branch of the Naval Reserve the aviation-cadet plan will supply a long-felt need. There should be some expansion in the number of enlisted men identified with Reserve aviation, and the committee would expect for that deficiency to be taken care of as soon as a plan can be worked out, looking to the day when aviation cadets will begin to pass into an inactive status. For the sea-going branch of the Reserve provision is made for drill pay—48 drills—and training-duty pay for all fleet reservists now enrolled; and there is a new provision in the Budget which the committee has approved for training 122 officers and 250 men of the volunteer branch of the Reserve.

Very plainly, I will say to you, that this budget does not satisfy the Naval Reserve Officers' Association, but we cannot permit our Budget to be written by self-centered interests, and I mean no disrespect when I say that; but such interests are not concerned with nor do they have any responsibility in connection with the fiscal policy of the administration; and if we should permit ourselves to be led by such influences I do not know what the result might be. The committee talked the matter over very frankly with the Chief of Naval Operations. He maintains an appropriation priority list, and he told us that if we contemplated adding money to the Budget he was prepared to suggest many very important uses of much higher priority. There is considerable confusion about the various Reserve forces. They are upon a different status as to pay and clothing, and our committee is trying to work out some uniform system for reservists. What we have done is this: We have asked the admiral, and he has agreed to appoint a board of officers to go into the whole question of the Reserve forces and to give us the benefit of the board's ideas and conclusions and his recommendations thereon at the next session. We think the committee can then act more intelligently upon this subject.

CRITICAL RAW MATERIAL

You will find on page 32 of the bill an entirely new proposition. I am sure it will appeal to every Member of Congress who believes in military and naval preparedness. All of you know how dependent this Nation is upon foreign sources for certain absolutely essential materials used in the production of armor, armament, and ammunition. That dependence is because the demand has not justified proper domestic development. It is believed that we have the resources within the continental limits of the United States and Alaska. The extent, however, is only partially known. The field has not been thoroughly explored. This committee feels we are pursuing a most incongruous course in building up military and naval establishments, whose very ability to function may depend upon the immediate availability of an adequate supply of what are spoken of as "critical raw materials" or certain strategic minerals, the foreign supply of which could be cut off immediately. We are therefore initiating a plan with the view to finding out if we may not establish complete independence as to such materials which we are now looking to foreign markets for.

I will not dwell upon this subject, but merely bring it to your attention, because it had its inception with our distinguished colleague and committee member, Governor SCRUGHAM, of Nevada, who is an authority upon this and many other technical questions. I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, what a tremendous asset it has been to this committee to have as a member a man of Governor SCRUGHAM's ability and having the technical knowledge and training, both in civil and military life, which he possesses, but I cannot stop there. I have had the most able assistance and the finest cooperation from my other colleagues on the committee—the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLEOD], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. Unfortunately, our esteemed friend and colleague, Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia, was precluded on account of illness from assisting us with our problems. I owe each of these gentlemen a debt of gratitude. There are no finer men anywhere, and it has been a pleasure to work with them.

Getting back to the raw material proposition, I am sure Governor SCRUGHAM will give you all the enlightenment there is to give touching the committee's proposal.

PUBLIC WORKS

With the advent of the Public Works Administration and its appropriative powers Navy public works have been financed very largely out of relief moneys. As of December 1 last, the Bureau of Yards and Docks had received grants from that quarter aggregating $27,832,072. Despite the fact that it now appears that the Navy may participate in additional funds provided for the relief of unemployment, the Budget includes $4,500,000 of specific appropriations for projects, the desirable character of which is not questioned, but which for the most part are so involved with P. W. A. that your committee is unwilling to recommend to you direct appropriations until we may know as to the projects in that category just what the procedure as to their future financing is going to be.

You Members will agree with me, I am sure, that no project should be undertaken with a P. W. A. allotment not adequate for its completion; nor should an inadequate allotment be applied for or granted. We find in these public-work estimates projects started with P. W. A. funds which will not be brought to a close with the direct appropriations we are now asked to appropriate. Two of the projects were started with P. W. A. funds and there is an application pending with P. W. A. right now for funds in addition to those we are asked to appropriate. I am opposed to this manner of providing public funds. It should be stopped.

Because of that state of affairs we have refused to recommend an item of $2,750,000 for dredging and harbor and channel improvement at Pearl Harbor; an item of $225,000 on account of the radio station at Lualualei, Hawaii, and an item of $175,000 on account of the radio station at Summit, Canal Zone.

The dredging and harbor-improvement project is an enlargement of one upon which we expended $6,000,000 about 5 years ago, which was authorized by the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Navy concluded that the completed original project did not answer its requirements and has proceeded to expand it with an initial allotment of $3,000,000 granted by P. W. A. We are now asked for $2,750,000 additional. There is an application pending with P. W. A. for a further allotment of $2,203,000 for providing mooring facilities when the additional dredging shall have been completed, and we are told that even then there will remain work unprovided for estimated to cost $1,900,000. The committee must have more information upon these items of so great expense before recommending approval of same.

There is another phase of this matter that is somewhat disturbing, and that is there is no competition for doing the work. The Hawaiian Dredging Co. is the sole bidder for such part of the work as neither the Army nor the Navy has the facilities to perform. The committee is opposed to any further money being made available for this project until it can assure the House that such portion thereof as may be let to private contract will be at cost plus a reasonable profit, as determined by Army engineers.

The radio-station items to which I have referred are objectionable upon grounds very similar to the dredging item about which I have just spoken.

Three of the public-works projects have no legislative authorization, and, under our rules, the committee is unable to include provision for them. These are the items touching Thatchers Island, Mass.; Folly Island, S. C.; and San Juan, P. R.

We are recommending for your favorable consideration an item without Budget support for equipping the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., to undertake the construction of two destroyers instead of one. The unit cost of the lighter type of the destroyers we are now building is $6,155,000. The committee is advised that the saving that would ensue from building two vessels in the same yard simultaneously would range between 6 percent and 12 percent, which would seem to be ample justification for an expenditure of $300,000 at Charleston, with a saving of such proportions in view.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky has consumed 1 hour.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 20 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

AVIATION

Mr. CARY. The aviation estimate came to us this year under two heads. Provision for projected airplane procurements of replacement character was included under the regular aviation appropriation head, and additional procurements, looking to building to the goal of 1,910 planes, exclusive of reserve planes, as contemplated by the Vinson-Trammel Act, were provided for under the head of "Increase of the Navy." Combined, the estimates call for a total of $52,000,000, which is quite a handsome sum of money. Eight million five hundred thousand dollars of that sum, however, will be needed to satisfy prior year contract authorizations, leaving for new obligations $43,500,000, which works out to be about $13,600,000 in excess of the amount available the present year if we take into consideration pay restoration and procurements being made under an allotment of $12,902,772 of the appropriation contained in the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935.

Of the total amount estimated, $26,500,000 is allocated to the procurement of 282 replacement planes and 273 additional planes, or 555 planes all told. The Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics has indicated to the committee that delivery under this program will extend into the fiscal year 1937 and that for that reason $5,000,000 of the amount estimated will not need to be appropriated at this time. Consequently, the committee has substituted contract authorization for that amount of cash, which shows as a reduction in the estimate and which, of course, it is, but at the same time it is just a deferment.

Besides this deduction the committee has transferred $2,714,250 to the reserve appropriation in connection with the aviation-cadet proposition, about which I have already spoken.

The real reductions are in two projects and total $3,764,400.

The first and larger one has reference to spare engines, spare parts, and spare planes. The estimate includes an amount for the procurement of 25 percent spares. The committee feels that that is too high. The art is developing so rapidly that it is very evident we would be accumulating a lot of spares for planes that will fade out of the picture by reason of obsolescence before they would be needed. We have allowed for spares on a 10-percent basis and have taken off $3,180,000 in consequence of that course.

Lighter-than-air funds yielded the remainder of the actual cut we have made in the aviation estimates. As the estimates came to Congress, $1,262,200 was included therein for naval lighter-than-air activities. The equipment we then had is detailed on page 524 of the hearings. Included, of course, was the ill-fated Macon. The complete loss of that ship presented an entirely different situation. The estimates included funds for its operation, care, and maintenance, and for its home base—the newly completed station at Sunnyvale, Calif., where we have an investment of approximately $5,000,000. The estimates, apart from pay and allowances of commissioned and enlisted personnel, included something like $760,100 for and on account of the Macon, as follows:

Photographic equipment and supplies	$1,800
Maintenance and operation of Sunnyvale and Macon	546,300
Helium and helium containers	85,000
Replacement equipment for Macon	100,000
Mooring masts	5,000
Experimentation with airship engines	18,000
Development of instruments	4,000
Total	760,100

The Department is proposing to give up but $275,800 of that amount. The difference of $484,300 it is proposing to use as follows:

It wishes to continue Sunnyvale in operation as a heavier-than-air station to take some of the load off of North Island, at San Diego. That will cost $360,000.

It proposes to concentrate its nonrigid activities at Lakehurst, where it is also continuing to experiment with the Los Angeles, secured to a mooring mast. We have three nonrigid left, one being at Sunnyvale. The suggestion is that the original allocation for Lakehurst, $205,700, be increased by $34,400.

It is proposing to increase the original allocation for airship development from $55,000 to $75,000, and besides a new nonrigid, estimated to cost $120,000, for which the original estimates made provision, the modified proposal is to build another at a cost of $70,000.

This well illustrates how difficult it is for the Government to get out once it has entered upon any field of activity.

My friends, I still believe in the potential value of lighter-than-air ships in the commercial field but, frankly, I am not willing to concede that they have any value to us for naval purposes, and I may say that I have support for that view of some mighty good naval judgment. I feel the same way about these little nonrigids, which some die-hards think have value for coastal patrol purposes. I would not give 1 good airplane for 10 of them.

My thought would be for the Navy to step out of the picture, lock, stock, and barrel; and if the Government wishes to continue to aid in developing the commercial possibilities of airships, let us turn it over to the Department of Commerce, the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, or some other civil agency, and subtract the expense from the naval budget.

Our proposal in this bill is not as liberal as the Department's suggested modification of the original estimate; but, in my judgment, we have been more than generous, and I am more afraid of criticism on that score than of being charged with parsimony. We have reduced the estimate $584,000, or $308,600 more than proposed by the Department. We have refused the increase of $34,300 for Lakehurst, holding to the original estimate figure of $205,700; we have reduced the revised estimate for Sunnyvale by $154,300, allowing the same amount there as at Lakehurst; and we have allowed $70,000 for building a small nonrigid, instead of one costing $120,000, originally estimated for, and two, costing in all $190,000, as subsequently proposed.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY

I shall turn now to new ship construction, which is responsible for more than half of the increase carried in this bill. The estimates under this head, as modified by a supplemental recommendation, total $136,100,000. That sum divides in this way:

We are building in Government and private yards today 68 vessels of war. Two of that number are small gunboats and are not treaty-controlled ships. Of treaty vessels the number is 66.

Thirty-two of the sixty-eight vessels are being built under an allotment of $238,000,000 of the original National Industrial Recovery appropriation of $3,300,000,000, the act authorizing such appropriation having provided for the application of a portion thereof, at the discretion of the President, for constructing naval vessels "within the terms and/or limits established by the London Naval Treaty of 1930 and of aircraft required therefor." These 32 vessels are not involved in this bill at all, although I may say that our information is that the original allotment for their construction will fall short of doing the job completely by $55,508,000.

Omitting such vessels, which include the 2 gunboats I have mentioned, leaves 36 vessels now under way.

Sixteen of this number have been started under appropriations carried in prior naval appropriation acts, and six of them will be completed during the present fiscal year. On account of the remaining 10 there is included in the Budget $51,542,500. Included in that figure, however, I should say, is a relatively small amount under ordnance for some finishing-up expenses on account of five other vessels now classed as built.

The remaining 20 of the 36 vessels building, to which the estimate applies, were commenced under an allotment of $23,630,000 of the appropriation, "Emergency relief and public works, 1934 and 1935." The Budget includes $55,177,500 for carrying forward work on those vessels.

Therefore, for and on account of existing construction, 30 vessels, the Budget carries $106,720,000, in addition to which we are advised that there will be expended during the next fiscal year $86,830,719 on account of the 32 vessels being built out of the allotment of the first relief appropriation. That makes a total expenditure program of $193,550,000 for the fiscal year 1936.

Then, of course, as I indicated early in my remarks, the Budget includes $29,380,000 for the initiation of work on 24 additional vessels, making a total Budget recommendation for new construction of $136,100,000.

On account of all these programs, in addition to the amount in the 1936 Budget, we are advised that appropriations in excess of $322,000,000 will be needed for their completion.

I have told you of the course we are proposing with respect to the new units the Budget contemplates commencing, and as I then indicated, we have subtracted $16,690,000 because that amount is all that is necessary to begin the construction of the 24 additional vessels and will adequately carry on the building program. In addition to that, we have disallowed $615,000 included in the estimates for charging the pay of certain employees to regular appropriations which is now lodged as a charge against the first allotment of relief money, and where it is rightfully lodged in our judgment. These two changes, plus a transfer of $1,200,000 for aviation ordnance from "Increase of the Navy" to "Ordnance and Ordnance Stores" constitute the only deductions we have made in the shipbuilding estimates.

EDUCATION OF OFFICERS FOR STAFF DUTIES

There is a matter that came to our notice during the consideration of this bill that does not immediately affect naval expenditures, or at least, no more than negligibly so, and I feel that I should comment upon it before concluding.

As you all know, naval officer personnel is divided into two major groups—the line and the staff. The first is a whole but the second subdivides into the Construction Corps, the Supply Corps, the Corps of Civil Engineers, and the Medical Corps. That enumeration will suffice, for what I shall have to say applies to the first three corps, that is, the group that builds our ships, the group that purchases and disburses and accounts for money and stores, and the group charged with naval shore construction and maintenance.

The law provides that—"Midshipmen on graduation shall be commissioned ensigns in the Navy, or may be assigned by the Secretary of the Navy to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the Marine Corps or staff corps of the Navy."

Up until about a year ago the practice had been to commission graduates directly into the Supply Corps. Entrants into the Construction Corps and the Corps of Civil Engineers were chosen from Naval Academy graduates who had been at sea following graduation from 18 months to inside of 2 years. Men volunteering and designated were sent to technical schools for postgraduate instruction and were commissioned in their appropriate corps after or just prior to the lapse of 3 years from date of graduation. Such men, and the men going directly into the Supply Corps henceforth were specialists.

Under a new policy the Department has set up, without even consulting anyone connected with the legislative branch of the Government, so far as I know, supply officers will not come directly out of Annapolis. Supply officers, construction officers, and civil-engineer officers of the future will be composed of men who have served in the line up to and including the grade of lieutenant commander and who may volunteer for such postgraduate instruction as will equip them to enter upon the duties of officers of such corps, who, upon the completion of such special instruction elect to become permanently identified with such corps,

They may be men out of Annapolis as much as 10 years or more.

Let me read you a provision in legislation which the Department is now seeking in connection with this new arrangement. Listen—

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to transfer and appoint officers of the line of the Navy, not above the grade of lieutenant commander, to the corresponding grade in the Construction Corps, Civil Engineer Corps, or Supply Corps, without regard to the age of the officers so transferred and appointed.

Mr. Chairman, the proposal borders on the ridiculous to me. I have not yet heard one good common-sense reason advanced for it. Every man on this floor knows Admiral Peoples. He is a staff officer and is at the head of the Navy Supply Corps. I maintain that the Navy has the most efficient purchasing and stores accounting system in the Government. That system was initiated by Admiral Peoples at a period in his career when under this new proposal he would just be beginning to learn the rudiments of the duties of a supply officer. Let me read you what the former chairman of this committee, the Honorable William A. Ayres, of Kansas, had to say about this proposition in a letter he wrote to the Navy Department when it was called to his attention after the last appropriation bill had been disposed of. This is what Mr. Ayres said:

I sincerely hope that, aside from requiring that all appointees of the staff corps, save the Medical Corps, be Naval Academy graduates, no action will be taken requiring service in advance of postgraduate instruction necessary to fit candidates for assuming the duties of the corps selected and appointed to upon graduation. I am irrevocably opposed to disturbing the staff corps. I see in the proposal an effort to compromise with those who entertain the amalgamation idea. If all officers, line and staff, be similarly indoctrinated, as they would be if taken from Annapolis, I think that would be about as far as it would be practicable to go without interfering with efficient and economical procedure. This is a day and age of specialists. It is becoming more and more so. The tendency should be to make each specialist a better specialist. I am rather skeptical that the proposed procedure will work otherwise. It is my judgment that the Navy's high standing in the business world today is entirely owing to its efficient staff corps. These corps are efficient, not alone because of the inherent fine qualities of the individuals composing them but to that intangible essential—corps pride, corps spirit. If it be not preserved and fostered, in my judgment, irreparable harm will be done. I am fearful that the proposal is a backward step.

Of course, it is a day and age of specialists, and I do not propose to see, without protesting to the utmost, these splendid, efficient, naval staff corps rendered less efficient or detracted from one iota.

As I said in my report, staff men are purely specialists. They should become specialists just as early in their careers as may be possible and not wait to begin when they should be in the prime of their careers as specialists. The plan ignores efficiency and has no regard for economy, and I hope the House will join with us and support our proposal on page 8 of the bill designed to stop this unwarranted scheme.

Mr. Chairman, that concludes what I have to say at this time. The committee has given a great deal of time to this bill, having in mind at all times the needs of the Navy and a proper safeguard for the Treasury. Some phases of it I might change, if left to me alone. You may feel the same way, but, as a whole, I think it is fair and will meet the approval of the Navy Department and the country. I am sure I may say that it has the endorsement of all my colleagues on the committee who collaborated so diligently in its preparation, both Democrats and Republicans. I want to again express my appreciation to them for their splendid cooperation.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARY. I yield.

Mr. MAVERICK. The questions I want to ask are for the purpose of getting information, and not to criticize the able gentleman from Kentucky, because the gentleman has a job that I am glad I have not. I think it is a horrible thing when we spend this much money for war preparations; and will the gentleman explain to this Committee the difference in use between the submarine, the destroyer, the cruiser, and the battleship, and how much money is going to be spent on submarines? I ask this question for the reason that during the war Germany used submarines very successfully, and I am informed with respect to the use of battleships that battleships can be easily bombed and that we are wasting money in building battleships. I do not know myself, and I am asking this as a conscientious question.

Mr. CARY. The gentleman has propounded a very technical question, and one that would require considerable time to answer. As to the building program, there is set out in the report the number of each kind of war vessel we are going to build and the unit cost of each type. The whole program is one of replacement of over-age tonnage.

Mr. MAVERICK. I think that is a question that ought to come up, and I now want to ask my friend another question.

The gentleman said he thought our Navy should be the mistress of the seas and that it should be unequaled by any other nation. I think we should have a Navy for defense; but why should we be the mistress of the seas? We do not want to have our Navy all over the world getting us into trouble. Why should we be the mistress of the seas?

Mr. CARY. I do not think we ought to have it all over the world. I think the gentleman agrees with me. We know that this is the greatest Nation on earth, and we ought to have the greatest measure of national defense, because we have more to defend. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. It has more to defend in one place than another.

Mr. CARY. We have a great coast line on the east and also on the west, which makes necessary a great Navy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to make a detailed answer to my good and distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum present. The gentleman from Massachusetts has a message that ought to be listened to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and two Members present—a quorum. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that it is not my purpose to make a detailed reply at this time to my good and distinguished friend from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. That will come later. However, I do feel some statements he made must not go unchallenged at this time.

In the last few days it has been apparent there is a studied effort being made to draw across the trail of an honest fight to save a great industry, the red herring of partisanship and sectionalism.

I do not know whether the gentleman who spoke this afternoon speaks for the administration or not, but the applause which was accorded his remarks from the Democratic side of the House might lead me to believe this to be the case.

If that is so I am sorry. I am sorry for the hundreds of thousands of toilers who work in the textile factories. I am sorry for the small-crop cotton grower of the South. I am very sorry for the South, because if the policy the gentleman from North Carolina is advocating continues very long there can be no real future for the South.

We have heard how the cotton-export trade of the South has vanished. Mark my words, if the process tax is continued as it now stands, the South inevitably must return to a civilization built upon a crop of 6,000,000 bales of cotton.

I am sorry if this is to be the policy of the administration. I want to state most emphatically we who have been fighting for the preservation of a great industry; we who have been fighting for two great sections of the country, North and South, are not moved by partisan spirit.

It could not be partisan spirit that moved Senator GEORGE to rise in the other Chamber and request this processing tax be removed from the cotton industry and be taken from the huge relief fund, where it belongs.

There can be only one justification for this tax. The one purpose for which we could raise money is for the relief of the cotton growers of the South. If it is a relief problem, one industry should not bear a pay-roll tax of 50 percent in order to give relief to the distressed farmers of the South. It is too burdensome and cannot bring anything except ruin.

I am neither sectional nor partisan, nor am I opposed to the southern cotton grower. I read now several paragraphs from a speech that I made on March 18 last:

> I am neither sectional nor partisan in my consideration of this problem. The cotton grower and the cotton spinner, whether they be in the North or the South, have a common bond of interest. It is decidedly to the benefit of each that the other shall be prosperous. If the cotton grower obtains a fair price for his cotton, he will be prosperous and he will have the purchasing power that will materially contribute to the activity of the cotton spinner. If the price is too high, beyond the figure which the consumer will pay, there will be a lessened demand and the grower and spinner alike will suffer.
> If the cotton spinner is unduly penalized, if he is forced out of business, the grower loses a home customer which he will never replace. If the price is forced beyond a figure which will permit the export trade, there is sure to be an economic crisis in the South, because more than half of the cotton grown has in the past found its way to foreign countries.

Mine surely is not a partisan appeal, and I repeat, Senator GEORGE is not making a partisan appeal; Senator SMITH, of South Carolina, is not making a partisan appeal, when he opposes this tax. The Senator from North Carolina, Senator REYNOLDS, is not acting as a partisan when he opposes the tax on the cotton-spinning industry; nor is the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], nor the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], nor the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]. These are all Democratic Senators. They know this policy is one which is going to bring disaster and destruction to a great industry in this country. The southern Senators know some more equitable solution is available, one which will help the cotton grower and not bring ruin to five times the number aided.

I said in the beginning, it looked as if a studied effort was being made to involve this great fight for an industry in a partisan and sectional strife. I deplore that and denounce it with all my vigor. The effort will not prevail because there is no basis to support it.

A few days ago the Secretary of Agriculture went to Brunswick, Maine, and enunciated a similar appeal to that which was uttered in the House today. Mr. Wallace made a sectional speech. He is trying to arouse sectional hatreds in this country; trying to fan hostility against New England to advance his own unsound policies and unwise experiments. If I were selfish, if I were only concerned about trying to build up the Republican Party, I would rejoice in these utterances. This attitude is certain to aid the Republican Party, but that is not what I am primarily interested in. I want to save an industry.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. To ask who the gentleman thinks is the better judge of conditions in New England, the gentleman himself and others from his State representing textile districts, or the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who spoke this morning, and the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, to whom the gentleman is now referring?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There is no question about New England. I do not think any Democrat from New England will stand on the floor and say he favors the cotton-processing tax, but I want to emphasize that this is not a New England fight. There are just as many people in North Carolina who are heart and soul in favor of the transfer of this cotton-tax burden from the cotton industry. The North Carolina mills are closing just as well as they are in New England. It is not only the New England mills, but the southern mills as well, that are in jeopardy. That is why there is this alliance which is deplored today in the House. Unity in action has been brought about between the North and the South—between all engaged in the textile industry—all are fighting shoulder to shoulder, because they realize only through unity of action can a great industry be saved.

A committee has been appointed by the President to review the troubles of the textile industry. One can only pray for the textile industry. The committee is to inquire not only into the processing tax, but also into Japanese imports, which is a vital matter. Who is on that committee? There is the little Caesar who heads the Department of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace. He is a member of the committee. Did anyone ever know when he uttered a statement which would give any protectionist a single hope?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. When Secretary Wallace appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means he stated that in his opinion any American industry or activity that could not stand on its own bottom and meet foreign competition should go out of business and go into something else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has made a contribution against Secretary Wallace. You can go through all of the magazines and the newspapers, wherever his quotations are carried, and you will find the same line of thought runs in all of his statements. Then we have Secretary Hull as a member of the committee. No finer or more beloved gentleman lives in this country than Secretary Hull. I served with him in the House and I have great admiration for the man. I know his honesty and sincerity; but I ask anyone here if he would ever expect a ray of hope to a protectionist to emanate from Secretary Hull?

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Not now; I want to continue further. This administration is doing a tremendous injustice to the textile industry. A year ago we had a very profitable trade with the Philippine Islands. Enough textiles were sold in those distant oriental islands to keep the mills in a city like Fall River going full time for 1 year. Lately Japanese products have been pouring into the islands until the American trade has almost vanished. The Filipinos realized they must buy some goods from America if they are to sell to America. They knew it was not a wholesome situation for either them or the United States, and they asked that a ban be placed on Japanese imports. The island government would have enacted the legislation which would have saved this rich market for American goods.

The State Department sent out a message with the result that nothing has ever been done and the outlook is dubious. More American jobs vanish daily and nothing is done about it. As Japanese goods pour into the Philippines, it is going to be difficult, if not almost impossible, to recover the lost trade. The people of that distant island will become accustomed to the cheap Japanese goods and will not want to pay the price the American mills must obtain. We are not whining, as Mr. Wallace said in Brunswick, Maine; we are not complaining; we are fighting for our very existence. I contend every man has a right to fight for the preservation of his own people. It ill becomes any man to try to curb this right; particularly one who champions special privilege.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Now that the gentleman from North Carolina is present, I just want to say that the gentleman from North Carolina referred to this not being just a recent affair, but went back some 8 or 10 years. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] knows as well as I do that the reason those mills left New England and went south was the low wages in the South, the long hours of labor down there, and until we got the N. R. A. and the 40-hour week, we did not get any break at all in the North. The ones which stayed there are the ones we are trying to protect today.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is exactly right. I might add that as the barriers become more equal, all of us have an opportunity to live.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; just for a second.

Mr. FIESINGER. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question that is in no sense a criticism of his argument. The gentleman advocated putting upon the Government the process tax on cotton. Would the gentleman also do that with wheat and hogs and all these other things?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have not gone into that.

Mr. FIESINGER. I simply asked that——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Now, I am going to answer the gentleman in my own way. I have not gone into detail concerning those other commodities. There are some commodities which might pass that tax along to the consumer. I do not know as to that. That would be a matter for study. I know as far as the cotton-textile industry is concerned at present it is impossible to pass that burden along to the consumer. Why? Because other commodities that are competing with cotton do not carry a processing tax. The result is there is a greater demand for rayon or some substitute which the purchaser can secure.

Mr. FIESINGER. The reason I ask the question is that I have in my district concerns which process hogs alone. They claim they are being forced out of business because of the processing tax. I have a situation right now that is very disturbing in my district because of the processing tax. I wanted to know, therefore, whether the gentleman advocated putting all processing taxes upon the Government?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, I do not know about the hog situation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it obvious that the administration is not only throwing overboard the New England Governors, Democrats as well as Republicans, but also southern Democrats who are fighting to save their mills and the markets for the raw-cotton workers? Over 10,000,000 people are dependent upon the cotton industry.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I will say to the lady that when we go to the White House—if we are ever permitted to go—we will present a petition signed by more than 70 Members of Congress. In that petition will be signatures from more than 19 States, and they include both Democrats and Republicans alike. There is going to be no special group go to the White House. Anyone who is honest and sincere about winning this fight will be privileged to come. If we are thrown overboard, it certainly means a rebuff to a great part of our population and to Democrats and Republicans alike.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I was going to make a suggestion in connection with the question which the gentleman from Ohio asked the gentleman from Massachusetts. The purpose of the processing tax on wheat, corn, and hogs as compared with and contrasted to the processing tax on cotton, as I understand it, was to secure a reduction of acreage. Acreage reduction is practical in connection with corn and wheat because the total production is not greatly disproportionate to the domestic demand. But there is no intention upon the part of the cotton farmer, by means of the processing tax or otherwise, to curtail his production to such an extent that he would produce only for the domestic market.

The cotton farmer must rely upon the foreign market, else the whole Cotton Belt goes broke. So there is a reasonable justification for the processing tax on corn and wheat which cannot be asserted with respect to the processing tax on cotton.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Cotton is dependent primarily upon the export trade.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; briefly.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the Southern cotton grower is compelled to reduce his acreage to meet local demands it follows naturally that he will be driven into other lines of agriculture in competition with the northern farmer. It is to our interest, therefore, to see that he is protected just as much as the farmer of any other section.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I must decline to yield further.

Mr. GIFFORD. It was stated earlier in the day that the entire Democratic delegation from New England called on Secretary Roper. I think the Republicans would have been glad to join them, would they not?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The Republicans from New England will join in any effort, no matter who sponsors it, that will improve conditions in the textile industry.

Mr. GIFFORD. It was made to appear as a partisan question. The other question I want to ask the gentleman is whether he can recall at any time or place during these debates that any New Englander has said anything to the effect that he did not want the farmers to have the benefit they derive from the processing tax, whether what he said was not simply that he wanted it paid some other way? We would vote for any method that would give them this money in any other way.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have been very careful to say on every occasion that I believed there was genuine distress among the cotton farmers of the South; that these people should be given assistance; but I have said also the present policy of affording relief, the present method of administration by the levying of processing taxes, is not wholesome or constructive. In the end it means disaster. The cotton farmer can get a dole now, but he will find eventually he has sold his birthright for a mere pittance.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I will try to get the gentleman some additional time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I cannot yield.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7672, the Navy Department appropriation bill, 1936, had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1572. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7672, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rose primarily to speak about the question of Japanese imports.

That was my main purpose until diverted by the address of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The country in the last 6 weeks has been aroused to the serious situation which confronts the textile industry and many other industries because of the heavy importation of goods from Japan. It is astounding, the importations, which deprive the American worker of his chance at a job, should be allowed to continue unchecked. The figures have been given out showing where in 30 days the textile imports this year were in excess of 10,000,000 yards, or 50 percent, more than they were for the entire period of last year.

It would appear as if these startling statistics from the Government's own Bureau would arouse someone in this administration to a sense of the duty owed to the American people.

In a previous speech I pointed out the Japanese invasion was a menace to many other industries as well as to the textile industry. I spoke of the danger to the silverware, jewelry, and allied metal industries. I referred to the heavy imports of tennis rackets, rubber-soled shoes, thermos bottles, toys, paper novelties, gloves, flashlights, incandescent lamps, britannia ware, pencils, rubber goods, and many other articles which come into conflict with American prosperity.

Today I want to go into more detail concerning the silver and silver-plated hollow-ware importations. In 1928 they were a minor factor in American trade. In that year less than 1 percent of the total sales of silver-plated hollow ware in this country represented goods from foreign factories. During the last 5 years, and particularly in the last 2 years, they have jumped sensationally. In 1933 the Government figures showed approximately 15.3 percent of the total sales of silver-plated hollow ware represented goods of foreign manufacture, and, for the most part, representing Japan. In 1934 the foreign manufacturers had acquired nearly 25 percent of the home market, and this year there has been a continued upward move of imports. In August of 1934, the last month for which figures are available to compare both home and foreign industry, 42.4 percent of the goods sold in America were of foreign manufacture.

Is it any wonder, I ask, that the silver factories of Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Rhode Island, Maryland, Ohio, New Jersey, and Illinois are operating on short schedules and the skilled workmen are crowding the bread lines begging for an E. R. A. job? These figures may appear small as compared to other American industries, but they are alarming to those engaged in this one. And we must not forget the greatness of American industrial life rests upon the many thousands of small industries, all contributing materially to the upbuilding of the Nation.

It is interesting to note the progress of the Japanese in this highly specialized field. In 1929 they shipped into the United States silver-plated hollow ware to the value of $8,000; the United Kingdom sent $118,000; and all other countries $16,000; making total imports of $142,000. In 1930 the Japanese share of the trade was $28,000; the United Kingdom, $226,000; and other countries, $16,000; total, $270,000.

In 1931 there was a stopping of some of the gaps and a downward trend in imports was noted. That year the Japanese sent in $26,000; the United Kingdom, $188,000; and other countries, $19,000; making a total of $233,000.

There was a continuing decline in 1932 in the total, which was $209,000; but not so with the Japanese imports, which doubled as they began their drive for the American market. That year Japan sent here $47,000 worth; United Kingdom, $149,000; and other countries, $13,000.

In 1933 the Japanese sent here $209,000 worth of goods, an increase of nearly 500 percent. The United Kingdom imports increased to $209,000, and the other countries sent in $18,000, making a total of $436,000, an increase of 100 percent over the previous year.

In 1934 the Japanese sent about $420,000, almost as much as the entire imports of the previous year; the United Kingdom increased their exports to $280,000, and other countries to $24,000. The total of $724,000 is a 75-percent increase over the previous year, despite the remarkable increase that had been recorded that year. The Japanese imports had increased 1,100 percent in 5 years and were steadily growing.

These figures should be of interest to the Representatives of the silver-mining States. The silver used in the factories of America came from the silver mines of America. The more prosperous and the busier the American silver factory the better it is for the silver miner of the West.

To make the situation of the American manufacturer more difficult, it should be known they are forced into competition with clever imitations of an inferior quality. The Japanese silverware article is not a quality product, but, as turned out, it appears to the uninitiated purchaser as a fairly good piece of merchandise selling at what seems to be a bargain price. The buyer does not know that the average silver-plated serving tray, sandwich plate, vegetable dish, relish dish, or platter made in Japan has an antimony and lead base covered with a mere "flash" of silver that will disappear after a short period of service. There are no bargains in Japanese goods; but the public, deceived by low costs, do not realize that fact.

The situation is aggravated by Japanese agents who are constantly on the lookout for new designs and styles. Just as soon as they find an American-made item that is selling well they purchase a sample and rush it to Japan to be copied. In a remarkably short time there is a Japanese reproduction of inferior quality on the American market selling for one-tenth the price the American manufacturer is obliged to ask to meet with the requirements of the N. R. A. and to give his employees an American wage.

A while ago, the Tariff Commission ordered cigar lighters which were alleged to be an imitation of a lighter manufactured by the Art Metal Works, Inc., of Newark, N. J., prohibited from importation because it was considered an infringement upon a patent. Did this disturb the Japanese lighter manufacturers? Not at all. They simply went ahead and copied the product of an Attleboro concern and are now shipping in large quantities of lighters. It is impossible to expect any industry can compete successfully with this type of competition. Surely it must be obvious some type of protection is essential if we are to have any industry left in the United States.

Japan has copied all too well the mass production of the American Nation. It employs the last word in machinery, and this, plus the starvation wage scales and long hours of labor, makes an invincible foe.

Great Britain and the Netherlands have lower wage scales than we do. Yet these countries find it impossible to compete with the Japanese. The great factories of Birmingham feel the pinch of markets lost abroad. They have become alarmed at the threat upon their own home market and are taking steps to save an industry that provides a livelihood for thousands of workers. If these two countries can take steps to protect their industrial enterprises, I ask with all sincerity why cannot the Government playboys of this administration do the same?

We are spending untold millions, arming to resist a possible military attack from the Orient. I hope and pray that conflict will never come. There is no reason in the world why there should be a war in this civilized day between us and the new-born industrial Empire of the East. Destruction and disaster to both would be the result of any such clash.

The sober judgment of the thinking men of both Nations, I believe, will prevent a military war. But we cannot hide the signs that are multiplying everywhere of the cruel and destructive industrial war which is being waged right here within the confines of our own country.

Shall we remain idle and watch the industrial supremacy which was ours be destroyed? Shall we be inactive while the jobs of hundreds and thousands of men and women are lost for all time? Shall we be quiet while closed factories and stilled chimneys are the price we are asked to pay for experiments in foreign trade? Has it come to pass, I wonder, that the American people will not insist upon the preservation of the trade markets that rightfully belong to them?

If we permit one industry after another to be extinguished, as we are doing at the present time, there will be no need to spend millions for national defense. There will be nothing here which will excite the envy of another people.

The best bulwark of defense we can erect is to maintain the industries of America on a solid and prosperous basis. Keep for them the rich home market so they can continue to pay the best wages paid to any people on earth. Give the Americans business which belongs to them, and they will give the employment, which will bring happiness and prosperity to many people. Preserve these industries and we take people off the relief rolls and secure the revenue which will be essential in the years directly ahead.

Surely, there is no greater problem, none more pressing than this one, and I hope it is not too much to ask for immediate and intelligent action, which will send us along the road to recovery, which must continue to be the shining goal toward which we press.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would like to observe in connection with the gentleman's remarks that it is reported in today's paper that the Cabinet committee appointed by President Roosevelt to study the situation in the textile industry has rendered a tentative finding to the effect that it can expect no relief so far as the raising of tariffs was concerned.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If this be true, and if this report is carried out, then I say the administration will rue the day they made this decision. It means poverty, distress, and destitution for hundreds of thousands of the American people. [Applause.] An outraged public opinion will not sustain any such decision.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would add also that the paper says the committee disagreed with the view that the trouble in New England might be because of obsolete machinery for they found that in the South where they have up-to-date machinery the industry is just as badly off as it is in New England.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman understands that it is not a question of machinery that we are contending for; that can be remedied by private effort. What we are contending for is a chance to make a living. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this morning the House listened to a presentation of the Democratic position on the processing tax and other good, sound Democratic doctrines. A very high compliment, in my opinion—unintentional, perhaps—was paid by the speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], to myself and other members of the Massachusetts delegation in designating us as the "high priests of protection." I thank the gentleman for these kind words in behalf of my colleagues and myself. We acknowledge that protection has cared for the industries of this country since its foundation; and we are glad to be able to testify to the prosperity that followed protection. We are equally sorry that when the Democratic Party comes into power it takes unto itself a wrong method of revising the tariff, an illegal method, an unconstitutional method that, forsooth, of having a bill passed providing for what are known as "reciprocal treaties." Well, if they are treaties, they should be approved by the Senate of the United States in accordance with the Constitution. This has not taken place; and now we are here as suppliants, begging Congress to do something for the industries that the Democratic Party is doing its best to break down. So I thank our friend from North Carolina, so extremely courteous, for referring to us as the advocates and supporters of the policy that has made for prosperity in this country from its foundation.

Mr. Chairman, I am not here this afternoon to answer the arguments made by that gentleman. My colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] has touched very effectively on a good deal of that matter. I am more interested at the moment in a very remarkable speech made on March 6 by another gentleman from North Carolina, my esteemed friend, the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. DOUGHTON].

JAPANESE COMPETITION AND THE RECIPROCAL TARIFF ACT

I refer to the speech as being remarkable, not so much for its eloquence or profundity, as for its vituperative expressions and its lack of facts or reason.

We all love the gentleman, and respect his sincerity of purpose, but sometimes his partisanship and his zeal get the best of him and words fall from his lips which come neither from his heart nor his mind. In his speech he was attempting to defend a law which was not at all in accord with his previously expressed principles and precepts, and therefore we may condone many of the things he said, knowing that they were uttered only for effect and not from conviction.

The gentleman opposed the flexible tariff provisions of the 1930 Tariff Act, which made the President the agent of Congress in maintaining duties at such a level as to equalize foreign and domestic production costs. On May 17, 1929, in discussing this section of the bill, he said:

> My friends, this is too dangerous and alarming to contemplate. With all this power vested in the President of the United States, he becomes a colossus. It is too much power and authority to lodge in any man who ever has been or ever will be President of the United States.

The gentleman said, "Whoever has been." He was then referring to the past administrations, but when he added "Whoever will be President of the United States" he little thought how that expression would come home to plague him. At that time we were discussing the flexible provision which was proper and within constitutional limitations, but now he comes before this House and advocates something contrary to the Constitution and the statutes and then says we were not stating facts when we criticize him, and the "new method." I prefer to regard the opinion of the gentleman from North Carolina expressed as coming from his heart and mind in 1929 and his present references to the situation as coming from his party loyalty, if you want to call it that. However, it is more. Let us be charitable toward him and say it was party loyalty rather than dictation from either the Post Office Department or the White House.

President Roosevelt today holds the very power which the gentleman opposed, but in addition he holds absolute dictatorial power over the tariff, without the limitations imposed under the provisions of the 1930 law, and the gentleman from North Carolina, as Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and a good Democrat, was obliged to fight for the enactment of that legislation, namely, the reciprocal tariff act.

I respect the gentleman for being a good private in the rear ranks, but he does not have to come in here and tell us what to do when we have that record of what he actually said on this floor.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to repeat to a certain degree, but in different language, what my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] has just said.

Mr. Chairman, to my mind, the present critical condition of the textile industry illustrates most plainly the danger of continuing the administration's tariff-reduction policy now being carried out under the reciprocal tariff act. Japan has begun flooding the domestic market with bleached and colored cotton cloth at prices which domestic manufacturers are unable to meet, due in a large measure to an inadequate tariff. The principal imports are of bleached cloth, on which there is at present only an ad valorem duty.

Of course, the Members will understand that as the value of an article goes down the ad valorem duty goes down with it.

The following figures, showing the importation of bleached cloth from Japan, picture the competitive situation much better than I can do so in words. Note how the imports have been increasing:

In January 1934 we imported only 3,960 square yards of bleached cloth.

By June 1934 the imports had increased to 179,948 square yards.

In December the imports jumped to 1,994,743 square yards.

In January 1935 they had increased to 2,633,295 square yards.

The latest available figures are for February, which show an importation of 4,347,739 square yards.

At the rate the imports are increasing, it is apparent that the Japanese eventually may displace the entire domestic production of bleached cotton cloth.

The Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, in attempting to minimize the effect of Japanese competition in the textile industry, states that the Japanese imports in 1934 were less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the value of cotton piece goods consumed in this country. The Secretary may be right as to 1934—I do not know—but it is the 1935 importations that are alarming. In the first 2 months of 1935 we have imported more bleached cotton cloth from Japan than was imported in the entire 12 months last year. What has the Secretary to say to that?

Even though the Japanese imports may be a small percentage of the total production, the proportion is increasing by leaps and bounds, and the Japanese price is beating down the domestic price all along the line. How long the domestic mills can continue to compete is questionable. No one is going to buy American cloth if they can secure it from Japan duty paid at a much lower price. That is why importations are increasing in such large proportions. That is why every month the importations from Japan are double what they were the previous month.

Here is some further interesting data regarding the Japanese importations. The average unit value of the bleached cotton cloth imported from Japan in 1934 was 4.2 cents per square yard. The average value of all countable cotton cloth imported from that country was 4.7 cents. How does this compare with the unit value of importations from some of the other countries? Here are the figures:

	Cents (square yard)
Japan	4.7
Switzerland	15.5
United Kingdom	21.2
Belgium	15.3
Netherlands	18.1
Czechoslovakia	15.5
Germany	32.7
France	49.0
Italy	36.5

Of course, some of these countries supply us with a finer grade of cloth than is imported from Japan, but the figures indicate that the Japanese price level is in general far below the average for the other countries. That is why we are troubled at this time only with Japanese competition.

DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION OFFERS LITTLE SOLACE TO DOMESTIC PRODUCERS AND WORKERS

Recently a group of New England governors waited upon the President with a view to seeking his assistance in relieving conditions in the textile industry. What sort of a reception did they receive at his hands? According to an account of the meeting published in the Washington Post for April 13, the President listened to them for three-quarters of an hour, and then, after belittling the effect of Japanese competition, turned them over to a group of his Cabinet officers.

The Post reporter had this to say of the President's press conference following this meeting:

> After he had conferred with the governors, President Roosevelt revealed at his press conference that he had challenged their contentions as to the serious effect of Japanese importations on the industry here. He indicated that he regarded the basis of many of the textile manufacturers' complaints as propaganda.

That is what the President thought of their representations.

PRESIDENT'S CABINET COMMITTEE UNSYMPATHETIC

The press last Saturday carried a story to the effect that the President had finally appointed an official Cabinet committee to look into the textile situation. Apparently, he realized that our New England people were not going to be trifled with in a matter so vital to their welfare.

The appointment of this committee might be commended except for one thing—its make-up. The following Cabinet members compose it: The Secretary of State, Mr. Hull; the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace; the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Roper; and the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins.

From the standpoint of sympathy toward the textile industry, the President might just as well have appointed a committee of Japanese textile manufacturers to study the situation. The Secretary of State is the same man who is at present engaged in destroying the existing Republican tariff by reducing rates on every hand without regard to differences in foreign and domestic costs of production. He is the same man who, in a letter to the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee—printed on page 5855 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for April 17—says:

> In my opinion it is not only unwise as a general policy to yield to the demand for greater restrictions upon imports, but would be particularly unfortunate at this time, since such action could but weaken the leadership of the administration in the effort that it is making to reduce the many restrictions hampering the flow of international trade.
> * * * * * * *
> I believe that we should resist any effort to stampede this Government into unnecessary and unwise action against Japanese competition, whether in textiles or any other commodity.

In other words, one of the members of the President's committee feels that the dying textile industry of New England must be subrogated in favor of the whimsical and moth-eaten free-trade doctrines which he is trying to put into effect. Our mills must be shut down so as not to weaken the leadership of the Democratic administration in lowering tariffs. The livelihood of New England is to be sacrificed for the impractical and idealistic theories of one man.

SECRETARY WALLACE IS BITTER TOWARD TEXTILE INDUSTRY AND NEW ENGLAND PEOPLE

The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, is the same man who, in a speech at Brunswick, Maine, last Wednesday, insulted the good people of New England by saying that they were whining, flabby, lacking in guts, selfish, and unpatriotic. He is the same dictatorial person who said it was time for New England to give up her textile mills and seek new lines of endeavor, possibly the manufacture of prefabricated houses. He is the same man who, during the hearings on the reciprocal tariff bill, inferred that we should not produce in this country anything that we can buy cheaper elsewhere.

The Secretary of Commerce, delightful gentleman that he is, is the same man who appeared before the Ways and Means Committee in support of the doctrines of Secretaries Hull and Wallace respecting the removal of "trade restrictions."

So far as the Secretary of Labor is concerned, I do not know her views upon the tariff, and therefore will give her the benefit of the doubt, and will at least suppose that she is sympathetic toward the textile workers who have lost their jobs and those who are on the verge of losing them.

In view of this line-up it is apparent that the President's committee is stacked at least 3 to 1 against the domestic textile industry.

The gentleman from Michigan a few minutes ago called attention to what evidently will be the report of such a stacked-up committee as that.

AN ANSWER TO SECRETARY WALLACE

The attitude of New England toward the remarks of Secretary Wallace, to which I have referred, is ably presented in an editorial in the Boston Post, a stanch Democratic newspaper, for April 18. The editorial reads:

[From the Boston (Mass.) Post, Apr. 18, 1935]

THE WALLACE TRADE

> The speech of Secretary Wallace at Brunswick, Maine, is not what should be expected from a responsible statesman. It is the tirade of a sour, resentful man, full of bitterness because his policies have been criticized and questioned in New England.
> His answer to protests from this section is a torrent of abuse, some of it coarse and vindictive. He arraigns New England as "flabby", "lacking guts", "selfish", "unpatriotic", "chiselers", and a few more epithetic characterizations.

New England has taken care of her own to a greater extent than any other part of the country. We have borne the burdens of this depression with less complaint; and we have refrained from chiseling on the public funds while other States were wallowing in Federal cash.

We do not need Secretary Wallace to teach us patriotism. Here the American Republic was born. New England sons have defended it on every battlefield of every war; and while some other parts of the country, notably right in Mr. Wallace's backyard, have been howling "revolution", New England has stood firmly behind President Roosevelt and his administration.

Secretary Wallace's speech is more than an insult—it is a disgraceful exhibition of personal spite and spleen.

That is the leading Democratic paper of New England from which I just quoted the editorial.

NEW ENGLAND KNOWS THAT TARIFFS HELP TO KEEP MILLS GOING

A further answer to Secretary Wallace is found in an editorial in the Boston Herald for April 19. After referring to the Secretary's "insulting speeches and offensive remarks", the editorial states:

The Secretary's biting comments on Alexander Hamilton, corporations, and the morally "rotten, despicable" tariff are distinctly Tugwellian. Of course, New England has profited from the tariff. Every section of the country has. The more the South becomes industrialized, the more eager it will be for additional protection against foreign competition. The "rotten, despicable" thing is now a world-wide phenomenon, more impressive than ever before, and New Englanders will wonder why a tariff which helps to keep their mills going should bring down the wrath of a peevish Secretary.

INDUSTRIAL SITUATION IN MASSACHUSETTS IS ACUTE

I can best point to the seriousness of the industrial situation in New England, and particularly in Massachusetts, by quoting from a letter which I received a few days ago from one of the industrial leaders of that section. He said:

I really think the industrial situation in Massachusetts is very bad. Not only have we already lost a very large proportion of our industries but I know of several more that are on the very verge of leaving the State. Yesterday the vice president of one large industry told me that he was having all he could do to persuade his associates to continue the operation of the plant in Massachusetts.

* * * * * * *

Frankly, I do not know what anyone can be thinking of to put any further burdens upon industry. Secretary Wallace either totally misunderstands the situation and is not informed of the facts or else he has let himself get into a frame of mind that is typical of some other members of this administration, whereby he has become mentally stubborn and unwilling to recognize the facts as they exist.

I know it means very little to the Secretary of Agriculture when mills in New England close down, but I will say to him that the people of New England know what it means, and when the next election rolls around they are going to show their resentment toward the Democratic administration for the way in which they have been treated.

HAVE INTRODUCED BILL TO STEM JAPANESE COMPETITION IN TEXTILES

In order to meet in some measure at least, the present destructive Japanese competition in the textile industry, I have introduced a bill which has for its purpose the restoration of the old minimum specific duties on bleached and colored cotton cloths which were dropped in the last tariff act. The great bulk of the Japanese imports of cotton cloth is of these varieties. There is no appreciable importation of unbleached cloth, because it is protected by the same kind of a duty as I propose for the bleached cloth.

Under the terms of my bill, the duty on bleached cloth would in no case be less than three-fifths of 1 cent per average number per pound, regardless of value. Thus, in the case of cloth having a thread count of 50, the minimum duty would be 30 cents per pound. The present duty on this cloth is 30.5 percent ad valorem, but due to the low price of the Japanese imports, the rate is entirely inadequate. With a specific duty in effect, the value would be ignored, unless the ad valorem rate would bring a higher rate of duty than the specific rate.

We do not need a Cabinet committee, a tariff commission, or a congressional investigation of conditions. We need action, and the enactment into law of such a measure as I have introduced. Let the Democrats now show their great nonpartisanship by acknowledging the reason for the situation facing New England today.

ONLY HOPE FOR RELIEF IS IN ELECTION OF A REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION

At the present time, the outworn and idealistic free-trade theories of the Secretary of State stand in the way of adequate tariff protection for American industries and for American workers. Not alone is increased protection impossible, but the administration is now engaged in scaling down existing duties which were set up for the express purpose of protecting domestic industries from destructive foreign competition.

The only hope for industry and labor lies in the election of a Republican administration in 1936, in order that the Government of the United States may once more be run for the best interests of our own people. [Applause.]

PROPAGANDA EPITHET HURLED AT POTATO GROWERS BY ADMINISTRATION

I was very much interested in a statement given to the press by Secretary Hull on April 16, in which he said that letters from Maine potato growers relative to the proposed trade agreement with Canada were the result of "organized and directed propaganda."

It appears that the letters inferred that the administration had virtually decided to reduce the duty on Canadian potatoes. Secretary Hull did not say that the duty would not be reduced, but left that avenue open by saying:

The statement being circulated is without foundation. The recommendations with respect to individual items which may be included in the trade agreement have not yet been formulated.

The fears of the Maine potato growers are fully justified in view of the reduction in the duty granted in the case of Cuban potatoes under the trade agreement with that country, and it is proper to assume that the same attitude will be taken by those negotiating the trade treaty with Canada, as potatoes are potatoes whether grown in Canada, Maine, or Cuba. It is therefore unfair for the administration to say that they were guilty of issuing false propaganda when they were only imploring the President not to destroy their local industry.

According to an Associated Press dispatch from Houlton, Maine, under date of April 17, the Aroostook County growers resented the imputations of the Secretary's statement. One spokesman for the growers was reported to have said that they considered it an "affront." The same man went on to say that the letters addressed to the President were "genuine documents coming from the heart of an already oppressed group of farming people seeking to save their future prosperity from further menace."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order because he is reading into the RECORD newspaper articles that are not his own remarks, contrary to the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair assumes that the gentleman from Massachusetts is thoroughly familiar with the rules of the House. The gentleman will proceed in order.

TARIFF AUTHORITY GIVES DICTATORIAL POWER OVER AMERICAN INDUSTRIES

Mr. TREADWAY. The fact that the potato growers appealed to the President rather than to Congress to save their industry from destruction only goes to show how far our system of government has been changed since March 4, 1933. Under the Constitution, Congress, in the person of the elected representatives of the people, is supposed to have full power over the tariff. Now, however, one man has full authority to say whether an industry dependent upon tariff protection shall continue to exist or shall be sacrificed to foreign competition in an effort to help some other industry.

DEMOCRATS THEMSELVES HAVE WORLD'S GREATEST PROPAGANDA MACHINE

So far as the issuance of propaganda is concerned, the Democratic administration has set up the greatest organization for that purpose the world has ever known. Every department of the Government, every alphabetical bureau, has paid publicists on their pay roll.

One of the most brazen propaganda that has been issued emanates from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. In the issue of the Consumer's Guide for April 6 there appeared a demagogic, misleading, sarcastic, and partisan attack upon the present Republican tariff. It had no place in any official organ of the Government, especially one which is supposed to give information and facts and not biased and prejudiced political views.

An allotment of the taxpayers' money is made annually for the printing of this publication, which has a mailing list of 70,000. It is only another illustration of the tendency of the administration to use the Public Treasury for a campaign chest. The gentleman who is responsible for this organ apparently has a very perverted idea of the proper functions of his office. I am surprised that the President would allow it to be continued.

Items of this nature are regarded as informative to the people, but correct information from other sources is rated by the administration as propaganda. It just depends on whose ox is being gored.

HIGH PRODUCTION COSTS DISCOURAGE EXPORTS, ENCOURAGE IMPORTS

The administration appears to occupy a rather peculiar position, when on the one hand it seeks to expand our foreign trade and on the other hand makes it more difficult to market merchandise abroad and to compete with foreign products in the home market by raising production costs. There ought at least to be a consistent policy. If we are going to trade abroad, we must be prepared to meet world production costs and world selling prices, and so far as the domestic market is concerned we cannot hope to withstand foreign competition, in spite of present tariffs, if our production costs are to be raised still higher above the world level.

NO JUSTIFICATION FOR LOWERING DUTIES ON COMPETITIVE ARTICLES

The administration contends that we must reduce our tariffs so that foreign nations can send us more goods with which to pay for increased purchases from us. That all sounds very well, but it is no reason why we should reduce tariffs on products which we produce at home and with which we are perfectly capable of supplying the domestic market, or at least a large part of it.

Doubtless we will buy more coffee, more raw silk, more rubber, and other noncompetitive products if foreign countries buy more from us, but there is no justification for the administration's present policy of lowering the duties on competitive articles such as sugar, cement, plate glass, textiles, and so forth, so that some other domestic industry can sell more goods abroad.

One industry has as much right to exist in this country as another. There should be no favoritism, either of one industry against another or of one section against another.

CUBAN TRADE AGREEMENT HAS WORKED TO DISADVANTAGE OF THE UNITED STATES

The President has entered into several trade agreements which involve reciprocal reductions in duties by this country and certain other foreign countries. The first agreement entered into was that with Cuba, which became effective last September.

Mr. Chairman, let us see what happened under this agreement. We have heard a lot from our Democratic friends as to the great benefit to be derived from this Cuban reciprocity agreement. Let us find out about it.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] said in his speech of March 6 that I could not see any good in any trade agreement, "even if the United States gains two or three times as much as the other country involved." I would reply to the gentleman by saying that he apparently cannot see any bad in any trade agreement, even if the United States loses four times as much as it gains, as has been the case under the Cuban agreement.

It is a rather violent assumption to think that the United States will ever gain any advantage in any international dealing. When that ever happens the sun and the moon will stand still and water will run uphill. No one ever heard of such a thing. As the cowboy humorist, Will Rogers, has said, this country has a habit of winning its wars but of losing its international conferences.

Let me cite the figures in connection with our trade with Cuba during the last 12 months. The Cuban agreement was signed August 24, 1934, and became effective 10 days later. In the 6-month period from September 1934, to February 1935, we sold to Cuba merchandise of a value of $27,203,537. This represents an increase of $4,342,641 over the volume of the previous 6 months from March to August, inclusive.

From September 1934 to February 1935, we imported from Cuba merchandise of a value of $49,646,627, as against $33,298,767 in the previous 6-month period. This represents an increase in the value of imports of $16,347,860.

These figures mean that in order to sell Cuba an additional $4,000,000 worth of merchandise in 6 months, we had to import an additional $16,000,000 of merchandise. Cuba, therefore, has the advantage by 4 to 1, and yet the gentleman from North Carolina cannot see why I am opposed to this tariff bargaining.

Of course, the gentleman is something of a horse trader, as we Yankees up in New England are, but I do not think as a Yankee trader we should get into that kind of bargain. I am surprised he would sponsor legislation which would permit of this one-sided kind of bargain.

GENERALIZATION OF CONCESSIONS

Aside from the practical results of the operation of the Cuban agreement, I want to point out another reason why we cannot hope to gain any net benefit from the negotiation of these trade treaties. I refer to the administration's policy of generalizing the rate reductions granted to one country so as to make them applicable to imports from any country. Only the reductions granted to Cuba are excepted from this general policy.

The following press clipping from Mr. Paul Mallon's column in the Washington Star for March 9, just a few days after the gentleman from North Carolina made his address, tells the story very succinctly. I quote:

> The whooping new-deal publicity about the Belgian trade agreement did not say so, but there was a trick in that treaty.
>
> The lower import duties which we promised to Belgium are applicable not only to Belgium but to every other country. In other words, the reduced tariffs we granted her are really general tariff reductions.
>
> * * * * * * *
> The Yankee traders are now in their storm cellars here awaiting the reaction.

Just to show that this article is based on fact and not on fiction, I wish to quote from the following circular letter sent out by the Commissioner of Customs to all collectors, It is dated March 6, 1935, and reads as follows:

[Bureau of Customs, circular letter no. 1348]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF CUSTOMS,
Washington, March 6, 1935.

To collectors of customs and others concerned:

BELGIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

There is appended hereto copy of schedule II of the Belgian Trade Agreement concluded on February 27, 1935.

The rates set forth will apply, under the conditions indicated in the headnote, to the articles described in the schedule, imported from any country, which are entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption on or after the thirtieth day following the proclamation of the agreement by the President and its simultaneous publication in the Moniteur Belge. The President may, however, suspend the application of the reduced rates to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of a particular country or countries.

The preferential reduction in duties accorded Cuban products will be computed on the basis of the new rates established by this or any similar agreement.

Further information as to the effective date will be furnished when available.

FRANK DOW,
Acting Commissioner of Customs.

WE GIVE TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO ALL COUNTRIES TO GET A BENEFIT FROM ONE

Under this policy, although we receive a benefit from only one country, we extend our concessions to all countries, even those with whom we have no most-favored-nation treaties. How does anyone figure we can get any net gain under that sort of procedure? Even if we received an even exchange from the country to whom we granted a particular concession, we stand to lose with respect to all the rest of the nations of the world who grant us nothing in return.

Of course the State Department will combat this argument by saying that we are not harmed by this generalization of the rates, since the concessions are extended only to countries which are our chief source of supply for a particular commodity. That, however, is not true. The recent Belgian agreement discloses that in the case of over a dozen of the commodities on which concessions were made, Belgium was not the principal source of importation.

In the case of cement, Belgium outranks Denmark as our chief source of supply by only a small margin. In 1934, we imported 40,000,000 pounds from Belgium and 35,000,000 pounds from Denmark, out of a total of 98,000,000 pounds. We reduced the duty on Belgian cement by 25 percent in return for a concession from that country, but we extended the same reduction to Denmark without receiving anything in return.

HOME MARKET MOST IMPORTANT TO DOMESTIC PRODUCERS

As bearing upon the relative importance of our foreign trade, I have made the statement from time to time that we normally consume within our own borders 90 percent of what we produce. No one can take issue with that statement, because it is a fact, but some persons have attempted to destroy its effect by saying that it does not apply to cotton, for example.

My answer is that I did not apply it to cotton or to any other single commodity, but to production in general. I was demonstrating that, considering the country as a whole, our foreign market is of secondary importance to our domestic market and therefore should be given secondary consideration. In other words, I was arguing against letting the tail wag the dog, as the friends of the reciprocal-tariff law propose.

There are doubtless many instances where some domestic industries export more than 10 percent of their production, but that is no reason why they should insist on pulling down the whole tariff structure and sacrifice the 90 percent for the 10 percent.

I have always insisted that we should legislate for the greatest good of the greatest number, and I still feel that this is the only fair policy we can follow. No doubt many of our great export industries would like to regain their old foreign markets, but that is no reason why all the great domestic industries that are not so reliant on foreign trade should be sacrificed for their benefit.

SOME FOREIGN MARKETS IRRETRIEVABLY LOST

There is some hope of building up the home market to the level of 1929, but so far as our export trade is concerned we must face the fact that a large part of it is irretrievably lost. This is especially true with respect to cotton, since many countries are now producing this commodity which formerly purchased large quantities from us. As a result we not only have lost many customers but have gained new competitors in supplying the demand of the remaining countries.

While the South may point to the fact that Japan is still a large purchaser of our cotton, that same cotton is being returned to this country in the form of manufactured cloth, thereby displacing an equivalent quantity of domestic cloth which would have been made from American cotton. As between selling their cotton to Japan and selling it at home, it ought to be obvious to the producers of cotton that the wisest policy would be to keep American dollars working at home.

NO REASON TO DISTURB PRESENT TARIFF LEVEL

Personally, I can see no good reason to disturb the present general level of the tariff rates. If in any particular instances the rates are too high, they can be reduced in accordance with the formula laid down by Congress in the Tariff Act of 1930, commonly known as the "flexible-tariff provision." The fact that so few changes have been made under this authority is evidence that the general level of the rates is satisfactory.

FOREIGN TRADE ON INCREASE WITHOUT RECIPROCITY

To those who say that the negotiation of reciprocal-trade agreements is the only method by which we can regain our foreign trade, I would point out that in 1934 our exports exceeded the exports for 1933 by 27 percent. Is not this evidence that the tariff-bargaining program is unnecessary? Our export trade grew to $5,000,000,000 annually under the Republican tariff law of 1922, and it can do the same again under the Republican law of 1930.

CONSTANT TARIFF MEDDLING CREATES UNCERTAINTY

Mr. Chairman, because I have frequently given voice to my opposition to the administration's reciprocal-tariff policy, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] states that I am carrying on a campaign of fear, and adds:

> He does not seem to be interested in letting business settle down; he does not want business confidence as long as his party is not in power.

If telling the truth constitutes a campaign of fear, then I plead guilty to the charge. However, the gentleman is entirely wrong in stating that I am not interested in letting business settle down. That is precisely what I am interested in. That is why I am carrying on this fight.

If there is business uncertainty and lack of confidence at the present time, the blame lies entirely upon the shoulders of the Democratic Party and the present administration. The extravagant spending program, the failure to balance the Budget, the uncertain monetary policy, the hamstringing of business under the N. R. A., the regimentation of agriculture—all these policies and lack of policies have contributed to the present chaotic condition of the country. The reciprocal tariff has only aggravated this condition.

Like the sword of Damocles, the threat of destruction by a flood of foreign importations hangs over the head of every domestic industry, whether agricultural or manufacturing, which is dependent upon tariff protection. Every time a new trade agreement is considered, this uncertainty is again aroused. American industries are getting the jitters. They do not know which one will be the next to be marked for slaughter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

FEARS OF INDUSTRIES FULLY JUSTIFIED

Mr. TREADWAY. Those in charge of the trade agreements may say that their fears are not justified, but let us see whether they are or not. In the President's message to Congress requesting the enactment of the reciprocal-tariff law, he said:

> No sound and important American interest will be injuriously disturbed.

That statement makes fine reading, but, like many of the glittering promises he made during the campaign, we find that just the contrary has happened. Consider, if you will, the unjust treatment which has been accorded the domestic sugar, tobacco, cement, manganese, and other important industries under the recent trade agreements with Cuba, Brazil, and Belgium.

Right now trade agreements are under negotiation with some 13 countries, including Sweden, Spain, Switzerland, the Netherlands, Italy, and Canada. In view of the way the administration has treated the other industries I have just mentioned, it is no wonder that the farmers of this country shudder when they consider the possible consequences of the proposed trade agreements with Canada and the Netherlands. It is no wonder that some of our manufacturing industries are apprehensive that they may be put out of business by the proposed agreements with Switzerland and Italy.

REPEAL OF RECIPROCAL TARIFF LAW WOULD HELP RESTORE CONFIDENCE

Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a bill which, if enacted, would do as much toward restoring confidence in this country as any other single measure. I refer to H. R. 3422, which is entitled "A bill to terminate the authority of the President to enter into reciprocal-trade agreements."

I introduced this bill on January 9, and I note that on March 4 the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] dared to oppose his own administration by introducing a similar bill. I commend the gentleman for his good sense. Doubtless there are many others on his side of the House who feel as he does about this measure. However, we must face the fact that even if repeal legislation could be passed in Congress it would face a certain veto at the hands of the President. Thus, unless a sufficient number of Democrats are willing to concede their mistake and change their vote, it will be necessary to wait until a Republican President is elected in 1936 to wipe this iniquitous legislation from the statute books.

PROTECTION NEEDED MORE THAN EVER

If there ever was a time in the history of our country when protection for our home producers was needed, it is now. Nothing should be done to reduce rates below the difference in cost of production of competitive foreign products.

The present Japanese competition in cotton textiles, egg products, electric-light bulbs, matches, and so forth, should be enough to convince even the most uncompromising free trader that the present policy of the administration in breaking down the tariff is detrimental to the American people. Our dairy farmers would like to see something done about stopping the tremendous increase in importations of foreign butter, but there is no chance for any action along this line with the administration committed to a policy which may result in reducing the present butter tariff.

I think, however, it is quite clear that if the American farmer, the American workman, and the American manufacturer expect to get any relief from foreign competition, it will be necessary to elect a Republican President and a Republican Congress.

The home market is their birthright, and I feel sure that at the proper time the electorate of this country is going to repudiate the policy of the present Democratic administration of writing tariff rates for the benefit of foreign nations rather than our own citizens. The American people have already had their fill of these star-chamber proceedings, where representatives of foreign governments sit in secret sessions with a group of free traders in the State Department to decide the tariff policy of this country, while their elected Representatives in Congress are forced to sit idly by, unable to do anything about it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I listened today with great interest to the remarks of my distinguished friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN]. There was merit in some of the things that he said, but, in general, I do not think his speech covered the situation insofar as the textile conditions exist today.

In the first place, the gentleman from North Carolina, in referring to the Republican administration did not give the reason but said that these mills in New England moved South during a Republican administration, which is true, but the main reason that these mills did go South, as I brought out once before here today, was because at that time you could work 60 or 70 hours a week in the textile mills of the South, and the wage was as low as $6 or $7 a week. These employers in the textile industry went South to get away from decent living conditions and from decent wages for labor in the New England States. The manufacturers who stayed in New England are the ones for whom we are fighting today. They are the ones who believe in a decent wage for labor. They are the ones who do not believe in working little children in their mills as was done in the South at that time, before the N. R. A. They are the ones who believed at that time in a 48-hour law, such as we had in Massachusetts. They are the ones who believed, in other words, in a break for labor and in decent living conditions and decent wages in industry.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is the gentleman of the opinion that the N. R. A. has helped to rehabilitate the textile industry of the North?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, yes. I will say to my friend that he knows my opinion of the N. R. A. I have always said that the N. R. A. gave the textile industry of New England the first break it ever got from the hands of the Government. We had a 48-hour law, while the South worked 60 or 70 hours a week, and when you put the South on a 40-hour law and put Massachusetts and New England on a 40-hour law in the textile industry, even with a wage differential in favor of the South, you gave them the first break they ever got in decent, fair competition.

Mr. BOILEAU. I agree with the gentleman that the N. R. A. has helped out the industrial sections, and does not the gentleman believe that, in order to keep agriculture on a parity with industry, it is necessary to carry out an agricultural policy, with the processing tax, and so forth, to offset the harm done to agriculture and to give agriculture a chance to live also?

Mr. CONNERY. I am going to touch on that in just a moment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. When the costs of industry were increased through the N. R. A., was not that one reason why it was essential to have more tariff protection in order that we might have a chance to sell our goods?

Mr. CONNERY. Of course, I have always believed in that and have a bill now before the Ways and Means Committee which I think would take care of this whole situation; in fact, I wrote that into the 30-hour-week law 3 years ago. I saw this whole thing coming at that time, and the labor men came to me and said, "If you put the country on a 40-hour week, while Japan and Germany and Czechoslovakia and England are working 50 or 60 hours a week at low wages, how can our manufacturers in the United States survive"? I wrote this provision in the bill, and I have it in the bill now before the Ways and Means Committee:

> Wherever the landed costs of any article or commodity—not just the textile, but any article or commodity, including agricultural products—coming into the United States are less than the cost of production of a similar article or commodity in the United States, such article or commodity shall be barred from the country.

This will take care of your Japanese situation and everything else.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will permit, I asked the question because I appreciate the splendid work the gentleman has done in the past in protecting industry, and I knew what his past opinion had been upon the question, and I wanted to know if he is still of the same opinion, namely, in view of our increased costs and in view of the keen competition that exists today, does he not think it is absolutely necessary that we have a greater amount of protection than we now enjoy?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I know it, because my people are walking the streets today in Lawrence, Lynn, and Peabody. They are men who have been engaged in the leather, shoe, and textile industries.

In reference to the statement of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] I want to touch on that point. I know I do not have to convince him, because he knows that the first meeting ever held by the Committee on Labor where the farmers and labor joined together was held while I have been Chairman of the Committee on Labor. I do not want the farmers to be broke, because if a farmer is broke, he cannot buy the textile, he cannot buy the shoes, he cannot buy the leather, he cannot buy the electrical products and the thousands of things that are made in our industrial New England. I want him to get a decent break for his farm products, but what I would like to call to the attention of the men who represent the farm sections in this body is that the State Department is saying to the Members of Congress and saying to the country, "If you cut down on your demand that we buy only American products, and go into reciprocal-trade treaties, we will fix it a little later so that we can bring in your Argentine wheat and bring in your other products from South America and along the Atlantic seaboard, and we will sell them to you far cheaper than you can buy them from the American farmer."

I want your farmers to know about this and to look into the proposition.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to commend my friend from Massachusetts on his broad viewpoint. I believe he is as anxious to protect the farmers as I am, but I may say to the gentleman that I do not believe we should try to help out industry by taking from agriculture what small benefits they have been able to get during the past few years. We should help industry in the way suggested by the gentleman through a higher tariff, and I am willing to go along with the gentleman on that.

Mr. CONNERY. I voted for the A. A. A., I signed the petition for the consideration of the Lemke bill, and I voted for that proposition and would be pleased to do so again.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know the gentleman has always been very fair in respect of all these matters.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not believe you can have prosperity in the United States unless there is prosperity for the farmer and prosperity for the industrial worker, and I do not say that the processing tax is the sole reason or that it is the bête noire of the textile industry. That may not be it at all. I am informed by the evidence given to us by the textile men and by the labor unions and the workers in the textile mills that the processing tax is working greatly to our disadvantage in the mills, but I say that the President has appointed this Cabinet committee to look into this matter thoroughly. They are going to start hearings Thursday, and we are going to bring down our millmen and our laboring men and everyone else concerned from New England, and we expect the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] and the men from the Southern States to bring up their men and put the whole story before this committee; and then, I say, if the processing tax is doing all this harm, get some other way to help the farmer rather than by a processing tax. If it is not the thing that is doing the harm, all right; but we feel that that is the danger.

We feel that the Japanese importations are a menace to our textile industry. It does not do the Wisconsin farmer any good if the man on Pine Hill next to me, working for the General Electric Co., cannot buy any of the farmer's products.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman should not use Wisconsin for an example, because we get no benefit from the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. CONNERY. It does no good to have a man who lives in Lawrence or Lynn to go broke. All I ask is for a committee appointed by the President to look into this matter impartially, not to look into it as a New England question but as a question for the United States of America.

When I vote on the floor I do not expect to vote especially for New England. I resented today the statement that a lot of New England manufacturers had come down here to boost or push up the price, trying to blackjack the administration.

There was a meeting downstairs in the luncheon room. They did not advocate price boosting. They predicated their demand on the fact that people are walking the streets of Lawrence and Lynn. I know what it is. I have seen it myself, and I do not like it. I do not like to see children go hungry.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest that in the consideration of this proposition that the processing tax is an injury to the textile industry, we should consider also that the N. R. A. is doing an injury to agriculture.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes more to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I imagine you are not getting the whole picture. The gentleman speaks of the N. R. A.—no more child labor, no more "yellow dog" contracts, the right of labor to organize—and if it did nothing more than that it would be worth while.

I do not like the members of the N. R. A. in the textile industry, in the manufacture of automobiles, to write codes for labor. I said it is like a little lamb sitting down by a wolf and the wolf writing the contract between the lambs and the wolves.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. In just a moment. My committee reported out a bill for equal labor representation on the Code Authorities. I am for the N. R. A. I would like to see these difficulties done away with. I would like to see the Wagner-Connery labor dispute bill and the 30-hour-a-week bill passed.

Mr. BOILEAU. If I had my way, I would be very glad to substitute the 30-hour-a-week bill for the N. R. A.

Mr. CONNERY. The N. R. A. came as a result of the Black-Connery 30-hour-a-week bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. I was for the N. R. A., and I believe I have the distinction of being the only N. R. A. general on the floor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. On the question of writing the N. R. A., originally Congress wrote it, but since then Mr. Richberg has rewritten it.

Mr. CONNERY. That is true. That decision in reference to the automobile case in Detroit caused all of the strikes and troubles in reference to 7 (a), and you will never have industrial peace in the United States until you pass the Wagner-Connery bill on labor disputes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would the gentleman be kind enough to be more specific in his accusations of industries of the South and name those that worked their employees 70 hours a week prior to the installation of the N. R. A.

Mr. CONNERY. I could not tell the gentleman the names of the concerns. I mentioned them several times years ago—mills in the South that ran 60 and 70 hours, and that had child labor.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Would the gentleman be more specific and name those that have enslaved child labor?

Mr. CONNERY. I could not give the gentleman the names.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. The gentleman ought to be more charitable.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman wants the names I shall get them for him and take the floor in a few days and give him the names, the dates, and everything else.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Will the gentleman be more specific and name those that forced their employees to live in inhuman and insanitary conditions?

Mr. CONNERY. I will give the gentleman all of that information later. I have had men come in to me who went through the mills in the South. This was 4 or 5 years ago. They said that what those workers got on their table, you would throw into your garbage can in New England. He said, "you would not have it on your table."

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Perhaps that was some eccentric investigator.

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no; it was not. He had no bias in any way whatever, he said, "I was down through the mills of the South and saw these company homes they had them in, and it shocked me; I never dreamed such conditions existed."

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Permit me to tell the gentleman that I went to work in a cotton mill before I was 9 years old, and I worked there for 21 years, and my people now live at a cotton mill, and I do not give a tinker's damn who told the gentleman that, his information is incorrect.

Mr. CONNERY. I am sorry to disagree with the gentleman, but we have all of that. We have had investigations, and social workers, and everybody else going through the mills of the South. What wage did the gentleman get when he started?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. CONNERY. What wages did the gentleman get when he went to work?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I got from 5 cents a day when I started until around some twenty-odd dollars a week when I quit.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman got 5 cents a day when he started?

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I was learning, and they were charitable to give me that.

Mr. CONNERY. Why, nobody would ever pay so little as 5 cents a day to anyone in New England, a child or anybody else.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. But that was a different day.

Mr. CONNERY. I mean in those days.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I started 36 years ago. The trouble about the labor situation is that New England is trying to dictate to the rest of the country what labor conditions shall prevail throughout the whole country.

Mr. CONNERY. That is right. New England says, "We want decent living wages, we won't have slavery; we want people to have a place to live in and a place to sleep in that is decent; we want them to have clean sheets and refrigerators, all of the comforts that every laboring man should have in the United States, and not be ground down." [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I have not seen anything out of New England that indicates that they have any more comforts among the laboring class there than they have in the South. We have those things. They have electric lights, in most instances, running water, and everything else that they can have.

Mr. CONNERY. But you have had them only since labor went down there and started to organize. Only since then have you had those things.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. They have had it for a quarter of a century.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman from Massachusetts would refer the gentleman from South Carolina to the testimony of Mr. Gorman, president of the Textile Union, when he testified on the Connery equal-representation-for-labor bill before our Committee on Labor, he would be convinced.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; the gentleman should look that over.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I would not believe it after I had read it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The fact that the gentleman went to work when he was 9 years old and the fact that they would allow a child 9 years old to go to work indicates what the conditions are down there.

Mr. CONNERY. And they paid him only 5 cents a day.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And paid him 5 cents a day! What more proof does the gentleman want?

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I was going to ask if they would permit a 9-year-old baby to go to work in New England?

Mr. CONNERY. They would not allow a 9-year-old baby to work in New England. They would not even let him into a shop to work.

Now, I want to say this is not a partisan proposition. It is to protect the workers, who, as I said, are entitled to a decent, living wage. I hope this whole textile situation will be cleared up in order to take care of those men and women and their families who are walking the streets. Thousands more will be walking the streets unless we take care of them. [Applause.]

I thank you.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I was intensely interested in the discussion that has taken place this afternoon. Some day, perhaps, I should like to comment on that situation myself. However, this afternoon I want to discuss another matter that has come to my attention recently.

On March 18, just passed, the junior Senator from Alabama, a member of the Committee on Agriculture, apparently nettled at the repeated arguments of the Republican leaders to the effect that the present administration was emasculating the civil-service laws, and speaking in defense of the administration's policy with regard to appointing people outside of the civil service, used in part the following language:

> There has been a great deal of discussion recently relative to the extension of the classified civil service to include emergency works where appointments now may be made without regard to civil service rules and regulations. I am one of those who believe that our public service should represent the highest degree of ability to be found anywhere.

The Senator then gives a list of 1,094 persons with college degrees who have been appointed to positions in the A. A. A. within a salary range of from $840 to $2,600 per annum as justifying such appointments outside of the classified civil service.

As I understand the classified civil service, it has two objectives. First, to give to every citizen, without regard to politics, an equal opportunity to obtain such positions as the Government may have to give within that classified civil service. Second, to classify such applicants and place them in the department where they are best qualified and can render the best service.

In analyzing the list of persons given by the Senator and above referred to, I find that these appointments were undoubtedly made purely upon a political basis. For instance, Michigan, with a population of 4,842,325, received 13 appointments, while Missouri, with a population of 3,629,367, received 49 appointments. Missouri, with less than 75 percent of the population of Michigan, received nearly four times as many appointments. New York, with a population of 12,588,066, received 66 appointments while North Carolina, with one-fourth the population of New York, or 3,170,276, received 54 appointments. Pennsylvania, with a population of 9,631,350, received 50 appointments, while Arkansas, with a population of 1,854,482, or less than one-fifth the population of Pennsylvania, received 33 appointments. Oklahoma, with a population of 2,396,040, received 36 appointments, while Ohio, with a population of 6,646,697, or nearly three times that of Oklahoma, received only 34 appointments. The 15 Southern States, with a population of 37,073,654, received 449 appointments, while the 33 Northern States, including Michigan, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, with a population of 85,701,392, received 645 appointments.

In other words, the Northern States with 2½ times the population of these Southern States, received only 44 percent more of these appointments. It is rather interesting to note that while Arkansas, the home of Senator ROBINSON, with a population of 1,854,482, received 33 appointments, Louisiana, the home of HUEY LONG, with a population of 2,101,593, received only 9 appointments. These figures demonstrate two facts: First, that the people of America did not get an equal opportunity to obtain these positions without regard to politics. Second, that the South is in the saddle.

The second objective of the classified civil-service law above referred to is to place men in positions for which they are best fitted. In analyzing the various qualifications of the young men and women referred to in the list given by the junior Senator from Alabama, we must bear in mind that these are appointments made in the agricultural department of the Government, or the department which has charge of the farmers' interests. We find, for instance, that there are 888 out of the 1,094 people with bachelor of arts and bachelor of science degrees, while only 5 profess to know anything about milking a cow or dairying. There are 44 electrical, chemical, mechanical, and civil engineers, and 3 agricultural engineers. There were 24 bachelors and doctors of philosophy, 6 historians, 7 chemists, 10 biologists, 45 economists, 2 musicians, 2 architects, 5 premedical students, 2 specializing in languages, 3 in Foreign Service, 1 chiropractor, 1 preacher, 1 specializing in physical education, 121 lawyers, and only 70 who said they knew something about agriculture.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And those are the men who administer the A. A. A.?

Mr. ENGEL. Those are the men that the Senator from Alabama pointed to with pride as having been outside the civil service, with some college degree after their name, and employed by the A. A. A.

There is one doctor of philosophy from the University of Cologne, Germany; another doctor of philosophy from a school with an unpronounceable name, spelled "Landwirtschaftliche Hochschule" of Germany. Imagine a bird with that sort of a connection trying to tell a Minnesota Swede how to milk a cow. I presume the 10 biologists will be placed in charge of the birth-control section of the hog department, while the 45 economists will try to tell the farmer how to spend more money that he has not got. I might add that Congress is very proficient in this art. I presume the two musicians will teach the farmer how to play "Liebestraum" so the cows will give more "contented" milk. Before we get through with all these embryonic brain trusters, we will need more than 1 chiropractor to adjust our heads as well as our backbones, and when these 121 lawyers get through with the farmers, 1 preacher will not begin to do the praying that will be necessary.

We are just beginning to appreciate what Al Smith meant when he said that the brain trusters are mistaking us for 126,000,000 guinea pigs.

I just received a copy of an edition of the National Union Farmer in which it is stated that 500,000 hog farmers had refused to sign the hog contracts despite the threats and coercion of the Secretary of Agriculture. I have listened with a great deal of sympathy to the Members from the Southern States as they told us of the plight and pitiful condition of the 2- and 3-bale cotton farmer.

I have had considerable experience in my part of the State with some of these so-called "college graduates." While I would not say one word against a man with a college education, or a college degree, I do want to say that I think a great many of them are running around the country for the Agriculture Department who would do a great deal more good if they knew more about "hogology" and "pine-stumpology" than the sciences and the arts.

While in France, during the war, we had a man in the chaplain service. He made out a grave-registration certificate for a soldier who had been killed in action. On that grave-registration certificate was a place for marks of identification. He inserted the words: "The only marks of identification found on the body were the initials 'B. V. D.' on the underwear." And that man was a college graduate.

Some time ago I had a man come from one of the universities to the north country. There was a big yoke of oxen standing nearby. He walked around one of those big oxen and examined him carefully, and finally he turned to me and said: "Is that a female ox?" [Laughter.] And that fellow was a college graduate.

You have all heard the story about Mr. Hopkins. Several members of the Ways and Means Committee can vouch for the story. He appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, arguing in favor of subsistence homesteads. He said, "Why, we are going to give every man a home, 7 acres of land; we are going to give him chickens; we are going to give him this and give him that", and, finally, he said, "to everyone we will give a mule in foal." [Laughter.]

Can you imagine a Democrat making a mistake like that about a mule? [Laughter.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did he make good on that promise?

Mr. ENGEL. I do not know; but I think a Democrat who does not know his mules and a Republican who does not know his elephants is neither a Democrat nor a Republican. He is a mugwump.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has expired.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. A mugwump is one of these boys who always has his mug on one side of the political fence and his wump on the other.

I went up North some time ago, talked to the farmers, and learned how this hog-processing tax works. It is a different story from what these "brain trusters" tell you. Among others I talked to was a young sheriff, whose name was Merle Burket. About a year ago last April a man named Kemper came to Burket and told him he had sold him a hog 2 years ago last January. Burket said, "Yes; I bought a hog from you, but I don't remember when."

Kemper said, "Look up your check book; you paid me by check."

So Burket looked up his check book and found that on January 14, 1932, he bought a hog from this man Kemper. He sat down at his desk and asked, "Do you want the color?"

"No."

"The weight?"

"No."

"Do you want the price?"

"No; all I want is a statement that I sold you the hog."

So Burket wrote out a statement:

"On January 14, 1932, I bought one hog from John Kemper", and signed his name "Merle Burket, dated April 15, 1934." He asked, "What do you want this for?"

"Why," Kemper said, "the Government said you did not pay me enough for that hog."

Burket said, "Why, I paid you what you asked."

"I know you did, but you did not give me enough."

Burket said, "But I ate the hog 2 years ago last January."

Kemper said, "It does not make any difference, you did not pay me enough."

Burket, "I am not going to pay any more for your hog."

Kemper said, "Oh, I am not asking you to pay me any more for the hog; but the Government is going to give me $5 for that hog which you bought at my price, and which you ate 2 years ago last January; and I would be a fool if I did not take the $5."

In another little town in northern Michigan a friend of mine had an old stag. He killed him, took him to town, and sold him, getting $1.75 a hundred. He thought he made a good bargain until the Government agent came along and told him he owed $2.25 per hundred for the hog processing tax. It cost him 50 cents a hundred to give his hog away.

I learned of another case—that of a widow who sold two hogs for the purpose of paying the interest on her mortgage. She got $18.50 for her hogs. Then a Government inspector came along and told her to pay a fine and processing tax of $8.50. This policy finally became so unpopular that the Government inaugurated an exemption of 300 pounds on pork before the processing tax was made to become effective. These are some of the situations that exist in my part of the country.

When they asked the farmer to vote on the hog program, they handed him a check for $150 for 30 hogs or $300 for 60 hogs that he did not raise; and, of course, Mr. Farmer stuck the check in his pocket. Then they said to him, "Now we want you to vote on whether or not you want the Government to pay you another $300 for not raising another 60 hogs"; and, of course, the farmer voted "Yes."

In the meantime the folks down in the cities, the people around here whom the administration wants to pay an average wage of $50 a month, are compelled to pay 50 cents a pound for their pork chops. That is the existing situation.

Mr. Chairman, somehow or other there is something tragic about the destruction of food to me. For 300 years following the time the Pilgrim Fathers landed upon Plymouth Rock, once each year we have raised our hearts in gratitude to the Almighty God, thanking him for a bountiful harvest. In the last 2 years, however, the Democratic Party and the administration have prayed to the Almighty God that He should not give us quite so much, and apparently He has answered our prayer. It seems wrong to destroy food, when men are standing in the soup line hungry and craving for the very things we are destroying.

From everything I have heard since being in this body, it appears that the administration policy is making the rich man richer and the poor man poorer. The large cotton grower defends the cotton program, but the small grower is fighting against this tax, which is forcing him on welfare relief. The same thing is true of the hog raiser.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am greatly encouraged by convincing evidence that is coming to my attention from all quarters of the country indicating Nation-wide approval of the resolution I have introduced to minimize the possibility of war.

In a letter just received the Most Reverend Michael J. Curley, Archbishop of Baltimore, places the weight of his great influence back of my proposal to amend the Constitution so as to provide—except in the case of invasion—for a referendum on war and for taking over of war properties for use of the Government in the event of hostilities in order to remove the profit incentive to war.

The noted clergyman regards my resolution as an effective measure to keep America out of war, and it has his wholehearted endorsement. In his letter he says:

I have read your resolution, and I wish to say to you very frankly that it has my fullest approval. Any measure that will keep us out of war and from a repetition of the horrible tragedy of 1914–18 ought to be welcome to the people of the United States.

It is my humble opinion that the people of this country do not want war, and I doubt if the people of any nation in the world want war. After all, wars are not made by the people, and certainly were not made by the millions of the sons of sorrowing mothers who went down to their graves in the fratricidal strife of those 4 horrible years never to be forgotten.

Nations have been lashed unwillingly into war by high-powered propaganda carried on under the supervision of the swivel-chair gentlemen who keep far away from the danger point in all wars, and at the same time the people have been made the victims of the wretched individuals who have made countless millions of dollars out of, so to speak, the dead flesh of the youth of the world.

Consequently your idea of placing the whole matter before the people for a referendum vote is excellent. The time should be gone forever when a few men can come together and throw nations at each other's throats.

The second section of your bill whereby in case of an unavoidable war the Government should take over public and private war properties is also good. This is something, by the way, that has already been planned by European governments in case of war.

I believe that in this letter the famous divine and leader among men has correctly interpreted the heart and soul of America. I believe, as he does, that the people of this country do not want war and I doubt, as he does, that the people of any nation in the world want war. Wars, as he so aptly says, as a rule are not made by the people who have to do the suffering and the dying. Most wars are caused by ambition and greed and hate and selfishness and are initiated by plots and machinations that are in the highest degree antisocial and antipathetic to every principle of humanity. It is to protect our children and our children's children and the America of posterity from such unholy wars that my amendment is directed, and it is indeed gratifying to me that such an eminent leader as the archbishop believes that it is a sensible measure that should be adopted in the interest of humanity. With all my heart I agree with him that "the time should be gone forever when a few men can come together and throw nations at each other's throats."

The text of my proposed amendment to the Constitution, referred to by Archbishop Curley, is as follows:

SECTION 1. Except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions and attack upon its citizens residing therein, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum. Congress may by law provide for the enforcement of this section.

SEC. 2. Whenever war is declared, the President shall immediately conscript and take over, for use by the Government, all the public and private war properties, yards, factories, and supplies, fixing the compensation for private properties temporarily employed for the war period at a rate not in excess of 4 percent, based on tax values assessed in the year preceding the war.

Many other outstanding leaders of advanced thought have sent letters to me approving the resolution and stating that in their opinion the time has come in the interest of the future peace and security of America to write a war referendum amendment into the Federal Constitution. Many express apprehension that the unsettled condition of the world, the growing war fever, and the saber rattling in Europe may maneuver America into war unless something is done along the line of my resolution to leave the matter of waging war to the sober judgment of the people themselves. Forty-five presidents of universities and colleges have thrown their support to the resolution, speaking for the youth of America.

Eminent Jewish leaders, including such outstanding men as Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, of New York, and Rabbi Morris M. Feuerlicht, of Indianapolis, have declared their support of the resolution, and the Jewish Political Club of Greater New York has asked the author of the resolution to come to New York to speak on the subject at a mass meeting in one of the largest auditoriums on the East Side.

Rabbi Wise, the great leader of the Jewish people, writes:

"I am delighted to have your letter, in which you tell me of your proposed amendment to the Constitution calling for a referendum on war and the conscription of war properties. I believe there should be a referendum on war when war threatens or when the profiteers threaten to bring war, and I have long believed that we have no right to conscript men and not to conscript properties. I am with you on both things."

Rotary Clubs in many cities are showing interest in the resolution and Walter D. Head of New Jersey, vice president of Rotary International, writes:

I have read your resolution through and I want to give it my hearty approval. I suppose it will be very hard to get a resolution of this kind through Congress at present because of the number of interests which will almost inevitably oppose it; however, by working together and refusing to become down-hearted we shall gradually be able to make progress. Any help I can give, you may be sure will be most cheerfully provided.

Dr. Homer P. Rainey, president of Bucknell University, and an eminent leader of the Baptist Church, writes:

Personally I am enthusiastic about such an amendment and would like to see it incorporated into our Constitution. I believe it would do more than any other one thing to eliminate the possibility of war. I assure you it will be a pleasure for me to use my influence in its behalf. Some of us have been talking about these things for a long time, and I am very glad that you have introduced it into Congress.

Dr. G. Bromley Oxnam, president of DePauw University, and an outstanding Methodist, is coming to Washington to testify in support of the Ludlow resolution before the Judiciary Committee, and Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo, pastor of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, of Washington, will be another witness. "I shall do what I can in support of that vitally important movement," writes Dr. W. L. Bryan, president of Indiana University. Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, president of Antioch College, and head of the Tennessee Valley Authority, writes:

I am greatly interested in section 1 of the constitutional amendment you have introduced. In spite of all that can be said against it, I believe it is sound. It may be that the public cannot know the circumstances under which nations enter war, but I believe the reaction of the public would be a better guide than the forces which may suddenly act upon Congress in time of crisis.

Rt. Rev. Joseph E. Ritter, bishop of Indianapolis, and Rt. Rev. E. B. Ledvina, bishop of Corpus Christi, Tex., are among the bishops who have strongly endorsed the so-called "Ludlow amendment." Bishop Ritter writes:

The amendment would be a very effective means of preventing future wars and, at the same time, truly democratic in spirit. If it had been in force at the time of the World War we would never have entered. I am glad to tell you, therefore, that I heartily approve and endorse the amendment and shall do all that I can to create sentiment in its favor.

Declaring that the resolution is "splendid, practical, and humane", Bishop Ledvina writes:

Every thoughtful and peace-loving citizen of this country will undoubtedly hail with a unanimous acclaim your submitted resolution. I, as well as every member of the heirarchy will surely welcome your resolution and will encourage a general support of it in every way possible. I, for one, will leave no opportunity pass by without voicing my sentiments on the subject, both orally and in writing. I hope the congestion of business before the House and Senate will not shut out a due consideration and favorable action on your resolution.

Writing to my beloved friend, Representative FRITZ G. LANHAM, of Texas, President L. R. Scarborough of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary says:

This morning in the chapel of the Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, there being present a large representation of our faculty and student body, I presented the matter of a resolution, Joint Resolution No. 167, submitted to Congress by Representative LOUIS LUDLOW, of Indiana, calling for congressional action on the submission of a constitutional amendment demanding a referendum when war is threatened, and the section taking the profits out of war.

The resolution was immediately and enthusiastically passed asking me to petition our Senators and Representatives to support this joint resolution. It is our belief that this constitutional amendment should be submitted to the people, and we, as admirers of and cooperants with you, would like for you to know of our wishes on this matter, and we hope that you will give careful consideration to this matter and give it your support if it is consistent with your conception of the wisdom of such a plan.

Gen. Smedley D. Butler offers his support in the following letter:

Please allow me to congratulate you on your resolution and to express the hope that you get somewhere with it. I shall be delighted to come to Washington and do all in my power to help you, as I am in thorough accord with the resolution.

General Butler has agreed to come from Pennsylvania to Washington to assist in presenting the resolution at a hearing before the Judiciary Committee.

Strong labor support is lining up back of the resolution. A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, writes from Cleveland, as follows:

I want to assure you that I am in thorough accord with the objects of your resolution. I agree with your statement that Americans should always be willing to come to the defense of their country, and you have well protected this principle by calling for a referendum vote of the people, except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions. I have long been of the opinion that if we could trade all of our peace treaties and peace conferences for just one short treaty whereby all nations would agree not to go to war except upon a majority vote of their people, perpetual peace would be obtained. The United States should show its leadership in this regard. The most devout pacifist and the most proud militarist should favor your resolution if they sincerely believe in the abolition of war as an instrument of national policy.

I am receiving an enormous mail, indicating the wide-spread national interest that has been kindled by my resolution. Petitions being voluntarily circulated in various sections urging adoption of the resolution are signed by many thousands of names; in one city the signers being several thousand school children. Group strength is shown by the adoption of favorable resolutions and memorials by National, State, and local organizations, urging the passage of the proposed amendment. The fear that world conditions are likely to bring about war, undoubtedly is responsible for a considerable part of the stimulus that is being given to the proposal.

I believe that if we can secure the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution, which I have proposed, we will perform a major service to humanity. I believe the adoption of that amendment would be hailed as a rainbow of hope by all the human race. I believe it would protect us from the threat of war which now hangs over the Nation like a pall. I believe it is as good a plan as human ingenuity could devise to save America from unholy and unjustifiable wars in all the years to come. I am for this plan because I believe it would usher in a long era of peace, when we of America may devote ourselves to a thorough job of attending to our own business, cultivating friendly relations with all the nations of the world, and interfering with none; showing, once more, some regard for the spiritual values, ordering our future course along lines of usefulness, rather than destruction, and rehabilitating our happiness and prosperity while we strive to forget the sorrows and bind up the wounds of the last war.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCORMACK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

WATER MAIN AT PEARL HARBOR, HAWAII

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1209) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to relinquish an easement for a water main at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not desire to object, it seems to me these bills ought to be brought up on Consent Calendar day unless there is some particular reason for bringing them up at this time.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. There is urgent necessity for the passage of all the bills that will be called up this afternoon. It is imperative that they be enacted just as soon as possible. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW], the ranking minority member, as well as the other minority members and the majority members, have consented that the bill come up for consideration now.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is there necessity for enacting this bill immediately?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. As early as possible. The same situation applies to all of these Senate bills.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it necessary that this be done now rather than to have them take their turn on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. DARROW. We think it is very essential that this bill be passed at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to relinquish to the trustees under the will and of the estate of Bernice F. Bishop, deceased, all right, title, and interest of the United States in a perpetual easement granted the United States on August 17, 1921, for a right-of-way across portions of Waialae-nui and Waialae-iki, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, for a 4-inch cast-iron water main for naval purposes.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARCHERS CREEK, S. C.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1610) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States a certain strip of land from the State of South Carolina, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it does not seem to me that this bill is so important that it cannot wait for a month or so and take its course on the Consent Calendar with the other bills. If we are going to have a Consent Calendar it seems to me every Member should be treated alike. I have bills on that calendar that I would like to have taken up this afternoon, but I am not going to make the request.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that these are not my bills, but department bills with reference to clearing up the title to certain land in connection with some roads in South Carolina.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that fact and there is nothing personal in the matter. It is just a question of whether or not it is necessary to bring the bills up in this way when we have a Consent Calendar, and whether or not bills from this committee should not be in the same status as bills from all other committees.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I may state to the gentleman that in order to expedite the consideration of public business and of a bill that we considered more important, the Navy appropriation bill, we gave up our right to the call on Calendar Wednesday, when probably all these bills would have been reached, and we are simply asking now that these bills that have been recommended by the Department and passed by the Senate may have the consideration of the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOILEAU. It seems to me that if we are going to follow this practice we should have a special day for the consideration of bills from the departments so that all committees that have such bills might have the same consideration and then we could dispense with the calendar day. I have never objected to the consideration of such a bill and I shall not object in this instance, but it seems to me this is a very bad practice.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. If the gentleman will let this bill go through and another small measure, we will not impose upon the House further.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States title in fee simple to a certain strip of land and the construction of a bridge across Archers Creek in South Carolina", approved February 14, 1927, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States, for military purposes, the title to the following-described parcel of land, to be used for a road from Jericho Point to the Marine Corps Reservation on Parris Island, S. C.: Starting at a point on the north bank of Archers Creek, north 64 degrees, 29 minutes west, 6,563 feet from monument no. 31 at the marine barracks, Parris Island, S. C., thence north, 13 degrees, 40 minutes west, 4,605 feet to a point at the mean high-water line near Jericho Point; thence north, 87 degrees, 39 minutes east, 204 feet to a point also at the mean high-water line near Jericho Point; thence south, 13 degrees and 40 minutes east, 4,565 feet to a point on the north bank of Archers Creek; thence south 76 degrees and 20 minutes west, 200 feet to the point of beginning: Provided, however, That the acceptance of such tract of land by the Secretary is made upon the express condition and limitation that such tract shall be used only for military purposes, and when it shall cease to be actually used for military purposes the title and right of possession shall immediately revert to the State of South Carolina without notice, demand, or action brought."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4764) for the relief of the officers and men of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserves who performed flights in naval aircraft in connection with the search for victims and wreckage of the U. S. dirigible Akron, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not think I shall object to this bill, but I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] in his contention that this establishes a bad precedent. There are good bills on the Consent Calendar and there are some bills that are not so good and some bills that I want to object to. If this precedent is established of coming in here every day and passing bills by unanimous consent that ought to be considered on Consent Calendar day, I think it will be establishing a very bad precedent, but I shall not object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That those officers and men of the United States Naval Reserve and the United States Marine Corps Reserve who, while on authorized active or training duty without pay, between the dates of April 4, 1933, and April 7, 1933, both dates inclusive, performed flights in naval aircraft in connection with the search for victims and wreckage of the United States dirigible Akron, shall be considered as on active duty with pay and shall be entitled to the pay and allowance prescribed by law therefor during the time of performance of such duty.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE COTTON INDUSTRY

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a resolution which I have offered and which I hope to call up tomorrow by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution to provide for certain State allotments under the Cotton Control Act

Resolved, etc., That section 5 (a) of the act entitled "An act to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes", approved April 21, 1934, as amended, is amended by inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence thereof a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no State shall receive an allotment for any crop year beginning with the crop year 1935–36 of less than 4,000 bales of cotton if during any one of the 10 crop years prior to the date of the enactment of this act the production of such State exceeded 5,000 bales."

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, in view of the present deplorable condition in the textile industry of New England, I desire to call attention to a message which I have just received from the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Manchester, advising that that board has unanimously endorsed the resolution which I shall now read, as it will only take a moment.

Resolved by the Board of Mayor and Aldermen of the City of Manchester, as follows:

Whereas the increased cost of manufactured products due to the cotton processing tax falls most heavily upon the laboring people, who can least afford to pay it, and the importation of Japanese textiles seriously affects the industry in which thousands of our residents are employed; and

Whereas the wage differential in favor of the southern textile mills is causing many of our northern textile mills to curtail production or liquidate, and even now has resulted in the demolition of several mills of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., throwing many out of employment: Be it

Resolved, That the board of mayor and aldermen, in regular meeting, urges the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to adopt remedial measures to save the textile industry for Manchester and the State of New Hampshire; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States and to the New Hampshire Senators and Representatives in Congress.

In conclusion, I may say that in this city alone there are from 10,000 to 15,000 men and women who have been engaged in the textile industry of New England.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 1023, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be rereferred to the Committee on the District of Columbia because it involves purely District of Columbia money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

DO NOT ENLARGE WEST POINT—GIVE RESERVE OFFICERS AND NATIONAL GUARD OFFICERS A CHANCE—HEED THE COUNSEL OF OUR LEADING EDUCATORS—AMERICAN ARMY SHOULD CONTINUE DEMOCRATIC

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the desirability and feasibility of appointing National Guard officers to the Regular Army and incorporating therein some letters I have received from the presidents of numerous colleges where there are Reserve Officers' Training Corps units.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in some remarks made on the floor of the House when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration, I am opposed to enlarging the Military Academy at West Point, and opposed to H. R. 6088 which proposes to provide for one additional cadet at the said Military Academy for each Member of Congress, thus increasing the authorized strength of the Military Academy from 1,374, its present strength, to 1,959.

This is approximately a 50-percent increase. A similar proposal has passed the Senate.

Now, before we take this important step toward "militarism" in our Army, before tending further to set up a "military caste system" in our Army, before closing the doors in the faces of thousands of young men who cannot get from their Congressmen an appointment to West Point, let us do some thinking for ourselves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the very outset let me make one fact perfectly plain. I am not opposed to the Military Academy, but, on the contrary, think it is a good school. But I also insist that there are other good schools in the country. I contend that to have more than 50 percent of West Point graduates in the Army will prove detrimental to the Army in many respects. I agree with the criticism made by Dr. Charles W. Eliot president of Harvard University about 25 years ago, as I recall. As I remember his constructive and friendly criticism was to the effect that since nearly all the teachers at the academy are Army officers and nearly all graduates of the academy itself, and since under the ideals of Army discipline there is little independence in the thinking and none in the speech of a subordinate Army officer, the effect would be to narrow and dwarf the vision of both the teaching force and the cadets. Furthermore, he argued, it would lead to what he described as "intellectual inbreeding." We all know that in the Army not only do orders as to conduct emanate from above, but doctrines, thinking, and permissible opinions originate at the top of the Army, which means the General Staff. To take young men at about 18 years and subject them to 4 years of rigid discipline, day and night, to rush them hither and thither in mass formations, to drive into their heads and hearts by teachers in uniform, who have the military power of command, doctrines, and dogmas, tends to dwarf individual thinking, to crush initiative, and create a body of yes men.

Mr. Speaker, my only concern is the eventual and ultimate good of the Army itself and, therefore, of the country. But the same is true also of the Academy. I believe that the student body of the Academy is as large as an institution of that kind can be to be really efficient. A retired general officer who graduated about 50 years ago told me that when he was a cadet, any cadet could know all the other cadets in all the classes. Now, however, a cadet does well to know all the members of his own class. Furthermore, the larger the number of cadets, the less the possibility for individual attention and the more machine-like and the less individualistic becomes the training and instruction. Mr. Speaker, in a letter signed by the Honorable Harry H. Woodring as Acting Secretary of War dated April 1, 1935, and addressed to me in response to a letter of mine dated March 13, 1935, said letter being doubtless prepared in the General Staff after nearly 3 weeks' study, we find this paragraph:

> The appointment of officers from sources other than the Military Academy is most desirable. The Army welcomes these men. Some of the very finest officers we have come from such sources, and there are other advantages that are even greater than the individual merit of such officers. It ties the Regular Army in with the type of men that have to fight the war, because the great bulk of such are going to be civilians that are mustered in for the emergency. It brings in new lines of thought. The War Department would not, if it had the authority, have all the officers of the Army graduates of the Military Academy.

That paragraph makes my argument in full except as to the sentence, "The Army welcomes these men." I believe that phrase betrays the thought that the graduates of the Military Academy regard themselves as "the Army." It betrays a certain habit of thought in using the words "these men" rather than the words "these officers." Every person that I am insisting shall be recruited into the officer personnel of the Regular Army will be already an officer, a Reserve officer, or a National Guard officer. I hope that "the Army" will welcome "these officers" of the Organized Reserves and of the National Guard.

But I take the broad ground that modern warfare, the swift progress of science, the changed tactics enforced by the mechanized and scientific forces and agencies of modern warfare, call for varied talents, for personal initiative, for individual leadership, even in the lowest-officer ranks.

Mr. Speaker, the next paragraph in said letter also expresses the situation correctly, and I now quote it.

> Unfortunately, it has not been possible for some years to make appointments from sources other than the Military Academy for two definite reasons. First, the attrition rate among promotion-list officers has been so far below normal that no vacancies have existed after the graduates of the Military Academy have been commissioned. Second, the Congress has seen fit to limit by appropriation legislation the officer strength to 12,000. However, 30 line officers (Air Corps) who are not graduates of the Military Academy will be appointed this year.

In order to get a picture of the situation, I requested a detailed tabulation of officers appointed in the Regular Army for the 10 years beginning with the year 1925. During that time the number of graduates appointed from the Military Academy was 2,525. During the years 1927, 1928, 1929, and 1930, being the years immediately following the enactment of the Air Corps Act of July 2, 1926, which gave the Air Corps an authorized officer strength of 1,650 officers, there were appointed in the Air Corps a total of 614 Reserve officers.

But for the other 6 years of the 10-year period there were appointed all told only 292 Reserve officers, making an average of only 47 Reserve officers per year. This against an annual average of 252 graduates of the Military Academy. The letter referred to also shows that this year, 1935, there will be only 30 officers appointed to the Air Corps, in addition to the Military Academy graduates. If the number of cadets be increased by practically 50 percent, then after 4 years, unless the number of officers is increased to 14,000 to 15,000, then there will be no vacancies for other than cadets, and in a generation fully 80 percent of all officers will be graduates of West Point. That will be bad for the Army.

While it is true that due to the taking in to the Regular Army in 1920 of over 5,000 World War officers the graduates of the Military Academy are now only about 40 percent of the officer strength, and I am willing to let it increase to 50 percent, yet if the present rate of increases into the Regular Army continues, then when these World War officers die, resign, or retire or be discharged, then the officer strength of the Army, if the plans of the War Department are permitted to go through, will stand in the ratio of about 250 West Point graduates and about 50 Reserve officers. In other words, the ratio will be about 5 to 1. That means that the West Point graduates will be 80 percent of the Army and the Reserve officers from our various R. O. T. C. units and National Guard and other sources only about 20 percent. I hold that such condition will not be for the best of the Army nor the country and that is why I am opposing the proposed legislation and that is the only reason why.

The War Department admits that "the great bulk of the men that have to fight the war are going to be civilians", which means that 78 percent of the officers who lead men in battle will be Reserve officers. We need highly efficient Reserves. The R. O. T. C. is the great feeder source for the Reserves. Whatever raises the standard of R. O. T. C. increases our defense forces.

Mr. Speaker, let us look at the matter from another angle. The training of 123,000 young men in the various R. O. T. C. units for the current year is only about $3,000,000. It has been increased for the year ending June 30, 1936, to about $3,400,000. From this 123,000 young men were graduated and numbered in the Reserve Corps over 6,000 officers. Nearly 1,000 other young men obtain commissions in the Reserve Corps from other sources. But the annual expense of teaching and training about 1,300 cadets at the Military Academy is approximately $2,000,000, but that does not take into consideration the overhead investment and the ordinary pay of the officers detailed as teachers and instructors at the academy. If all these were taken into account, the expense of training 1,300 cadets would be approximately $3,000,000 a year. That is an average of approximately $2,300 per cadet per year. That means that the education of a cadet costs the Government for 4 years nearly $10,000 cash. I have often heard much higher estimates.

If from the R. O. T. C. we graduate approximately 6,000 officers at a total annual cost of $3,000,000, it means that each such graduate has cost us $500 per year or a total of $2,000 for 4 years' training as against $10,000 for the West Point graduate. But that is not the whole story. In addition to the 6,000 who graduate, 117,000 other young men receive some military training. We must not discount the value of that training merely because all of the young men do not graduate and receive commissions in the Reserve Corps. Their training will prove valuable to them in after life and to the Nation in many ways. As an asset of national defense they will be available not only as emergency officers, but as noncommissioned officers in the event of war. Furthermore, doubtless many of them will go into the National Guard and, based on their training in R. O. T. C., will become very useful members of the National Guard, and may eventually become officers and ultimately officers of superior ability. In my humble judgment not over 25 percent of the total $3,000,000 expended on the R. O. T. C. should be charged up as against the 6,000 graduates. If that be true, then each graduate has cost the Treasury of the United States for his 4 years of instruction an average of only about $500. Just how to apportion this cost is a matter of opinion, and I am merely giving my opinion. However, I think any fair-minded man will agree that there are other benefits to national defense from the R. O. T. C. besides the 6,000 graduate Reserve officers.

To strengthen and build up the R. O. T. C. in our schools and colleges will help the colleges themselves. To leave the door of opportunity open to all the 123,000 R. O. T. C. students and to let the best of them win appointments in the Army will stimulate ambition in every one of them, make for a better R. O. T. C., and thus increase the efficiency of the Organized Reserves.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one other consideration. There are annually commissioned about 7,000 young men in the Officers' Reserve Corps, including approximately 6,000 graduates of R. O. T. C. I contend that according to common sense and the mathematical doctrine of probability there must be at least 250 of these 7,000 young Reserve officers, approximately equal in natural ability, in character, in education, and in leadership to the 250 graduates yearly at the Military Academy. It is true that the graduate of the Military Academy can put on a better dress parade as a whole, are better drilled in the school of the soldier, the school of the squad, and the school of the company. The dress parade of the cadets is very pretty, but dress parades do not win wars. I think one proposition must be very sound. It is that surely out of about 7,000 Reserve officers commissioned every year there can be found a number of young men superior in general education, in leadership, and in initiative to the lower half of each West Point class. That lower half is to be determined by the West Point authorities themselves. It is argued that the entire West Point class should be commissioned at all hazards, because they say that ofttimes the men at the bottom of the class make superior officers.

However, surely the West Point authorities would not admit that doctrine, because they rate them according to their desirability as Army officers. Much stress is laid upon the fact that the West Point authorities dismiss those students who have lack of natural ability, or lack of application, or lack of character and aptitude, and are not available for officer material. Since the West Point authorities thus claim to be able to discriminate between those who would make officers and those who would not, surely by the same token they can discriminate between those who would make good officers and those who would make inferior officers. Therefore, taking the standards set down by the Military Academy authorities, I contend that if the annual attrition of officers is about 400, then commission the 200 top men from the Military Academy and commission the 200 top men who apply from the Officers' Reserve Corps for commissions, testing their qualifications by any and every method that the War Department can invent, and let the additions to the officer personnel of the Army from now on rest on a 50-50 basis. Again I emphasize the fact that if the present ratio of increment is allowed to continue, and such is the plan of the War Department, as evidenced by its urgent desire to increase by approximately 50 percent the Cadet Corps at the Military Academy, when the World War officers now in the Army die, resign, retire, or be discharged, then the ratio will be 80 percent West Point and only 20 percent civilian. We must look ahead.

Furthermore, schools often decrease in efficiency, in character-forming influence, as they increase in size. I am a firm believer in the small college for young men entering at about 18 years. It is different in great universities, where each graduate school is a unit within itself. Two thousand boys in one mass at the Military Academy would make it unwieldy as a school.

Mr. Speaker, when this question first came up I sent out a letter to the heads of all schools and colleges where we maintain a senior R. O. T. C. unit, asking their opinion of my proposal to see that the officer personnel of the Army shall be approximately 50 percent West Point graduates and 50 percent young Reserve officers, graduates of R. O. T. C. units, and from the National Guard and other sources. I have received a great many replies and I think it fair to state that 95 percent of the replies are unqualifiedly in favor of the 50-50 ratio. Perhaps approximately 1 percent is out-and-out opposed to any change in the law. Approximately 4 percent express great sympathy with my view but seem inclined to let the matter drift along and thus work itself out ultimately as the matter has been allowed to do heretofore. I believe that the opinions of 95 percent of the educators of America are entitled to great respect. The matter of training Army officers is to a certain extent an educational problem. These professional educators have a background of experience and observation that entitle their opinions great weight in my judgment. They have no motive save the good of the Nation now and hereafter. I stand with them and for the 120,000 boys who are in R. O. T. C., and for the millions who will be led by them in any future war.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I am extracting some of the views on both sides of this question from the answers that I have received and submit herewith as part of my remarks.

University of South Dakota—by Herman G. James, president: "In answer to your letter of March 12 I would say that I think your suggestion for drawing a large part of the commissioned officers in the Army from civil life is a very sound one. I believe that the arguments you advance are based on a correct estimate of the situation. I have talked to some other people in the university whose opinion on that subject would be valuable, and they seem to agree."

Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas—by T. O. Walton, president: "Answering your specific inquiry, may I commend you for your efforts to authorize the commissioning in the Regular Army of the United States of about 50 percent of the vacancies created each year by attrition from R. O. T. C. units, National Guard units, and other military sources. Such a move, in our opinion, would be not only in the interest of economy but in the interest of efficiency."

University of Akron, Ohio—by Charles E. Coates, lieutenant colonel, Infantry, P. M. S. and T.: "I am very much in favor of any plan that will offer the opportunity of a commission to R. O. T. C. graduates."

University of Kentucky—by Frank L. McVey, president: "It is my own impression that students who have done well in college, under the R. O. T. C., should be given some recognition and some opportunity to secure places in the Regular Army."

University of Kentucky—by B. E. Brewer, major, Infantry, P. M. S. and T.: "Each year we produce some outstanding young men who would make excellent officers. Based upon my 25 years' experience in the Army I would especially desire to have them in my command. These men are the cream of our young manhood."

Michigan College of Mining and Technology—by W. O. Hotchkiss, president: "Since returning I have talked with members of the faculty, and they are a unit in thinking that this would be very advisable from our point of view at the college. There is a certain amount of excellent officer material in our unit, and I believe that the boys would be glad to avail themselves of an opportunity to enter the Regular Army."

The Pennsylvania State College—by R. D. Hetzel, president: "In accordance with the request in your recent letter, I have consulted Colonel Venable, who is in charge of our military work, and a number of members of our faculty regarding the availability of officer material from the recently commissioned second lieutenants of our R. O. T. C. unit. Perhaps the most helpful thing I can do is to quote from several of them.

"Colonel Venable says: 'Since graduating from West Point in 1904, I have been intimately associated with officers commissioned from the Military Academy, from temporary forces, from the ranks, from the military departments of civilian educational institutions, and directly from civil life. I do not recollect ever having been stationed where half of my brother officers were graduates of West Point.

"'As a result of my observations, I believe this diversity of origin of officers to be of great value to the service.'"

The Ohio State University—by G. L. Townsend, colonel, Infantry, P. M. S. & T.: "I have noted with great interest the letter of Representative McSWAIN, dated March 15, 1935, which you have referred to me, concerning the suggestion of commissioning R. O. T. C. graduates in the Regular Army.

"Next to the United States Military Academy, I am strongly of the opinion that the colleges maintaining R. O. T. C. units are the very best source from which to obtain officer material for the Regular Army. It has been my good fortune to have 11 years of experience on R. O. T. C. duty the last 8 years at this university. This service has afforded a full opportunity to judge the quality of the young men passing through the military department, and it has been a matter of considerable regret each year that some of them could not be commissioned in the Regular Army, as they would have desired."

University of Minnesota—by L. D. Hoffman, president: "I concur in the principle of offering commissions to outstanding students who have graduated from these units as a hope of reward for merit and believe that it will have a good effect in stimulating interest in their undergraduate military training."

Presbyterian College, South Carolina—by Dr. John McSween, president: "I am most heartily in favor of commissioning selected graduates of the R. O. T. C. in the Regular Army. I consider the R. O. T. C. to be one of the most valuable arms of our national defense and I am perfectly sure that each year we graduate here some men who could render conspicuous service as officers in the Regular Army of the United States, as these men are carefully selected and highly trained and are all men who are outstanding in their class."

University of Oregon—by C. V. Boyer, president: "After receiving your letter of March 15, I referred it to Colonel Murphy, commandant of the university, for an opinion, since he is far better informed upon the principles involved than am I. I am enclosing a copy of his reply which, under the circumstances, I am willing to present as my own opinion. The letter supports your position and is a very clear statement of the principles involved."

West Virginia University—by Robert A. Armstrong, acting president: "As I understand the matter, the mobilization of the man power of the Nation for the unwanted emergency of war might require an army of about four and a quarter million men. Certainly the officers who would lead and direct such effort should be representative of all of our great institutions of learning. With this end in view, I am in entire agreement with your proposal that the officers of the Regular Army should be drawn from the graduates of our universities as well as from West Point."

University of Maryland—by R. A. Pearson, president: "My associates who are most familiar with these matters feel that such a plan deserves commendation but no change should be made in the present method of commissioning officers from the Regular Army and the National Guard, as this arrangement seems to be working satisfactorily."

Rose Polytechnic Institute, Indiana—by D. B. Prentice, president: "In reply to your letter of March 15, I believe that there are a number of men in each class graduating from Rose who have taken the military training of the R. O. T. C. unit who would make good officers in the Regular Army."

University of Maine—by Prof. George William Small, colonel Five hundred and Forty-second Coast Artillery Regiment, commanding: "Your letter of March 22, requesting my opinion of Representative McSWAIN's proposal to fill 50 percent of the officer vacancies in the United States Army with personnel other than West Point graduates, as set forth in his letter of March 15, is at hand. Without going into great detail, I may say that I am strongly in favor of this proposal.

"My war experience, 1917–19, as captain and major of artillery in the A. E. F. impressed upon my mind the desirability of such a procedure. Without minimizing the importance of West Point, it must be admitted that the broader contacts and more diversified interests of officers drawn from various universities throughout the country have made possible, and will continue to make possible, a more sympathetic and efficient control of large masses of untrained citizens that always make up the war-time army."

University of Alabama—by Dr. George H. Denny, president: "In reply to your letter of March 15, I do not fancy that my opinion can be of any particular value. However, I have discussed the matter with some members of our R. O. T. C. staff who are of the opinion that all graduates of West Point should be commissioned; that it would be poor policy and poor economy to educate a young man at the Military Academy and then fail to commission him; that any vacancies remaining after these appointments are made should be filled from R. O. T. C. graduates, enlisted men of the Regular Army, members of the National Guard, and members of the Organized Reserves.

"There is no question that a commission in the Regular Army would be a desirable goal for our R. O. T. C. graduates and would stimulate quite an added interest in our R. O. T. C. organization."

University of Florida—by Hon. Jno. J. Tigert, president: "Personally I would very much favor your plan. I think other members of our faculty would favor it. In other words, Colonel Allen's opinion is representative of the viewpoint of the West Point men and mine will be representative of the opinion of faculty men in the institution."

The Military College of South Carolina—by Gen. C. P. Summerall, president: "In reply to your letter of March 12, I am in fully sympathy with any plan that would offer appointment as second lieutenants to R. O. T. C. graduates, enlisted men of the Regular Army, and members of the National Guard and Organized Reserves. Many superior young officers could be obtained from these sources, and such a policy would give encouragement and well-merited recognition to deserving young men.

"The only difficulty that occurs to me is the effect that the plan would have upon the graduates of West Point. I believe that our history has vindicated the maintenance of the Military Academy and, while all of its graduates have not demonstrated adequate efficiency, there is no way of eliminating those who may fail until they have been tried. Many of our ablest officers did not have a high class standing. I believe that both justice and wisdom require that all the graduates of West Point should be commissioned."

Clemson Agricultural College—by T. S. Moorman, colonel, Infantry, professor of military science and tactics: "There is no better class of young men in the world than the cadet officers of the R. O. T. C. Especially does this apply to cadet field officers. These young men are hand-picked students of the senior class and possess every qualification necessary for appointment as lieutenants in the Regular Army—character, education, and exceptionally good military qualifications for the time spent on the subject.

"The probability of receiving an appointment in the Regular Army will stimulate greater interest in military training, military history, and military science and thereby improve the R. O. T. C. in every respect."

The University of Montana—by C. H. Clapp, president: "I agree with you that the progress and development of the Army will be enhanced by the commissioning of about half of the vacancies in the Army from such sources as the Organized Reserves, the National Guard, and also from the ranks. However, I do think that no such appointments should be made until all members of the graduating class at West Point have received their commissions."

University of Arizona—by H. L. Shantz, president: "It is believed that the prospect of obtaining a commission in the Regular Army will undoubtedly stimulate in all students a greater interest in our Military Establishment and tend to raise the general efficiency of our R. O. T. C. students."

University of Maine—by Arthur A. Hauck, president: "While I should welcome increased opportunities for our graduates to obtain commissions upon graduation, I question whether these commissions should be granted at the expense of the men who take the course at the Military Academy."

University of Michigan—by Frank E. Robbins, assistant to the president: "We believe that it would be a real advantage to the Army if a certain number of the new commissions each year went to persons drawn from such sources as mentioned, particularly the graduates of the courses in military science and tactics in the universities of the country. There are two or three reasons for this."

Coe College, Iowa—by H. M. Gage, president: "Unquestionably the West Point Military Academy is an excellent institution. Many excellent men have been, and are now, numbered among its graduates and there is no reason to believe that it will fail, in the future, to function and progress as it has in the past. But neither is there any grounds for the assumption that excellent prospects cannot be developed at other institutions of learning. Past experience and the present roster of our Regular Army commissioned personnel disprove such insinuation. Initially the cadet and student enrollees are from the same source, and if the educational standards are of the same level the graduates should be equally well equipped to fulfill competently, identical tasks."

The Ohio State University—by George W. Rightmire, president: "On my own part I desire to answer your letter briefly by saying that, in my judgment, the plan you propose for the graduates of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps is a most commendable one. These young men are equipped mentally, physically, and with a considerable degree of military knowledge and attitudes acquired through their Reserve Officers' Training Corps course. Young men of the highest class and of the proper age can be found among those graduates with the commission of second lieutenant. I commend you heartily for the constructive plan which your letter sets forth and trust that you may succeed in having it adopted as a policy."

Norwich University, Vermont—by Porter Adams, president: "The greatest advantage, as I see it, lies in the fact that by so doing we should be stimulating a wide-spread interest in national defense and should provide a definite incentive for boys interested in the military profession to train themselves thoroughly for it. Furthermore, such a plan, as you point out, would tend to broaden the viewpoint of the officer personnel of the Army. In addition, there is an advantage in the fact that the expense to the Government of training this officer material is considerably less per man than at the United States Military Academy."

The University of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania—by Evan T. Sage, professor of Latin, head of department of classics: "The plan proposed would open a new career to the college graduates, and one of manifest attractiveness, especially at such a time as this; it would furnish the Regular Army with a new source of officer material; it would improve the position of the R. O. T. C. by giving it additional recognition and reason for existence; and it would weld more closely together the various elements of the Army and the Army with the civilian population by multiplying the bonds between them."

Lafayette College, Philadelphia—by W. M. Lewis, president: "Our military officers, and others to whom I have talked, believe that the interest in R. O. T. C. units would be greatly increased if one or more members of the senior class could be assured an appointment in the Regular Army. The feeling is that the percentage of officers to be derived from sources other than the Military Academy might well be about 25 percent."

Pomona College, California—by William E. Nicholl: "After consulting with several of my colleagues here, I would say that, on the whole, Pomona College would be favorable to a plan of filling at least 50 percent of the vacancies in the officer personnel of the Army with graduates of colleges who have completed the R. O. T. C. course. I believe such a choice of officers would make for a wholesome balancing of responsibility and leadership in our Army."

Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas—by F. C. Bolton, dean: "I am very much interested in your plan to authorize the filling of approximately half of vacancies in the officer personnel of the Army from the Officers' Reserve Corps, the National Guard, and the ranks of the Regular Army. I believe that this will not only strengthen the Regular Army but that it will have the effect of stimulating greater interest in the National Guard and the Organized Reserves. I am basing this opinion on my contact with the students in the R. O. T. C. work and also upon my contact with the Army in my own capacity as a Reserve officer.

"I believe that an infiltration of a few well-qualified young men graduates of civil educational institutions would bring into the service a point of view which it is not always possible for the West Point graduates to get. Of course, there would continue to be enough West Point graduates to set high standards for the officers, but there would be enough of the officers from civil life to broaden the viewpoint of the graduates from the military academies."

Alabama Polytechnic Institute—by L. N. Duncan, president: "It is my feeling that 50 percent may be high, in view of the fact that the United States Military Academy was created and is operated to train officers for the Army, but if the commissioned strength of the Regular Army is enlarged, a reasonable position of the new officers or addition should come from the R. O. T. C. unit and other sources named by you.

"I believe that this should be done rather than have the enrollment at the United States Military Academy such as to take care of all attrition. These R. O. T. C. units are very efficiently operated, and the instruction they gain, other than in military itself, should be very helpful to them as Army officers."

Connecticut State College—by Charles C. McCracken, president: "I have conferred with the Reserve Officers Training Corps officers in our college concerning the contents of your letter of March 12. Following is a statement which they have given me and I am sending it on to you with my approval: 'It is our opinion that his entire proposal is meritorious and desirable, both from the standpoint of the efficiency of the Army and with a view to stimulating greater interest on the part of Reserve Officers Training Corps students.'"

University of Dayton, Ohio—by Walter C. Tredsin, president: "As a matter of principle, I believe, as you do, that not all new officers from the Army should be supplied from West Point. Here and at other colleges we produce graduates, some of whom are fully equal to the best from West Point, and some of these I should like to see commissioned in the Regular Army."

The University of Tennessee—by James D. Hoskins, president: "In reply to your letter of March 15 asking an opinion as to the availability of officer material from recently commissioned second lieutenants of the Reserve Officers Training Corps units, I may say that I agree in principle with a plan by which a portion of the vacancies of the Regular Army are filled from such sources.

University of Delaware—by Walter Hullihen, president: "In reply to your letter of March 15, I am writing to say that I have conferred with our military instructors and other members of the teaching staff whose opinions seem to me of value. All of us are agreed that your proposal to authorize the commissioning in the Regular Army of the United States of about 50 percent of vacancies occurring each year from such civilian sources as the Organized Reserves, the National Guard, and also from the ranks of the Regular Army is entirely sound."

Purdue University, Indiana—by Edward C. Elliott: "I and my colleagues immediately interested in the work of the R. O. T. C. are agreed that the commissioning of a certain number of graduates each year in the Army would greatly stimulate interest in work of the R. O. T. C. It is my judgment that the men of high standing in R. O. T. C. here would make excellent Regular Army officers."

University of Arkansas—by J. C. Futrall, president: "It is my opinion that the plan you propose is an excellent one. Many of these young graduates of the R. O. T. C. would, in my opinion, make excellent Army officers, and the opportunity to go into the Army would undoubtedly furnish quite a stimulus to the R. O. T. C. work in the colleges and universities."

Virginia Polytechnic Institute—by Julian A. Burruss, president: "We are greatly interested in your letter of March 15, and I assure you that we are fully in accord with the effort you are making to authorize the commissioning in the Regular Army of graduates from standard colleges maintaining R. O. T. C. units. I wish to quote from a statement of Lt. Col. John B. Maynard, professor of military science and tactics, and head of the military department of this institution, as follows:

"'Based on almost 27 years' experience as an officer, I am convinced that most graduates from schools such as the Virginia Polytechnic Institute are fully qualified to perform the duties of officers, equally as well as those graduated from West Point. I also believe it would increase the standards of and interest in the R. O. T. C. if a commission could be made available to a certain percentage of the very best men. I also believe it would be beneficial to the Army to have this leaven of officer material in it instead of having them all come from the same school even though the graduates of that school come from all parts of the United States.'"

Alabama Polytechnic Institute—by P. O. Davis, executive secretary: "The Alabama Polytechnic Institute is in hearty accord with the position stated by you in your letter of March 12."

Cornell University, New York—by Livingston Farrand, president: "I am sure that not only my own opinion but that of my colleagues at Cornell University would be in favor of making a considerable number of such appointments from civilian sources and particularly from among outstanding students of the advanced R. O. T. C. courses in our universities. Opinions would naturally differ as to what the proportion should be."

Oklahoma Military Academy—by Walter E. Downs, president: "In reply to your letter requesting my opinion with reference to the commissioning in the Regular Army of the United States 50 percent R. O. T. C. units from military schools, colleges, and universities, also the Organized Reserves, the National Guard, and from the ranks of the Regular Army, I desire to say that it will do more to advance interest and secure progress in the Army than anything that can be done."

The Creighton University, Omaha—by Rev. P. J. Mahan, S. J., president: "There are many reasons why the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army should be composed of not less than 50 percent from sources other than the Military Academy. The reasons as I see them are:

"(a) The necessity for increased contact between civilians and members of the commissioned personnel of the Regular Army.

"(b) The inculcation of new thoughts and ideas into the extremely conservative organization.

"(c) The stimulation of interest in Army affairs in young men who may not be able to attend the Military Academy.

"It has been my observation that there has been a decided lack of contact between the American military men and the man in civilian life."

The Arkansas State Teachers' College—by Gen. H. L. McAlister, president: "We are all of the opinion that this would be a good plan. I have often heard of the so-called 'West Point clique', although I have never seen it nor have I come in contact with it. I believe it would be a good plan to have the boys in the Army come in closer contact with the civilian."

The Rhode Island State College—by R. G. Bressler, president: "I am in hearty accord and all of our military officers as well as the deans of the college join with me in urging your program, which would make possible R. O. T. C. units to receive consideration for appointments to the Regular Army."

Ripon College, Wisconsin—by Silas Evans, president: "Replying to your letter of March 15, I can report a most enthusiastic reception and approval of the proposed measure which you are promoting. I have spoken to many of our representative men, trustees, and faculty members, and the opinion I herein express is most cordially and enthusiastically expressed by them."

University of Pennsylvania—by Thomas S. Gates, president: "I believe that your plan to appoint R. O. T. C. graduates as second lieutenants in the Regular Army is excellent."

Lehigh University, Pennsylvania—by C. R. Richards, president: "If the enlisted personnel of the Army is increased as proposed, I assume that there will be immediate need for an increase in the number of officers and that a part of this increase may very well be made from the ranks of the Officers' Reserve Corps. I am, therefore, in general agreement with your proposal."

The University of Oklahoma—by W. B. Bizzell, president: "I believe most officers and everyone with a national outlook who is interested in the Army will agree that it would be a good policy to secure a part of the normal officer replacement each year from civilian sources including the R. O. T. C., and that any commissioned from R. O. T. C. graduates would be of exceedingly high promise in leadership, scholastic attainments, aptitude, and general worth.

"Such a policy would furnish incentive to many aspirants exceptionally qualified who might not otherwise consider a military career open to them. It should be of great benefit to the whole country to have this wider spread of opportunity open to the young men of the various sections. The Army would benefit by having a variety in the educational background of its personnel."

North Dakota Agricultural College, North Dakota—by J. H. Shepperd, president, "Replying to your letter of March 15, I wish to say that I believe your plan of using R. O. T. C. members of our graduating class for Regular Army officers to the extent of 50 percent would be a good one."

General Alumni Association, University of Pittsburgh—by John W. Hallock, secretary: "I would suggest the inclusion of the following paragraph in your letter to the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee:

"I am convinced that the proposed policy of recruiting second lieutenants for the Regular Army from existing Reserve Officers' Training Corps units is highly advisable. It will lend greater flexibility to the number of available officers. It will contribute greatly to the morale and training of Reserve officers through stimulating competitive effort for permanent commissions. It will obviate the necessity of an expansion of facilities at West Point. It will stimulate Regular Army officers assigned to R. O. T. C. duty. Finally, it is a splendid economy measure and I earnestly support the provisions of the measure.

"If you wish to add my military title, it is lieutenant colonel in the Corps of Engineers Reserve and chief of the Pittsburgh engineer procurement district."

University of Georgia—by S. V. Sanford, president: "I have talked with Colonel Mann, of the Regular Army, who is in charge of our R. O. T. C. unit, and whose opinion in this matter I value highly, and he states that he is heartily in favor of your entire plan, and believes that officer material taken from outstanding and particularly suitable graduates of the advanced R. O. T. C. students would not only greatly popularize military training in our schools and universities, but would furnish a reservoir of fine young officers who would be second to none, and would place a value of R. O. T. C. training on a higher plane than ever before."

University of New Hampshire—by Edward M. Lewis, president: "Upon inquiry I find that your suggestion meets with a hearty response among those interested in the project on this campus."

The University of Wyoming—by A. G. Crane, president: "I am indeed pleased to acknowledge an inquiry from you asking opinion regarding the proposal to fill a part of the annual vacancies in the Regular Army commissions personnel from the organized reserves of the National Guard as well as from the ranks of the Regular Army. I am in hearty accord with your recommendation. I think the Regular Army, like some other highly organized establishments, has suffered from inbreeding. The introduction of newer blood, which had not been fully indoctrinated with all the precedents, rules, and routine of the establishment would be a decidedly healthy thing for the United States Army."

Yale University—by James R. Angell, president: "I am not in a position to speak for other institutions, but my observation of the facts here at Yale, together with my knowledge of the view of military men who are familiar with our situation, leads me to feel that we could annually offer to the Army for regular appointment as second lieutenants several absolutely first-class men.

"There seems to be no question that, if the possibility of such appointments were known, there would be a marked increase in the interest in the work of the R. O. T. C., and a notable increase of enrollment.

"That the injection of a collegiate group of this kind into the Army would have a beneficial effect of the officer personnel of the Regular Establishment also seems to me beyond question."

Wofford College, South Carolina—by Henry N. Snyder, president: "In reply I write to say that I approve heartily of your proposal to authorize the commissioning of the Regular Army graduates of R. O. T. C. institutions. My view is that you will get an unusually fine quality of young men. They have had a more generalized cultural equipment than perhaps they would get at West Point, and, in addition, have had the fundamentals of technical military training. I believe it would be greatly to the advantage of the Army to feed in men of this type."

Rutgers University, New Jersey—by John C. Clother, president: "I have read with interest your letter of March 15 and have taken it up with the officers of our military staff. It is our feeling that the plan which you propose would stimulate interest in the R. O. T. C. courses at our universities and that benefit would result."

New York University—by Harold O. Voorhis, secretary: "Replying to your letter of March 12, it seems to us that if we are to go on supporting in our colleges as a part of the national defense the work of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, reasonable provision should be made for the active employment in the Army of officer material so trained. Your effort toward this end seems deserving of encouragement."

University of Illinois—by A. C. Willard, president: "It is our belief that the commissioning in the Regular Army of a fixed percentage of Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduates annually, to be selected and recommended by the professor of military science and tactics and approved by the president of the institution, would provide a great incentive for enrollment and for high standing in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and also for high academic standing in college courses, as the two are inseparably bound together. We now limit our selection of students for the advanced course to those with good academic standing. This gives us the cream of the young men in the university; and, therefore, if the best of our Reserve Officers' Training Corps graduates be commissioned in the Regular Army, it is evident that they would be unusually well qualified for such appointment."

Drexel Institute, Philadelphia—by Parker R. Kolbe, president: "I agree with the suggestion made in your letter of March 12. It would undoubtedly stimulate interest in military training if the possibility of obtaining a commission in the Regular Army were held out to the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. I am further of the opinion that the graduates from the advanced course in our Reserve Officers' Training Corps colleges would make splendid material for service in the Regular Army."

Massachusetts Institute of Technology—by S. C. Vestal, colonel, Coast Artillery Corps, P. M. S. and T.: "I am in favor of Mr. McSwain's idea for two reasons:

"(1) The outlook of the Army is broader if its officers come from various sources. An exclusively West Point produced personnel would tend to become inbred and narrow minded. Moreover, such a corps of officers invites caustic criticism upon the Army and upon the Military Academy, as anyone will perceive who looks through the contents of Benton's Thirty Years in the United States Senate, which covers the period from 1820 to 1850, when the officers of the Army came almost exclusively from West Point. There has been comparatively little of the criticism of the kind voiced by Senator Benton since the Civil War, for the reason, in my opinion, that, in addition to graduates of West Point, there has always been a large percentage of officers who came into the Army as a result of the Civil, Spanish-American, and World Wars, and in addition many appointees from the Army, civil life, and from our schools and colleges.

"(2) A great incentive would be given to the advanced R. O. T. C. if a certain number of commissions in the Regular Army were given to outstanding R. O. T. C. graduates directly upon graduation. No incentive is given to the R. O. T. C. by the fact that its graduates may later compete for commissions as Reserve officers, and I do not believe that the Officers' Reserve Corps is greatly benefited by the fact that officers in its lower grades may compete for commissions in the Regular Army."

Massachusetts Institute of Technology—by Karl T. Compton, president: "Advantages which I see in your plan are: First, the stimulating effect of bringing into the regular service men who have this outlook and training which the West Point graduates may not have, excellent as their special training is. There is a fundamental danger in all organizations of depending exclusively on one source of personnel, and this is accentuated in the Army by the fact that most of the instruction is given by men who have themselves gone through the same mill."

The State College of Washington—by E. O. Holland, president: "I have made careful inquiry of a number of competent persons relative to this matter and all of us are agreed that such a plan, if carried out with some degree of care, would be helpful to the United States Army and also increase the support by the public generally of our standing Army."

Kansas State College—by F. D. Farrell, president: "Each year somewhat more than 5,000 graduates of Reserve Officers' Training Corps units in our colleges and universities are given commissions in the Organized Reserve. It would be practicable to select each year from this number several hundred young men of exceptional qualifications as Army officers. I believe that the throwing open of a moderate number of lieutenancies to the outstanding stimulus of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps would be a great stimulus to military training in our colleges and universities and a significant contribution to our national defense."

Virginia Military Institute—by John A. Lejeune: "I cannot speak for the Reserve Officers' Training Corps units in the other colleges, but I am certain that the average graduate from the Virginia Military Institute is well fitted to be commissioned as a second lieutenant in the branches of Cavalry, Field Artillery, and Infantry in the Regular Army. I base this opinion on the fact that cadets here live in a similar state of discipline as at West Point, and they have guard duty, daily parade, review and inspection, and drills in Infantry, Field Artillery, and Cavalry. All of the cadets belong to the Reserve Officers' Training Corps unit except a few who are not qualified physically, but they drill nevertheless.

"I am therefore heartily in favor of commissioning a liberal proportion of our graduates in the Army, and I know that it would be beneficial to the Army, bringing into it different modes of training and thought."

Carnegie Institute of Technology, Pennsylvania—by Charles Watkins, assistant to the president: "After consulting with members of our faculty, including a representative from the military department, I wish to recommend your plan for authorizing the commissioning of Army officers from Reserve Officers' Training Corps units. Personally, I believe this to be a move in the right direction and was somewhat surprised to find that graduates of West Point, now attached to our military department, are enthusiastic in their endorsement of this step."

The University of Akron, Ohio—by H. E. Simmons, president: "The University of Akron is certainly happy to lend its support to any measure that would make it possible for 50 percent of the vacancies created each year to be filled by graduates from recognized Reserve Officers' Training Corps units."

Ouachita College, Arkansas—by J. R. Grant, president: "I am heartily in favor of commissioning men from the ranks of our Reserve Officers' Training Corps. For fear I might not see it in the right light, I asked Major Amis, who has charge of our Reserve Officers' Training Corps, to make a statement for you. He has addressed it to me but I am enclosing it in my letter. I think he has expressed my sentiments well."

College of Engineering and Commerce, Cincinnati, Ohio—by Herman Schneider, dean: "Dr. Gowdy and I have gone over the letter, hereto attached, from Congressman JOHN J. MCSWAIN. The letter, in substance, proposes that one-half the vacancies in the commissioned ranks of the Regular Army be appointed outside the graduates of the United States Military Academy. It seems to me that this would be a good policy, beneficial both to the Army and to the engineering profession. I know that our own graduates would meet the requirements successfully."

The University of Tennessee—by Guy M. James, second lieutenant, Light Infantry, O. R. C.: "I have always heard that if the Army had a friend in Washington, it was Congressman MCSWAIN, and that Congressman MCSWAIN was a great champion of Reserve officers. Because of this, and because I know of the invaluable aid you gave to Captain Kemp in his recent trouble, I would like to ask if you would help me solve a problem I have struggled with in the darkness of ignorance, with no success.

"I am a graduate of the 1934 class of the University of Tennessee and am now 23 years of age. I hold a second lieutenant's commission in the Reserve Corps and have completed my work up to the grade of captain in less than 2 years. I am rather proud of the short record I have been able to attain in the corps.

"During my senior year at the university and up to the present I have served as instructor in the military department of the University of Tennessee entirely on my own initiative and with no pay, merely to increase my efficiency as an officer. While this means nothing toward promotion nor helps my military record, I think I am better for having done it, and I believe I can say without boasting that the Regular Army officers on duty at the university would give a good report on me. I have many recommendations from Army officers under whom I have served which I can submit with pride at any time.

"More than anything in the world, I want to be an officer in the Regular Army, and would gladly do anything necessary to obtain a commission if I only knew what was required and how to go about the affair. I have written the War Department about it, and they tell me that only West Pointers are appointed in the Regular Army. I feel certain that there must be some way for a person who is as much interested in the Army as I am to do something about it."

The University of Nebraska—by Charles E. Speer, major, Infantry; Walter T. Scott, captain, Infantry; G. W. Spoerry, captain, Infantry: "That the officer personnel and the Army in general will be closer to the people and rated higher by the man on the street if a larger percentage of its officers be appointed from men who have made themselves outstanding and filled a niche in college life as well as the home community before entering the service."

Western Maryland College—by A. N. Ward, president: "I want to say that I endorse the principle of your plan of authorizing the commissioning in the Regular Army of the United States of about 50 percent of the vacancies created each year by ordinary attrition from such civilian sources as the Organized Reserves, the National Guard, and also from the ranks of the Regular Army. I believe that a number of our students graduating in the R. O. T. C. who would make desirable officers would like to apply for these commissions. This opinion is also held by the officers in our R. O. T. C. unit and by our representative faculty members."

Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College—by Henry G. Bennett, president: "I favor such a policy for two reasons: First, it will tend to minimize the effects of inbreeding, which results from depending upon one usual source for all officers. Second, it will promote better a democratic spirit in the permanent establishment. I think, in addition to this, that the influence of such an opportunity will react most beneficially upon the morale of R. O. T. C. units."

The University of North Dakota—by John C. West, president: "I am quoting herewith a report by my professor of military science, who is a graduate of the Military Academy and has served approximately 26 years in the Regular Army:

"'There is no better material for officers than the "cream" of the R. O. T. C. graduates each year. As the regulations now read, each R. O. T. C. unit can recommend 5 percent of its graduates as "honor graduates." These men can accept commissions in the Regular Army without examination, except the physical examination, if there are any vacancies, after the West Point class of that year has been commissioned. There have been no vacancies for several years.'

"I have had close contact with several officers who have entered the Army from R. O. T. C. units and every one of them has been an excellent man. One of these is now an assistant professor of military science at this university.

"If the prospect of obtaining a commission was offered to the R. O. T. C. graduates, it would be one of the best stimulants possible for them."

THE WATERS OF THE COLORADO RIVER

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a brief memorial passed by the Legislature of Colorado concerning the Colorado River compact.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following Senate Joint Resolution 17, adopted a few days ago by the Thirtieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, protesting against the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, entering into a contract with the State of Arizona for the storage in and delivery of 2,800,000 acre-feet of water from the Boulder Canyon Reservoir. The matter referred to in this resolution pertains to and is more fully explained in my letter to the Secretary of the Interior of the 2d of April and published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3, 1935. The resolution is as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 17

Whereas we are advised that the State of Arizona has requested, or is about to request, the honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States to enter into a contract with that State for the storage in and delivery of certain waters from the Boulder Canyon Reservoir; and

Whereas the State of Colorado is vitally interested in protecting her rights in the waters of the Colorado River: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirtieth General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring therein), That we do hereby protest the entering into such contract by the honorable Secretary of the Interior with said State; and be it further

Resolved, That our secretary of state is hereby directed to transmit a certified copy of this joint resolution to the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, and to Hon. EDWARD P. COSTIGAN, Hon. ALVA B. ADAMS, Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR, Hon. JOHN A. MARTIN, Hon. LAWRENCE LEWIS, and Hon. FRED CUMMINGS, our Senators and Representatives, respectively, in the Congress of the United States.

RAY H. TALBOT,
President of the Senate.
M. J. WALSH,
Secretary of Senate.
MOSES E. SMITH,
Speaker of the House.
JOHN T. DOYLE,
Chief Clerk.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. CONNERY, for 2 days, on account of important business.

COTTON GROWING, PROCESSING, AND MANUFACTURE INTO TEXTILES AND OTHER PRODUCTS

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to inform the House that I have introduced a resolution providing for a special committee to obtain the facts in relation to cotton growing, processing, and manufacture into textiles and other products, and to investigate the loss of American cotton markets to foreign competitors, and to determine means whereby the American cotton market, both domestic and foreign, may be regained and expanded.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 93. An act to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths;

S. 1208. An act authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award;

S. 1210. An act authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths; and

S. 2197. An act to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 24, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

309. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of an accumulation of documents and files of papers in the Philadelphia depot of the Quartermaster Department no longer useful in the transaction of public business; to the Committee on Disposition of Executive Papers.

310. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report of papers or documents now in the files of that office no longer required in the transaction of public business; to the Committee on Disposition of Executive Papers.

By Mr. CORNING: A bill (H. R. 7690) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the twohundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the city of Albany, N. Y.; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. GREEVER: A bill (H. R. 7691) to authorize the erection of additional facilities at the existing Veterans' Administration Facility, Cheyenne, Wyo.; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

By Mr. SIROVICH: Legislation (H. Res. 202) providing for a special committee to obtain the facts in relation to cotton growing, processing, and manufacture into textiles and other products, and to investigate the loss of American cotton markets to foreign competitors and to determine means whereby the American cotton market, both domestic and foreign, may be regained and expanded; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SMITH of Connecticut (by request): Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 256) to amend Public Resolution No. 40, Seventy-third Congress, approved June 18, 1934; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 257) to amend a joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution for the relief of Porto Rico", approved December 21, 1928, as amended by the Second Deficiency Act, fiscal year 1929, approved March 4, 1929; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. KELLER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 258) to provide for certain State allotments under the Cotton Control Act; to the Committee on Agriculture.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, re the reduction of the present tax on beer and other liquor; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, favoring the Pulaski memorial resolution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 or rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYERS: A bill (H. R. 7692) to provide for replacement of the old Fort C. F. Smith Monument in Custer Battlefield National Cemetery, Mont.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BOLTON: A bill (H. R. 7693) for the relief of Mike Duran; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CASEY: A bill (H. R. 7694) for the relief of Henry Werre; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHAPMAN: A bill (H. R. 7695) granting a pension to Zack H. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COLLINS: A bill (H. R. 7696) granting a pension to Cudleigh Andrews Clifford; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOBBINS: A bill (H. R. 7697) authorizing the President to order Jesse T. McDavid before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and, upon the findings of such board, determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list, because of distinguished service in the World War, with the rank and pay of a lieutenant colonel; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H. R. 7698) to correct the naval record of Howard Barras; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GREENWOOD: A bill (H. R. 7699) granting a pension to Frank Burcham; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEE of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 7700) to reimburse the Soldiers' Tubercular Sanitarium of Sulphur, Okla., for unauthorized emergency treatment and hospitalization of service-connected World War veterans given prior to July 1, 1930; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PALMISANO: A bill (H. R. 7701) granting a pension to Joseph Galonska; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SCHULTE: A bill (H. R. 7702) for the relief of John A. Barr; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 7703) granting a pension to Mary Alice Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7704) granting an increase of pension to Ann Eliza Ansell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7705) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Chisholm; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7706) granting an increase of pension to Melissa D. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 7707) granting an increase of pension to Roxalina Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ZIMMERMAN: A bill (H. R. 7708) granting a pension to Roy Walker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7320. By Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma: Petition headed by A. H. Lesesne, of Glenwood, Ga., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7321. Also, petition headed by J. Austin, of Carrsville, Va., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7322. Also, petition headed by Henry Padget, of Chesterfield, Ill., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7323. Also, petition headed by D. Pryear, of Drewery, Ala., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7324. Also, petition headed by Frank Tatom, of Prattville, Ala., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7325. Also, petition headed by A. Smith, of Straven, Ala., favoring House bill 2856, by Congressman WILL ROGERS, the Pope plan for direct Federal old-age pensions of $30 to $50 a month; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 93. An act to authorize certain officers of the Navy and Marine Corps to administer oaths;

S. 1208. An act authorizing personnel of the naval service to whom a commemorative or special medal has been awarded to wear in lieu thereof a miniature facsimile of such medal and a ribbon symbolic of the award;

S. 1210. An act authorizing certain officials under the Naval Establishment to administer oaths;

S. 2197. An act to permit construction, maintenance, and use of certain pipe lines for petroleum and petroleum products in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 7054. An act to provide for the protection of land resources against soil erosion, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF THE BANKRUPTCY LAW—REORGANIZATION PLANS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of the United States, praying for the adoption of a "share-the-wealth" program, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Commodore John Barry Division, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Perth Amboy, N. J., protesting against alleged religious persecutions and the desecration of church property in the Republic of Mexico, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of Gertrude Atherton, of San Francisco, Calif., praying for an investigation of charges filed by the Women's Committee of Louisiana relative to the qualifications of the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. LONG and Mr. OVERTON], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WALSH presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Federation of Italian Societies and Clubs, of Lawrence, Mass., praying for the taking of adequate measures to protect the textile industry, particularly the cotton industry, as now affected by the processing tax and imports, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Local Union No. 2420, United Textile Workers of America, of Worcester, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called "Wagner labor disputes bill", the "Black 30-hour work week bill", and also legislation limiting the use of Federal military equipment in strike situations, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Branch No. 20, of Roxbury; Branch No. 98, of New Bedford; and Branch No. 137, of Adams, all of the Workmen's Sick and Death Benefit Fund in the State of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2827) to provide for the establishment of unemployment, old-age, and social insurance, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Retail Drug Trade Authority for the Sixth Congressional District of Massachusetts, Gloucester, Mass., favoring the extension of the National Industrial Recovery Act, and the strengthening of the code of fair competition for the retail drug trade, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Wire Workers' Union, No. 19859, of Worcester, Mass., favoring the enactment of the so-called "Black 30-hour work week bill" and the "Wagner labor-disputes bill", which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter from James S. Milloy, written on the letterhead of the Minneapolis Tribune, and dated at Washington, D. C., April 20, 1935, enclosing a statement prepared by the National Committee on Small Farm Ownership relative to the so-called "Bankhead-Jones farm tenancy bill", which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

HOP GROWING IN NEW YORK STATE

Mr. WAGNER presented a telegram from Curtis Miller, president of the New York State Hop Growers' Association, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WATERVILLE, N. Y., April 19, 1935.

Hon. ROBERT WAGNER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

New York State Hop Growers' Association oppose the McNary bill, as it will deprive New York State of a great potential industry. New York State hops are the best brewing hops produced in the United States. Hops will furnish employment in New York State during the next 5 years for 1,000 men for 6 months and 5,000 women and children during the hop harvest. Hops will pull central New York out of the depression. Hops will distribute a large amount of money direct to the farmer, and this stimulates general business.

CURTIS MILLER,
President New York State Hop Growers' Association.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SMITH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 1807) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 548) thereon.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2647) authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claims of subcontractors, materialmen, and laborers for material and labor furnished in the construction of a post-office building at Hempstead, N. Y., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 549) thereon.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 23d instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 1572) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BULOW:

A bill (S. 2657) for the relief of Harold Dukelow; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 2658) granting an increase in pension to Annie Thompson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McGILL:

A bill (S. 2659) granting a pension to Emil Swinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

(By request.) A bill (S. 2675) for the relief of Horton & Horton; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 106) authorizing a preliminary examination or survey of Homer Harbor, Kachemak Bay, Alaska; to the Committee on Commerce.

COORDINATION OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a bill which was handed me by the Secretary of the Interior. It is addressed to interior subject matter. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, of which I am chairman. With the bill, there has been handed to me a statement, and I am authorized to announce that the President of the United States has had consideration of the bill, knows the policy of it, and approves its purposes.

I beg to have the bill referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as indicated by the Senator from Illinois.

The bill (S. 2665) to change the name of the Department of the Interior and to coordinate certain governmental functions, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

BEQUEST OF OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to introduce a joint resolution to authorize the acceptance, on behalf of the United States, of the bequest of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, formerly an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The joint resolution is introduced by request, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Library.

I may say that some question has arisen in my own mind as to the correct reference of the joint resolution. I am asking now that it be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred as indicated by the Senator from Arkansas.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 107) to authorize the acceptance, on behalf of the United States, of the bequest of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, formerly an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, for the purpose of establishing a collection of the portraits of the former Justices of that Court and for the creation of scholarships for selected law students, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 4764) for the relief of the officers and men of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserves who performed flights in naval aircraft in connection with the search for victims and wreckage of the U. S. dirigible Akron, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL

Mr. VAN NUYS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6732) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BYRD

Mr. BACHMAN. Mr. President, on Monday evening last the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] delivered over the radio a very interesting, illuminating, and timely address on the subject of proposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act. During the course of his address he said:

I have great sympathy with Secretary Wallace in his difficult tasks. I am anxious to cooperate with him in all sound measures to improve the condition of agriculture, but I cannot vote to grant him power no official should have in a democratic country and no human being could effectively make use of. Like him, I am desirous to consolidate the gains agriculture has made in the past 2 years. The time has come to consider these improvements from the standpoint of the future so that underconsumption of our farm products and the loss of our export trade may be remedied and thereby place agriculture on a sounder basis of prosperity.

Without quoting further from the address of the Senator from Virginia, I ask that, as an entirety, it may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RADIO ADDRESS IN OPPOSITION TO AMENDMENTS TO AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT, DELIVERED BY HON. HARRY F. BYRD, APRIL 22, 1935

A year ago I opposed amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act that would make the Secretary of Agriculture the supreme dictator over everyone who produces food and over everyone who handles such products. The legislation died on the calendar by reason of the intense opposition that then developed.

Tonight I again speak in opposition to the same legislation dressed up a little differently and worded more adroitly so as to conceal the real meaning, but in Senate bill 1807 virtually the same proposals are now before the Senate.

The danger today is that only one side of the vital issues now confronting our people will be presented. The restraining influence of public sentiment may not be vocal enough to prevent the adoption of legislative policies which the people themselves may bitterly oppose after the full effects are understood.

Never in our history have public funds been so lavishly spent to control the opinions of our people as now. Never have so many highly paid publicity agents been in the employ of our Government. And for what? To influence the Congress to adopt legislative policies when under our representative democracy the swell of public sentiment should come from the patriotism and the uninfluenced and considered judgment of our citizens back home.

In this legislation my experience of 30 years as a farmer convinces me that sweeping powers to license the farmers and all who handle food are impractical. Chaos and confusion to the farming industry will inevitably result.

Throughout my public career as Governor of Virginia and then as Senator, my desire has been to promote the welfare of the farmers. My firm conviction is that the prosperity of the farmer controls the prosperity of our Nation. So tonight I speak as a farmer to other farmers, and only ask that my remarks be considered as contributing to this debate the position of one who has had practical experience and is considering the realities.

I have great sympathy with Secretary Wallace in his difficult tasks. I am anxious to cooperate with him in all sound measures to improve the condition of agriculture, but I cannot vote to grant him power no official should have in a democratic country and no human being could effectively make use of. Like him, I am desirous to consolidate the gains agriculture has made in the past 2 years. The time has come to consider these improvements from the standpoint of the future so that under consumption of our farm products and the loss of our export trade may be remedied and thereby place agriculture on a sounder basis of prosperity.

I say the advocates of this legislation have not been frank because the amendments to the Agricultural Adjustment Act are termed merely "clarifying", when the legislation proposed gives to the Secretary of Agriculture dictatorial powers to license, upon such terms as he may determine, not only virtually every farmer, but every handler and distributor of foods as well.

Remember that the existing Agricultural Adjustment Act gives power only for the control of certain basic commodities named by Congress, and excepting for tobacco and cotton where special legislation was enacted or in cases of voluntary marketing agreements, the control of the farmers by the Secretary of Agriculture is by their consent only. With respect to tobacco and cotton, restrictive measures can only be undertaken when a substantial majority of the producers approve.

I have not hesitated to support legislation designed to assist the orderly and profitable production and marketing of farm products. Where a substantial majority of the growers of an agricultural product desire by an uninfluenced referendum to restrict production, I will support the necessary legislation to do so, always preserving the right of discontinuance or change when the producers desire. I mention this to emphasize that the original legislation was not to dictate to the individual farmer, but to furnish facilities to effect such arrangements as the producers may desire.

As illustrative of the evil of creating a great bureaucracy that uses some power as a lever to get more power, the legislation now requested by the Secretary of Agriculture gives to him arbitrary and autocratic control over the production and distribution of every farm product, perishable and nonperishable. This control will be exercised by the most offensive method—a licensing system where the terms of the license can be fixed by the Secretary, and no one can ship or handle food in intrastate, interstate, or foreign commerce without such license. I quote here the licensing provision of the law proposed: "After due notice and opportunity for hearing, and upon a finding by the Secretary that such action will tend to effectuate the declared policy of the act, to issue licenses to processors, associations of producers, and others engaged in the handling of any agricultural commodity or product thereof, or any competing commodity or product thereof, in the current of or in competition with or so as to burden, obstruct, or in any way affect, interstate or foreign commerce, which provide that such handling may be engaged in by the licensees only upon such terms and conditions, etc."

Processing is defined (and again I quote from the law) "involving a change in the form of the commodity or its preparation for market." The individual farmer is not mentioned in the licensing clause, yet any farmer who prepares for market or handles for sale any product of his farm, or any association of producers, is subject to a license upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe, or the license can be denied by the Secretary, and if granted may contain restrictions which will render impossible the marketing of such product, as the Secretary is given broad authority to determine the character of the provisions of the license. The terms of the license could restrict production or specify the markets to be shipped to, or otherwise completely control the farmer in his operation. And then every handler of a food product could be likewise licensed, so that beginning with the farmer a license could follow every article of food, down to the retail food stores and the delivery wagon that carries the food to the very door of the consumer. Only the person who eats the food will escape this Federal dictatorship. Perhaps later the power of license will be extended to regulate what we shall eat and how much, and save us the trouble of attending to that detail of our daily existence.

Let the farmers remember that no compensation can be paid for any farm product excepting those named in the original legislation and on which processing taxes are levied.

The failure to observe the terms of the license would be punishable by fines as high as $500 a day, if the hapless farmer were convicted.

In the mass of regulatory legislation recommended by bureau chiefs at Washington, and the rapid strides our National Congress is making to regiment the people of our country, nothing before suggested even approaches the magnitude of the task of controlling by license all food products from the farmer to the ultimate consumer.

In a much-discussed speech made by Secretary Wallace in New England a few days ago he clearly indicated his desire for great additional powers of regulation of all foods, yet the testimony before the congressional committees was to the effect that the Department did not intend to use all the power requested, but desired such authority as a gun behind the door or a big stick.

I have never known a bureau to have power without exercising it. If Mr. Wallace does not intend to use this additional power he should not ask Congress to grant it. Congress should only grant power on the assumption that it will be used.

In considering the demand of the Department of Agriculture for authority to assume supreme control over all food products, the Tugwellian philosophy of "planned economy" is of interest .This philosophy, as outlined in the books and speeches of Professor Tugwell, now Under Secretary of Agriculture, means, first, governmental regulation of all business, and then governmental operation of all business, and then, in the exact words of Dr. Tugwell himself: "It has already been suggested that business will logically be required to disappear. This is not an overstatement for the sake of emphasis; it is literally meant."

We have before us the example of the N. R. A., which controlled industry as the A. A. A. is now attempting to get power to control the farmer. What have been the results? Has the governmental control of private business ever reduced the cost of operation of that business or improved its efficiency? The N. R. A. increased the cost of manufactured goods to the consumer without corresponding benefits as a whole to business or to labor. Under the N. R. A. for the first time in the history of America it became a crime to give the consumer the benefit of a reduced price. The antitrust laws are suspended to raise the price as high as the traffic will bear, but let a reduced price be quoted and under certain codes a business man may become a criminal.

We should profit and learn by the wise system of trial and error. The N. R. A. endeavored to regulate the details of more than 700 classes of businesses. If the N. R. A. had confined its operation to a few basic commodities, its opportunity for success would have been greater.

The A. A. A. started out to control certain basic commodities, and undismayed by the failure of the N. R. A. to regulate all business, now wants to extend its control over all farmers, all processors of food and all handlers, by a system of universal licensing. In other words, we are now asked to N. R. A. the farmers of America.

The N. R. A. has injured and in many instances destroyed the small business man, and a licensing system will injure the small farmer. Let me call your attention to a handler of food such as a wholesale dealer. This dealer must now obtain a license to do business from the Federal Government. He must be licensed by his particular code authority under the N. R. A., and then if this legislation is enacted he must get a third license from Secretary Wallace. How could any business man operate successfully with three bureau bosses, each with power to revoke his license to do business? The several licenses may even contain conflicting provisions. And listen to this. The cost of the several licenses and the policing of the vast organization must be paid by the person who obtains the license, who in turn will endeavor to add such cost to the price paid by the consumer, or failing in this, the expense of this supervision will be deducted from the price received by the farmer.

Imagine a farmer who grows a perishable crop waiting for the unwinding of the red tape at Washington, thousands of miles away, before he can ship a product that will spoil in a few hours.

When it comes to the penalties for violations of the act, the courts are set aside and the Secretary takes the place of both court and jury. If a license is issued in accordance with law, namely, to carry out the policies of the act and to bring about normal economic conditions of marketing, etc.—and this gives the greatest possible latitude to the Secretary and makes him virtually the sole judge—then his decision is not reviewable by the court and he has the power to fine those who ship without a license, and the penalty shall be payable to the Treasury of the United States and recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States.

Theoretically, only Congress has the power to tax, but under this proposed legislation the Secretary is given the right to prescribe operating funds for any of his activities to police the farmers, and to require any licensee to pay any such amount in such manner and to such person as the Secretary may direct. Failure to pay what the Secretary decides is necessary will be ground for suit by the Federal Government. This arbitrary tax is in addition to other appropriations and processing taxes provided in the original Agricultural Adjustment Act, and contains no safeguard whatsoever as to the use for which the money is to be expended, or the number of agents to be employed, or the salaries to be paid. The Secretary could hire as large a staff of policemen, inspectors, auditors, and clerks as he desired.

The growth of the power of Federal bureaus has been recognized for years as a dangerous invasion of the liberty of the individual. All administrative bureaus should keep strictly within the powers granted to them and the courts must be free to protect the constitutional rights of the individual when he suffers by subjection to the arbitrary decisions or acts of a Federal bureau.

The powers of many of these Federal bureaus are indeed kingly. One reason is that authority is delegated by Congress to make regulations. It is very difficult for the individual to persuade even the court to extricate him uninjured when he is caught in the mesh of one of these regulations.

In theory, unconstitutional rules and unconstitutional legislation will be declared invalid by the courts; but in practice, administrative rules of the bureau, effectively enlarging its powers, will be sustained unless clearly erroneous. Then, too, only the well-to-do citizen can finance a lawsuit to test his complaint that a great Federal bureau has invaded his constitutional rights.

Even the King of England, in the old days of more absolute monarchy, could not enter uninvited the cabin of his poorest subject, and yet many of these officeholders, attired in plain clothes, exercise more power under a straw hat than did the King of old adorned with a jeweled crown. Americans today must keep watch and ward over the liberty of the citizen to go about his own business with that degree of ordered freedom that has enabled him to develop here a strong nation of strong men happy in the enjoyment of liberty protected by law.

When you put men in regiments and drill their steps, you gain power in mass momentum but you stifle the initiative of every individual who may advance the progress and welfare of us all if given free play to his talents and enterprise. The modern American may have to surrender a measure of his independent action to the social necessities of these hard times, but he should never consent to be awakened each morning by the blare of a bureaucratic bugle and required to do his daily work to the tap of a bureaucratic drum.

The very heart of our American system is the right of the individual to make a living unhindered by the Government to an extent greater than is necessary to protect every other individual in the exercise of the same right, and to preserve a safe, secure, and peaceful society.

Taxes inevitably grow in burden and amount as the Government extends its activities and increases its control of private business. The cost of these enormous bureaucratic machines will become too great to be borne. They are rapidly becoming Frankensteins, the contrivances of ingenious and idealistic political theorists that may grow so powerful as to destroy the very right of the individual to liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

Great governmental agencies, once contrived and operative, can rarely be dismantled. The thousands that are placed upon the Federal pay roll exert an influence in Congress, directly and indirectly, that usually keeps them on the pay roll.

One of our greatest dangers is the enormous increase in the number of those who are now drawing money from the Federal Government. Is it fanciful to apprehend that the day may come when all classes of beneficiaries upon the Federal Treasury may combine to make and maintain administrations pledged to a progressive continuance of this prolific distribution of the money wrung from the taxpayers?

Observe the outcry that is already heard against those of us in public life who have the temerity to declare that recovery should precede reforms involving the expenditure of additional billions of dollars.

The Federal Government has entered the door of every industry, has spied upon the operations of even the small fabricator, has declared that not one additional spindle may be added to a machine without its approval, and it is now proposed to license the farmers of America and the distribution of all food.

For more than a hundred years the courts have proclaimed that the field of the Federal Government's activities was limited to interstate commerce, but this legislation proposes to intrude upon and govern activities wholly within a State.

Many have either approved or condoned certain legislative proposals as temporary expedients to meet the emergency, but the country is now beginning to realize that the effort at least will be made to make permanent many adopted or pending legislative proposals.

If so, the permanent enactment of some proposals will revolutionize the constitutional democracy under which we have developed our country. The sovereignty of the States and the liberty of the individual will alike yield to the power of the National Government. The Government will more and more gather increasing power as it adds to the beneficiaries of the national distribution of money.

I think the time has come when temporary and emergency legislation should yield to sound principles. The country should be assured of a gradual reduction in governmental expenditures, so that within a reasonable time we shall have a balanced Budget; conduct of government within an income that will not require excessive increases in Federal taxes; constructive efforts to regain our still diminishing foreign markets; assurance that individuals may develop a business without the fear of competition in that business by the Federal Government, or undue interference with the reasonable control of his business so long as he acts with a decent regard for the rights of others.

Recovery must be founded on confidence and must grow on confidence, for without confidence capital will not venture, and without new capital invested business will not expand. There is plenty of capital available, but the confidence is lacking. The succession of many experimental devices to recapture prosperity confuses and frightens the business man.

Profit is being taken out of business by putting the Government in business in competition with those who pay the taxes to operate the Government. Regulation by the Government is being rapidly expanded into competition by the Government.

The way to permanent prosperity is the difficult path of economy and efficiency in government, and the balancing of budgets of States and the Nation. The people must be encouraged to go the way of independence, industry, economy, and self-reliance. Business is ready to resume its forward march if the Congress would give assurance of sound legislation.

As farmers we are suffering today more from underconsumption and loss of our world markets than from overproduction. Within recent years we exported 55 percent of our cotton, 41 percent of our tobacco, 33 percent of our lard, 18 percent of our wheat, and in addition many other products of the farm. We see this trade daily declining. When we lose a customer in business we lose him usually forever. Without foreign markets for our exportable surplus of farm products our farmers can never be prosperous.

Some of the present policies of the Agricultural Department are accelerating the progressive decline of our food exports and certainly the enormous cost of the supervision now proposed will add another barrier to recovery of foreign trade, as such cost must be included by the producers and exporters and makes thereby our foreign sales more difficult in the competition of the world markets

The American farmer will hail with joy a constructive and forceful campaign by our President to recover our export trade, and certainly we should preserve the remnants now remaining.

Only the firm and solid basis of the sound economic principle of the age-old law of supply and demand which has never been successfully set aside since the beginning of time will give our farmers real and lasting prosperity.

ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY AT CORNERSTONE LAYING OF HAVERSTRAW POST OFFICE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, 2 days ago the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, made a very notable address in laying the cornerstone of the new post-office building at Haverstraw, N. Y. His remarks were addressed to his neighbors in Rockland County, of whom I am one.

I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, and neighbors of Rockland County, it is a patriotic and civic occasion that brings us together today. We meet to lay the cornerstone of the first United States Government building to be erected in Haverstraw. The dream of its citizens, fostered and planned for them for so many years, is now well on the way to fulfillment. Into the edifice will be permanently builded the aspirations, the prayers, and the lifework of those good men and women of our native town who have devoted their time and who have labored to make Haverstraw a happy dwelling place. It will be their monument.

I consider it a distinguished privilege to be with you and to join in these exercises. I have learned that wherever one goes his heart remains among the scenes and friends of his youth. Today I gratefully acknowledge my debt to my fellow citizens of Rockland County for their friendship and their aid. Whether it has been much or little, I would not forget a single one. They have encouraged and sustained me.

I am very happy that in the arrangements for these ceremonies the community in charge made this occasion in every sense of the word a community affair in that men and women in every walk of life and every phase of political activity are participating. That is as it should be, and I want to congratulate the citizens of Haverstraw on the splendid manner in which they have given evidence of their appreciation of what the Government is doing for this community.

For generations the post office has been recognized as a favorite meeting place for the citizens of every community. Morning and night, with the arrival of the mail, men and women call at the post office for their letters and newspapers, and at that time are given an opportunity to visit with their neighbors who go there for the same purpose. This condition, of course, applies to smaller communities than Haverstraw, where carrier service was installed many years ago. Notwithstanding the fact that the mail is delivered within the village limits, many people still visit the post office at frequent intervals during the day, and on such visits are given an opportunity of meeting their friends.

It will be particularly delightful for the residents of Haverstraw to come to their new post office because of its ideal location, and it is a coincidence that this building is being erected on the site where the post office in other years was located for such a long period.

In connection with my official duties I have been obliged to travel around the country a great deal. I have been in practically every State of the Union. Wherever I have gone I have listened with keen interest to the people extol the beauties of their scenic grandeur, particularly their famous rivers. I can, with the utmost sincerity, say to you that nothing I have seen surpasses the scenery of the Empire State and the beauty of the Hudson.

You will not only have the privilege of visiting this fine Government building, but you will have the opportunity of gazing from its portals upon the most beautiful and inspiring river view to be found in any section of our country.

It has been more than 2 years since I was honored by President Franklin D. Roosevelt with the appointment of Postmaster General of the United States. I know that you will be interested in hearing something about the Post Office Department.

The Postal Service handles some 20,000,000,000 letters, papers, and parcels a year, or 633 pieces every second of every day, which averages 166 pieces of mail annually for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Our postal savings bank has deposits of $1,199,000,000. We operate 8,100 motor vehicles, lease approximately 65,000 post offices and stations, and manufacture our mail bags and locks. We carry on vast money-order transactions approximating three and one-half billion dollars yearly. We sell Government bonds and we also have a mail-transportation service interlacing the land, sky, and sea, using every conceivable means of locomotion.

Our postal revenues last year amounted to approximately $586,000,000, but this year business has so increased that I am looking forward to receipts of approximately $615,000,000, which will give you some idea of how conditions are improving.

To handle our work an army of trained men and women is employed, including some 46,000 postmasters; 240,000 clerks, carriers, chauffeurs, and mechanics; 25,000 substitute and 35,000 contractual employees. This gives some idea of the magnitude of our operations.

As executive head of the Post Office Department I have endeavored to carry out my duties in such a manner as to merit the approval of my countrymen.

Upon taking office President Roosevelt directed attention to the stupendous postal deficit of $153,000,000 in 1932. This deficit was a heavy tax on the people. In the first full fiscal year of the Roosevelt administration this deficit was turned into a surplus of $12,000,000. It was done through the unwavering support of the rank and file of the army of postal employees who carried on despite curtailed salaries, delayed promotions, and lapsed vacations, now all happily restored. It was done through the elimination of wasteful methods and the practice of strict economies, such as any prudent business man would practice in his own business. It was done through seeing that for every dollar expended the American public received a dollar's worth of service.

Much has been said and written about the wiping out of the postal deficits by this administration. Some of our friends evidently do not want to believe it was possible, or that it was accomplished. They allege it is a matter of bookkeeping. The fact remains that the method of bookkeeping we employed is that recognized by Congress and is the same as used by my predecessor. The fact also remains that the Postal Service, for the first time in years, has balanced its budget.

I am glad to discuss, especially before my old neighbors, any activity of the Post Office Department. I know you will be interested in the present Air Mail Service. We have saved considerable money there and brought about improved facilities.

Air mail routes now cover 3,700 more miles than they did a year ago. The total flying mileage has been increased approximately 5,000,000 miles a year. The number of cities served directly has been increased from 152 to 193, and direct service is given to 46 States and indirect service to the other 2. Air mail covers the entire United States with an equipment, mileage, and frequency of schedules unsurpassed by any country in the world.

The air mail appropriation for 1932 was $20,000,000. This year the actual expenditure will be about one-half that amount.

I want you to know that I am not endeavoring to conduct the Post Office Department at a profit. Service to the public shall always be my primary policy. The American people, first of all, must have the best mail service in the world. Next they must have this service at the least possible cost. This is the kind of service we are supplying now. Complaints are at a minimum. There are bound to be some, with every man, woman, and child in the United States a customer and watching for mail, and with four and one-half billion pounds of it handled annually and carried in all kinds of weather and conditions.

But no complaint is considered unimportant and each is given immediate attention so that the people shall have the maximum of mail service. As long as I am Postmaster General I shall endeavor to see that it meets every social and business requirement of the country.

The founders of the country realized the benefits of a postal service, and the number of post offices established rapidly increased to meet the needs of the people.

Among the earliest post offices in Rockland County, I find that Ramapo Works, afterward changed to Ramapo, was established November 11, 1807, with Jeremiah Pierson as postmaster. For the year ended March 21, 1827, the receipts there were $108.77.

Orange, listed in the records as also being called "Tappan Village", was established March 25, 1815, with Philip Dubey as postmaster. The official name was changed to Tappan Village, and then to Tappan, and on April 9, 1834, the records show it was changed to Slote, but a short time afterward, on April 30, 1834, the name was again changed to Tappan. The earliest receipts shown are for the year ended March 21, 1827. They amounted to $31.29.

Clarkstown was established May 12, 1815, with Peter D. W. Smith as postmaster. The receipts for the year ended March 21, 1827, were $24.60.

Scotland, with Peter D. Tallman as postmaster, was established December 29, 1827, and it had receipts of $8.12 for the year ended March 31, 1830.

Blauveltville, with Cornelius J. Blauvelt as postmaster, was established October 14, 1828. The receipts for the year ended March 31, 1830, were $8.74.

West Hempstead was established February 21, 1829, and the receipts for the year ended March 31, 1830, were $4.70.

The Post Office Department records show that the first returns were received from the Haverstraw office July 1, 1815, and that George Smith, who kept a general store, was postmaster. He and his successors were among our leading citizens and held other offices of trust and honor in the town. Good old family names, which you will recall and which are still representative, are among the list, such as Marks, DeNoyelles, Gurnee, Blauvelt, VerValen, Sherwood, Springstead, Purdy, Oldfield, Weiant, DeBaun, and many others.

In the 120 years since the office was established there have been but 21 postmasters in Haverstraw, including our present postmaster, Maurice F. Maloney. Isaac Sherwood served the longest term, from May 7, 1861, to October 22, 1877, over 16 years. He had also been postmaster from 1841 to 1845 and from 1850 to 1853, and was the only postmaster to serve more than one consecutive term. Stephen G. Newman served the next longest term, from 1898 to 1914, nearly 16 years, and Abraham Marks served the third longest term, nearly 15 years, from 1819 to 1834. The first printed record of the receipts of our post office is for the year ended March 21, 1827. They amounted to $57.60. The receipts for the last fiscal year, 1934, 107 years later, were $17,022.

Congress prepared for a postal service to Haverstraw as early as 1810 when it authorized a post road from "Peramus by Tappan, Clarkstown and Kakiat to Haverstraw."

On January 20, 1815, a post route was established from "Hackensack by Scrawlenburg, Tappan, Clarkstown, Kakiat, and Haverstraw to Stoney Point."

W. R. Southerland was the contractor. He was scheduled to leave Hackensack at 6 o'clock every Thursday morning and arrive at Stoney Point the same evening at 6 o'clock. He returned the next day.

There have been changes since those early days, when stage coaches proudly drew up to our Rockland County post offices. Almost within the memory of living men has been the transition from the horseback to sulkey, stage coach, railroad, motor bus, and air-mail service.

Our post offices have also had their periods of transition from the dwelling house, to the little store and tavern to splendid buildings erected by our Government.

It gave me a decided satisfaction to be able to have something to do with bringing to fulfillment the desire of my neighbors to have a representative government building in Haverstraw. When we were able to have our town included among others to be given public buildings and an allotment of $65,000 was made by act of Congress for securing a site and erecting a building, we knew we were well on our way. The site was selected August 20, 1934. I have watched with great interest the preparation of the plans in the Treasury Department and will watch with interest the progress of the contractor, Mr. Charles Anderson, of Fort Montgomery, N. Y. He has 250 days to complete his work.

We are to have a building of some 3,700 square feet, one story and basement, built of brick with stone trim. I hope to return when the building is completed and join with you in an old-fashioned housewarming.

I do not want to close my remarks today without paying a deserved tribute to President Roosevelt, whose matchless leadership has brought us through the darkest days of the depression and is bringing us back into the sunlight of prosperity.

Since we are prone to forget, it is well that we remember the conditions which obtained 2 years ago when President Roosevelt was inaugurated and compare those conditions with the conditions of today. Then the economic system of the country had collapsed and the Government itself was on the brink of collapsing. Today the economic system is vastly improved and the stability of the Government has been removed from the threat which faced it.

Then the financial interests, discouraged and demoralized, were frantically pleading with the President for Government aid and support. Today conditions have so far improved that some of these same financial interests feel that they can go it alone and are insisting that the Government let them do so. They want to get back to the days when finance and business controlled the Government and are now resisting any Government control of their operations, notwithstanding such Goverment control as is sought by the President is for the welfare of the people as a whole.

The last two Congresses passed much constructive legislation and the President has recommended additional constructive legislation to the present Congress. Among the measures he has recommended is legislation which will bring about a greater degree of social security to the men, women, and children of this country; legislation which will give the Government a larger degree of control over the money of the country; legislation which will put an end to the exploitation of the public by the utility-holding companies; legislation which will provide a better merchant marine, as well as other measures designed to aid industry and agriculture.

In his efforts the President deserves and must have the support of the patriotic and forward-looking citizens of the country. It was to be expected that he would be opposed by partisan politicians, but there are two other groups who are joining with partisan politicians in their opposition. One is the special-privilege group, which desire that the Government give aid to big business, but insist that it should not be concerned with the interest or welfare of the rank and file of the people. This group is charging that the present administration is socialistic and communistic.

Another group, which is just as vociferous as the partisan opposition to the President's policies, is composed of the so-called "medicine men", who are offering all kinds of alleged panaceas for economic and political ills and making extravagant promises which they themselves must know are impossible of fulfillment.

This latter group, strange to say, charge that the President's policies are leaning toward facism and toryism. So we find that the two extremes, the so-called "rights" and the so-called "lefts", are both finding fault. This must mean that the President is following a sensible and constructive middle course in keeping with the traditions, the institutions, and the Constitution of our country.

No one realizes any better than does the President that new conditions call for new governmental policies, and that these new policies must be provided if the country is to progress and prosper. Like all real leaders, he does not hesitate to chart a new course when one is required. We have outlived the old order which brought us to grief and distress, and we must be willing to accept and support a new order.

Do not be deceived by the selfish and partisan propaganda with which the country is being flooded, and do not be overimpressed with the criticisms which are being leveled at the President. In order to lead us out of the wilderness, the President has found it necessary to step upon the toes of a great many who heretofore have enjoyed special privileges and exerted powerful influences, and it is not to be expected that they will surrender without a fight. The loud wails we are hearing on every hand are either coming directly from those whose toes have been stepped upon or from those who are misled by them.

I say to you in all sincerity that all of this clamor has in no wise dimmed the prestige nor lessened the popularity of the President with the people. Let us all uphold his hands, and we can rest assured that our country will speedily emerge from the distressing effects of the depression, and that happiness and contentment will prevail again throughout the Nation.

In conclusion I want to again express my appreciation to the residents of Haverstraw and Rockland County for the effort put forth to make this occasion one which I shall never forget, and I hope that during my stay in town I shall have an opportunity of personally meeting and greeting my old friends.

LETTERS AND ADDRESSES BY SENATOR ASHURST, AND EDITORIALS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD some letters and addresses by myself, and also some editorials.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Monday, March 13, 1933

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received, as doubtless many Senators have, a large number of telegraphic dispatches respecting Senate bill no. 233, a bill to maintain the credit of the United States Government. One of the dispatches reads as follows:

"I feel it my duty to advise that your future success is in grave danger if you uphold granting Presidential power."

Another reads:

"Your attitude very unsatisfactory. You are taking $6,300,000 annually from Arizona, and are politically dead unless you change your attitude."

Mr. President, some time ago I made the astonishing and for awhile, to myself, the distressing discovery that the perpetuity of the American Government did not absolutely depend upon the reelection of one HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST to the Senate of the United States.

When a Senator makes such a discovery at first the fact appears incredible. It seems as if the stars above his head had faded and the earth had slipped beneath his feet. But, as time rolls on, such a discovery proves to be a real antidote to megalomania; and the further flight of time brings to the discoverer a serenity and a humility to be envied by the world's greatest philosophers.

It may be, Mr. President, that the perpetuity of the American Republic does not depend upon my reelection to the Senate; but the perpetuity of the Republic may indeed depend upon granting to the President the authority to make the economies called for in his message to Congress.

Wednesday, January 10, 1934

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD copies of certain letters I have sent to citizens of Arizona.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 29, 1933.

Mr. G. H. BROWN,
Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR MR. BROWN: Yours of May 25 received, advising that you desire a position with the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and you request me to recommend you "to the new collector at Phoenix as soon as he is appointed."

It is my duty to tell you that the district attorney, marshal, collector of internal revenue, collector of customs, and register of the local land office, respectively, will be appointed upon the recommendations of the United States Senators from Arizona.

In my judgment, it would be improper for a Federal Senator to make any suggestion as to whom such persons thus recommended by Federal Senators should appoint. The Federal officials who may be appointed upon my recommendation shall be left free to select their own assistants, deputies, accountants, and clerks.

On this point I may be—probably am—censurably delicate, but it is my inflexible rule to which I adhered during the Wilson administrations. Quite naturally, I desire to please as many of my constituents as possible and to offend as few of them as possible, but I believe in the principle of absolute noninterference by Federal Senators in the selection of the subordinates of Federal officials appointed upon my recommendation.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

OCTOBER 16, 1933.

Mr. G. A. ROBERD,
Phoenix, Ariz.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Your letter received advising that the chamber of commerce had "denounced" Senator HAYDEN and myself for not securing larger sums of Federal funds for Arizona.

This complaint of the chamber of commerce is not at all unique, for daily, from the mail bags, there are dumped upon my desk demands that "this, that, or the other" industry be nourished by some gift, bounty, or largess out of the Federal Treasury.

I sympathize somewhat with the impatience of the chamber of commerce and say in reply that I have worked harder since March 4 last than I have ever worked before, but I am not complaining, for when an officeholder complains of overwork, he is simply proving that he has a task too big for him.

I have been for years a critic, and hope I am able, without making a wry face, to take a small dose of that medicine—criticism—of which I have given other fellows sizable doses; in other words, I not only "ladle it out" but can also "take it." Pardon my dropping into slang, but it conveys my thought precisely.

I believe you are correct in your conclusion that a number of candidates—all excellent gentlemen—will try to displace me at the next election, but it is beginning to appear as if I shall be reelected, not by reason of any particular merit that I possess or by any political activity on my part, but by the folly of my opponents.

Kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

DECEMBER 18, 1933.

Mr. W. H. PETERSEN,
16 South Twentieth Avenue, Phoenix, Ariz.

DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of December 10 received requesting the payment of the adjusted-service (compensation) certificates before their maturity.

During the years when no deficit existed in the Federal finances I supported the adjusted-service (compensation) legislation, and I do not believe I made any mistake in so voting.

The question of cashing the adjusted-service (compensation) certificates before their maturity depends now upon the condition of the Federal Treasury.

If the Treasury may without disaster cash these certificates before they fall due, I should, so far as I am able to perceive at this time, be inclined to vote to cash the certificates now, provided always the Treasury may stand the strain.

If, however, the Treasury may not meet this demand and could not pay the certificates before maturity, I would not vote, and could not be expected to vote, to bring a collapse of our national credit. It is a principle of my personal and political conduct, and the same principle should guide governments, never to hold out a promise where such promise is obviously incapable of fulfillment; in other words, do not make promises unless you are certain you can translate the promises into actuality.

I decline to make promises that cannot be fulfilled.

I refuse to raise up hopes that I know will be dashed to the ground.

I shall indeed give careful consideration to and make a close investigation of the question of the ability of the Treasury to pay these certificates before their maturity.

I realize that the phrase "give careful consideration and make a close examination" is sometimes used as a polite euphemism for postponed negation, but I am not using the phrase in that sense, for I shall examine the subject in the hope of finding that the Treasury's condition may justify my voting to pay the certificates before they are actually due; and if upon investigation, the facts show that the Treasury cannot stand that strain, I shall not be a party to an insincere gesture of pretending to pay an immature obligation out of an empty Treasury.

Kind regards.

Cordially yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

JANUARY 2, 1934.

Mr. A. L. MOORE,
Route 2, Box 223, Tucson, Ariz.

DEAR FRIEND: Your letter of December 25 received, in which you say, "I ask you to work for and vote for repeal of this economy act."

I should be lacking in frankness and deficient in courtesy if I failed to tell you that I shall support President Roosevelt all along the line.

A crisis of terrible proportions, bringing many distressful results, came upon our country and has not lifted its blight from us; hence all citizens must continue to make sacrifices for their country's welfare.

It is often quite true that the only way in which an officeholder may render great service to the Nation, in its day of trouble, is by his willingness to lose his future or at least to lose his present position in political life, if he may thereby aid in bringing national recovery, just as the soldier may for a time give up a part of his civil liberties and may pay with his physical life in order to render service for his country in battle.

Whenever grave danger comes to our Nation, whether from unemployment, famine, fire, flood, war, pestilence, or depression, the officeholder must be willing to take action which might be temporarily unpopular if he may thereby aid in the recovery of his country.

I shall follow the President's leadership, and if he should urge that the present law be amended so as to meet your request, I shall support his efforts in that behalf.

Kind regards.

Sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR JOHN B. KENDRICK, BY SENATOR ASHURST

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, on the 27th day of April [1934] the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] wrote a letter to the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in which he paid so very eloquent and beautiful a tribute to the memory of the late Senator John B. Kendrick that I think it should be preserved in the RECORD. The letter is as follows:

APRIL 27, 1934.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
United States Senator from Wyoming,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: You were one of the closest friends our departed John B. Kendrick ever knew.

Romance and emprise clustered around him, and although his lips have now partaken of the sacraments of the dust, the influence of his character survives and is treasured by his relatives, his friends, and his proud State.

Senator Kendrick possessed that heaven-born attribute which the English call a "cool head" and the Americans call "judgment"; hence, in sharp parliamentary contests and stormy conventions, he held true to the main purpose, was master of himself and of the business at hand.

He was a practical idealist. Nature in one of her prodigal moods stamped upon him her royal seal.

Even when he viewed the swelling dome and the fluted pilasters of the Nation's Capitol he wistfully yearned for the far-away rim of the prairie.

Amidst the din and sensation of politics in Washington he longed for his shining Tetons and his gorgeous Yellowstone. His nostrils were always eager for the pungent odor of the wild sage, and his kindly eyes ever sought to descry the scarlet glory of the blossoming cactus.

In public office he trod the paths of his feet with marvelous circumspection, and he was inspired by an ardent enthusiasm for the public good. He was a competent Governor, a successful and influential United States Senator. He was a real cowboy, and he became the most distinguished of all of those excellent and racy spirits who, 50 years ago, drove the thundering herds.

The cowboy's work, like a particolored robe, is so woven about Senator Kendrick that a word describing the cowboy he so truly typified may not be out of place here.

No belted knight in chivalry on heath or strand ever appealed with such allurement and glamour as did the American knights of the remuda.

Among the cowboys there were varying degrees of sophistication, for they were drawn from the different walks of life. The majority, however, were drawn from pioneer stock. The nature of the cowboy's occupation afforded him scant opportunity for extended reading, for he must needs constantly attend the cattle.

If this cow range was on the desert, he must grind its bitter dust between his teeth, endure its flail of heat, and ride on and on. If his range was on the mountain, he must, in winter, ride hard beneath the cold stars. The cowboy's life was one of severe isolation, but his work was not only made endurable but was even rendered pleasurable as well when he took refuge, as many, if not most of them, did, during their lonely rides, by entering into the realm of imagination, where ideal experiences are possible without objective restraint—a realm where images form and fall; where glittering towers upthrust themselves and globes of gold expand and float; a domain peopled with a viewless throng, invisible to all but the eye of the imaginer, and in this way a high percentage of the American cowboys became endowed with intellect and grace, fascination, and tremendous personal charm.

Senator Kendrick symbolized the American cowboy—calm, steady, generous, fair, adaptable, industrious, and firmly devoted to the rugged old virtues which made our Nation great and strong.

With high esteem, sincerely yours,

HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senator from Arizona.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Thursday, January 4, 1934

Mr. ASHURST. My proposed amendment strikes at an evil in our system of taxation which is already great, and if unchecked will grow—indeed has grown—to such magnitude as to threaten the existence of our institutions.

The existence of conditions that enable any municipality or political subdivision to issue tax-free securities directly permits a certain class of property owners to partake of the comforts and benefits of government without bearing any share of the expense burden of government.

All private property should pay its just proportion of the expense of maintaining the Government.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities permits:

(1) A large portion of property to escape taxation, thereby causing great loss of revenue.

(2) It violates the sound tax principle of "ability to pay" and it unfairly discriminates among taxpayers.

(3) It discourages investment in new enterprises.

(4) It encourages extravagances of governmental agencies.

(5) It grants private subsidies and special privileges, obnoxious to our system.

(6) By withdrawing money from private enterprises it increases the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by the Government, and thereby adds to the cost of living.

(7) It creates, and quite naturally, social unrest.

Vigor and vision are the supreme need of the hour, and unless we act with promptness on this subject, the National Government and some of the States will bog down and sink into the grasp of the all-smothering, all-destroying quicksands of insolvency.

ADMISSION TAXES

In the Senate of the United States, May 26, 1932

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I invite attention to the fact that the spoken drama in the United States is now almost extinguished. I do not believe we have reached such a deplorable place in our history that we would be willing unfairly to tax or to penalize the spoken drama or the talkie movie.

I am opposed to admission taxes, whether for the spoken drama or the talkie movies. Such taxes are only an irritant—they are like unto a dash of Tabasco sauce in the eye and will be resented by the American people. Some well-informed persons argue that the theaters and talkie movies are luxuries and amusements only. That they are, from one angle, "amusements" is quite true; that they possess facilities for disseminating interesting information of much practical value, especially to those persons who cannot spare the time or money to travel, is none the less true.

It is also true that the theaters and the talkie movies make contributions to art, belles-lettres, literature, music, science, and philosophy, and appeal to and help to gratify that inborn cultural and artistic yearning inherent in every normal person, although in some breasts this yearning is meager and obscure and sometimes is deeply hidden.

Robert Burns, during a flash of his shining genius, wrote, in his Address to the Unco Guid, or in his Address to a Louse, I do not for the moment remember which, "Oh, wad some power the giftie gie us to see ourselves as others see us."

The stage artists, the screen artists, and the vaudeville artists hold the mirror up to nature, and only through them do we ever see ourselves as others see us.

On the stage and on the screen we see our own weaknesses, foibles, and pretensions made plain and then corrected. On the stage and on the screen the richness of human experience is laid before us, and all that is beautiful, all that is tragic, and all that is mournful in man's destiny is clearly shown.

The penetrating skill, the Attic salt, and the humor of the screen artist and the stage artist expose the shams and frivolities of a particular epoch, and not infrequently teach a nation the way of truth.

The plays of Aeschylus and Euripides taught the Greeks to meet disaster becomingly and to realize that although Fate spins a strange pattern and motif into every career, such circumstance affords no reason for a refusal to meet life courageously and cheerfully.

The comedies of Shakespeare enriched England, softened the cruelties of his time, and gave seasonable advice and admonition to monarch, to lords, and commons. There would have been no polished Elizabethan England except for Shakespeare, who appeared personally in some of his own plays, notably his Twelfth Night, which he acted in 1602, and from the stage poured gentle satire upon vanity and injustice.

I do not doubt that Schiller and Goethe helped Germany, and I am certain that Molière and Rostand and Bernhardt enriched France. Who can measure the joy and the emotional sympathy that Dion Boucicault gave to the world? He was called the scribe of the American and English stage and had 124 dramas to his credit.

Unnumbered thousands of our own generation have been charmed by the melodious airs and clever rimes of the Gilbert and Sullivan light operas and the talent of those two gentlemen was so exceptional and their criticisms of official smugness and complacency were so deft and subtle that their productions were given audition and applause by the most prim and rigid of the Mid-Victorians.

It would be impossible to estimate the ennobling influence showered upon our Nation by such characters as Edwin Booth and David Belasco.

Amidst the gloom of the depression and out of the darkness of the country's financial and industrial misfortune there suddenly beamed forth last winter, when the clouds were lowering, five stars, five distinguished Thespians to tour our country: The superb Maude Adams and the well-beloved Otis Skinner revived the Merchant of Venice; William Gillette came back to us in Sherlock Holmes; Ethel Barrymore reproduced Sheridan's School for Scandal; and Walter Hampden gave us again glorious Cyrano de Bergerac, the fascinating yet futile lover, poet, duelist, and hero of seventeenth century France. How many weary hours these artists beguiled; how many desolate hearts they encouraged; how many of our citizens learned anew from them that moderation, forbearance, and restraint are the virtues of victory and prosperity and that fortitude, patience, and courage are the virtues of disaster and defeat.

The drama is coextensive with the people and of all the arts, save music, it is probably the dearest to the human race. The stage is akin to poetry in that it is a great expression of human emotion. The stage is a vision of the romance inseparable from every human life; it is a magical place, breathing the inspiration of color and sound; a place for high thoughts, splendid truths, and beautiful words, for objects vividly observed and gorgeously imagined.

The stage is art. Art is truth, and in the final sum of worldly things, only art endures; the sculptures outlast the dynasty, the colors outlive DeVinci, "the coin outlasts Tiberius."

When Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, desired a rehearsal of the play which was to confound his uncle the king he said to the players: "Come, give us a taste of your quality." After the players had recited, Hamlet turned to Polonius, the lord chamberlain, and said:

"My lord, will you see the players well bestowed? Do you hear, let them be well used, for they are the abstracts and brief chronicles of the time; after your death you were better have a bad epitaph than their ill report while you lived."

So, Mr. President, when our citizens, after a day devoted to the duties and claims of this fevered life, go to the theater or to the talkie movies, there to renew their exhausted strength, there may-hap to escape for an hour from the specter of their baffled hopes, from their broken ideals or evaporated illusions, so common in this complex machine age, or there to be spared for an evening from the fardels and the clangor of a bewildered world, let them not be met with a Federal admission tax, which, as I said before, is a vexatious, corrosive, pestiferous irritant.

[From the Arizona Daily Star, Tucson, Ariz., Sept. 2, 1934]

SENATOR ASHURST SPEAKS

If politics could be conducted on the high plane with which Senator HENRY ASHURST conducts his campaigns, there would probably be more intelligent interest in governmental affairs and abler men aspiring to office. Those who heard the distinguished Senator speak Friday night at the armory heard a political campaign speech full of holes if one wanted to criticize but filled with charm, good humor, and kindliness. And, strangely enough, those who went expecting to listen for a few minutes soon found themselves staying on and staying on, consumed with interest.

Although Senator ASHURST spoke for over an hour, he said not one unkind or harsh word about any of his opponents, while his brilliant shafts of wit had the audience frequently convulsed with laughter. On the other hand, the serious parts of his address, while filled with kindly but serious political bombast, won him the respect of his audience.

After all, a man can still be radical, yet be a gentleman. A man can win votes and still be a gentleman. The highest tribute that can be paid to Senator ASHURST is that for 41 years he has been in politics, yet he is a gentleman, and as such sets an example that other candidates, and even newspaper editors, might emulate.

Meanwhile, the Senator's opposition is a healthy thing. The opposition has brought him home so that the home folks once more can hear his delightful speeches.

[From the Miami Silver Belt, Nov. 4, 1930]

ASHURST PAYS TRIBUTE TO GOVERNOR HUNT; PORTRAYS ROMANCE OF THE CAREER OF GOVERNOR IN CAMPAIGN SPEECH

There is much romance in the career of George W. P. Hunt, who came into Arizona 50 years ago, during the now vanished days of the burro pack train, the shave-tail mule, and the covered wagon. Most of the men and women who came here during those days have crossed another frontier into the Great Kingdom; whilst for those pioneers who yet remain, the lovely nymphs of noonday are gone and their temples are crowned with silver streaks of the eternal dawn.

The 50 years of Mr. Hunt's residence in Arizona are equal to one-third of the present age of our American Republic and constitute a glorious epoch in the life of the Nation and the State. The purse of Fortunatus and the lamp of Aladdin seem tame and commonplace, when compared to Arizona's progress since Mr. Hunt lighted his first camp fire within her borders.

He saw the teepee and the hogan of the Indian give place to stately residences. He saw the railroad trains supplant the stagecoach and the buckboard, which once bounced and jolted over the rough and rudimentary roads. He now sees automobiles whizz over the very hills and valleys where once he saw the cowboy with jingling spurs, haystack hat, and leather chaps ride hard under the summer sun and winter stars for cattle and horses.

The same plains which once he knew as the habitat of wild beasts and upon which he later saw the quiet flocks of sheep feed upon the rich grasses beneath their feet are now covered by diversified agriculture, industrial enterprises, glittering cities and towns, or serve as airports and landing fields for winged cars that cleave the clouds and that skim the cream off the milky way.

Some of the landscapes where once he saw the Knights of the Lariat hold their round-ups and rodeos are now covered by commanding schools, colleges, entertainment, resorts for tourists, dude ranches, palatial hotels, and churches whose spires kiss the golden sunbeams.

Some of the particular spots where once he saw the noon breeze swirl the smoke of the cowboy's branding iron are now midget or Tom Thumb golf courses.

The air spaces which, when he came here 50 years ago, were agitated by the coyote's doleful howl, by the barkings of the prairie dog, the measured thrum of the mustang's hoofs, the war whoop of the ferocious Apache encircling the settler, now by the mystic voice of the radio, pour into our ears the Tales of Hoffman, the dulcet notes of Narcissus, the wild melodies of the Hungarian Rhapsody, and all the joys and inspirations which no other art save music's ethereal rain can give. On some of the deserts where once he swallowed their bitter dust as he plodded forward he now sees irrigation projects so practical and yet so ideal that they charm the imagination with their wizardry as they spread their living waters upon the thirsty soils. He saw Arizona accomplish that difficult feat in Government of fusing reforms with stability. He has earned competence and popular affection, for he aided in building this empire.

ASHURST, THE WORD WRANGLER

By Fraser Edwards

HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, senior Senator for Arizona ever since she has been a sovereign State, was a cow puncher in his youth.

His dexterity with a lariat gave him the same control over cattle as his present agility and facility as a word wrangler gives him over the English language.

Beginning with a blue-backed speller, in which he wrote in boyish chirography "HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, United States Senator", when he was 10 years old, Hank has studied words. In his relentless pursuit of philology he has paid particular attention to etymology. He has worn the calfskin cover off of one of Webster's well-known dictionaries in tracing each and every word in the English language to its source and prying into its intimate family relations with the Greeks and Romans.

Hank has mercilessly ransacked Roget's Thesaurus from A to Z, until there is not a word between its covers that he has not roped, hog-tied, and branded for his own. If there are any mavericks straying around, it is just a matter of time before he corrals them and sears the nicety of their meaning into his brain.

With all the words in the English tongue mobilized under his command, Hank cracks his intellectual whip and the words trot out and jump through his oratorical hoop to the amazement and admiration of his colleagues and to the complete bewilderment of the gallery gods who have not compiled any dictionaries.

Out of his cyclopedia of words, Hank has fashioned a style, which, while partaking somewhat of the courtly diction of the eighteenth century, has a flavor all its own. It is not only filled with polysyllabic words of Latin and Greek derivation but with curt, telling Anglo-Saxon and expressive Americanisms.

"I am a veritable peripatetic bifurcated volcano in behalf of Democratic principles", ASHURST once remarked with becoming modesty.

Beneath all the weight of those 6-foot words, Hank conceals one of the rarest and most delightful senses of humor harbored in the Senate. He is a keen observer and there is little of the sham and humbuggery that goes on about him that he misses.

CAPITAL BYSTANDER

By Kirke Simpson

Whenever HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST gets to his feet in the Senate, gallery goers may expect pleasing entertainment.

But what marks ASHURST particularly is his ready wit, a seeming desire never to be personally offensive to his colleagues in the shafts he drives with unerring tongue. He appears to get huge joy out of verbal battling for the sake of the game itself, as well as that of the cause he espouses.

He even gets pleasure out of other Senators' forays. He will sit in his place and nod with sympathetic vigor over somebody else's gusty outbursts, even when he disagrees with what is actually being said. Or he will frown portentously when the speaker frowns; smile engagingly when the words to which he listens would seem to call for smiling delivery. It is the Ashurst actor complex always at work within him.

And now and then, usually most unexpectedly even to himself, the big Arizonian breaks out into a speech that proves him gifted with an eloquence and dramatic power unique among political orators these prosaic days. He was thus moved during the Mexican immigration debate to reaffirm that his opposition to immigration came of no race prejudice.

"We have drawn upon other races of the world for our own culture," ASHURST said. "Name our language; it is only 60 percent English. Our election laws were drawn from Australia, and the decimal money system from Holland. Name anything of our culture that is of particular value, and it will be found that we drew the germ of its truth and beauty from some other country.

"The people of the British Isles gave us the stately language of Milton and Shakespeare, of Burns and Moore and Byron. The Irish race has furnished to us the bravest and most eloquent of men. How could I have a prejudice against Italy, which has given to the world her poems of stone and her heritage of music?

"But we cannot absorb any more immigrants now. If we attempt to do so, that American lamp which illuminates the earth will be extinguished, never to be relumed in a hundred years."

Indeed, without intending in the least to disparage Mr. ASHURST'S talents and virtues as a statesman and historian, it is obvious that the stage lost a brilliant star when he took to politics.

Skillful in utterance, uniform in courtesy, rich in grace and fascination, constant in respect for the opinions of others, charged with intellect and fire, he is an actor who never discards his role, is never out of character, and is always attuned to the scene.

SPEECH OF SENATOR ASHURST, OF ARIZONA, AT THE ONE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY DINNER OF THE SOCIETY OF THE FRIENDLY SONS OF ST. PATRICK IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK, MARCH 17, 1927

GENTLEMEN: I esteem it a privilege to address you. Religious services and social functions in honor of St. Patrick are being held on this, his festival, not only in Dublin, the chief city of the country he evangelized, but also in the cities and towns of the United States, Great Britain, France, Australia, Canada, Spain, Germany, Italy, Austria, and in many outposts of Christianity in the Far East.

It is of singular significance that the name of Patrick has just been placed in the calendar of the Church of England at the very time when other names long on the calendar, such as St. Helen, St. Crispin, and St. Valentine are being removed therefrom.

I would say nothing in this splendid presence that might savor of invidious distinction, yet how may one eulogize Pericles and not speak of the glories of Athens; how may one commemorate Caesar and be silent concerning the achievements of his legions; how then may I speak at a banquet of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick and omit to say that the Irish race has nobly vindicated the right of mankind to liberty and has taken a conspicuous and important part in establishing and maintaining the independence of the United States?

Agricola, a Roman general, who was born A. D. 37, and lived until about A. D. 93, advised the empire builders of his day that Rome should war down and take possession of Ireland so that freedom might be put out of sight.

Thus, in this early Roman reference to Ireland, we pick up for the first time the golden thread of Irish militant resistance to imperial exploitation, and this thread of courage and patriotism runs through all Irish history.

On the one side is the "warring down" so that freedom might be put out of sight, and on the other it is the eternal struggle to uphold the rights of free men.

Contemplating the Europe that existed before the Christian era, in the east we find Greece, in the west we find Ireland, and it is Ireland alone amongst the lands of western Europe that preserves the recorded traditions of its speech, culture, and song that connect the half of Europe with its ancestral past.

It was the Irish race that lit the lamp of genius in the brain of Europe.

Several centuries before the Christian era, Phoenician and Carthaginian navigators visited the shores of Britain—then called the "Island of Tin"—to obtain a supply of that metal.

The inhabitants of Britain were then rude and unlettered, whilst the Irish race was fully acquainted with the use of precious metals, fabrication of fine linens, was fond of music and song, and was enjoying its literature.

When the Druids at Stonehenge, on Salisbury Plain, made their last midnight sacrifice, the triennial council of the Irish people was held at the great hall or court of Tara where Irish kings and nobles assembled.

King Alfred the Great ascended the English throne in the year 871 A. D., and he was indeed one of the world's wisest men. He ruled for 30 years, and he proved himself to be a valiant warrior and an earnest patron of whatever promised to promote the good of his people, but long before Alfred ascended the English throne the Irish race had scattered throughout Europe manuscripts of priceless masterpieces limned by Irish scribes, such as the Book of Kells in the library of Trinity College at Dublin, acknowledged to be the most beautiful book in the world. Indeed, into its pages is woven such a wealth of ornament and it has such an ecstasy of art that the colors are as lustrous, as fresh, and as soft as though it was the work of yesterday, but the book was made 1,200 years ago.

The polished civilization and military power of the Roman Empire began to decay during the fourth century, and by the year 476 A. D. the dry-rot of internal corruption had weakened the national fiber so completely that the western division of the Empire crumbled under the invasion of the external barbaric strength of the nations in the north and the Far East, which nations Rome had held at bay for several centuries.

When the western division was thus extinguished, all Europe was engulfed by the westward and southern movement of the barbaric nations.

Ireland was the one country not submerged by these invasions before whose terrific onslaughts the Italian Caesars vanished. Ireland retained her own glittering culture, maintained her commerce, and, with the exception of such learning of antiquity as was kept alive in the monasteries of the church, Ireland was the ark which, for the 590 years intervening between the collapse of the western division of the Roman Empire and the Norman Conquest of England, rode almost alone upon the dark and tempestuous sea and thus safely carried to the so-called "early modern period" the muniments, manuscripts, and treasures of past ages.

There is a river in the ocean, the Gulf Stream. It is the most important of all the ocean currents. It rises in the Gulf of Mexico, flows northeasterly until it reaches a point opposite the banks of Newfoundland, when it turns and sweeps across the Atlantic; then, dividing into two portions, it sends one arm downward toward the Azores whilst the other arm passes near the shores of Ireland. As it emerges from the Gulf of Mexico its temperature, which is 84° in summer, is hotter than is the temperature of the ocean at the Equator.

The effect of this Gulf Stream upon the climate of Ireland and the northwestern coast of Europe is to raise the winter temperature in Ireland about 30° above what would be the normal temperature in those latitudes.

There is likewise a mighty river in the ocean of humanity—the Irish race—which for a century and a half has flowed from Ireland to America; and, just as the Gulf Stream is many degrees warmer than the common waters of the ocean, this river of life in the ocean of humanity—the Irish race—is warmer, more loyal, and more fervent than the other waters.

Thus, whilst the American Gulf Stream has ameliorated and softened the climate of Ireland, the Irish race has ameliorated and blessed America by its loyalty and its soft and graceful courtesies.

THE DAILY MIRROR OF WASHINGTON

By Robert B. Smith

A REALIST FROM ARIZONA IN THE UNITED STATES SENATE

Visitors in the Senate galleries often marvel at the Chesterfieldian mannerisms of the Honorable HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, of Arizona. They do not realize that they are viewing a man who is both an ex-cowboy and "a lawyer by profession"—the latter being a quotation from his autobiography in the Congressional Directory.

Also, it is doubtful if the visitors realize that they are gazing upon one of the most consummate realists in modern political life.

Mr. ASHURST himself illustrates the latter characteristic by an anecdote concerning his experience in Arizona on a recent election day when he visited that State for purposes which will be understood by any Federal officeholder.

He was inveigled into attending a meeting of a men's luncheon club. He did not know that members of the club had "conspired" against him before the luncheon. The first speaker after the food had been served was a prominent citizen who—apparently unmindful of the Senator's presence—launched into a sonorous lament that Arizona had never produced a real statesman. The speaker rang the changes on this theme, while the Senator's face turned alternately scarlet and white. It did seem to be an ungracious speech to make in the presence of one who has represented Arizona in the Senate since that member of the Union was granted the privileges of statehood.

However, Mr. ASHURST was equal to the occasion. He arose when his turn came and orated as follows:

"My fellow citizens! It is true that Arizona has never produced a statesman. Moreover, I predict that you never will. Let me tell you why.

"You send me to Washington to represent you in the Senate. But you do not send me there because you are interested in grave questions of national or international policy. When I come back to Arizona, you never ask me any questions about such policies; instead you ask me: 'What about my pension?' or 'What about that job for my son?'

"I am not in Washington as a statesman. I am there as a very well-paid messenger boy doing your errands. My chief occupation is going around with a forked stick picking up little fragments of patronage for my constituents."

Thus the Senator orated at length. I may have taken some literary license with the direct quotations, but the substance of his remarks is accurate as quoted. When the meeting was over he was told that he had been the victim of a conspiracy—that he had been hoaxed. I don't know whether he was embarrassed or not. I have a suspicion that he was rather glad he had been goaded into telling some truths which many Washington luminaries would like to tell their constituents if they dared.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 24, 1935.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The tribute you paid Mr. Berryman, the cartoonist, in your speech at the University Club last Thursday evening, February 21, was beautiful, and your bantering discussion of the "care and feeding of politicians" was the most brilliant piece of irony and satire I have ever heard.

Faithfully yours,

CHARLES J. KERLEY.

EXTRACT FROM THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY SENATOR ASHURST AT UNIVERSITY CLUB, WASHINGTON, D. C., FEBRUARY 21, 1935

All classes of corporations, organizations, and persons have lately received generous gifts, gratuities, grants, and bounties from the Public Treasury except that large class of modest citizens, the politicians.

The Government's neglect of the politician is so cruel that I publicly declare that some provision should be made for the care, nurture, feeding, and training of our politicians, and I now set forth the following regimen or economic program to be observed until some law may be passed for the relief of our politicians.

As to diet: The politician just before an election should be allowed, at public expense, all the pork he wishes and he should use plenty of applesauce, as that is the only commodity of which the supply can never equal the demand.

As to sleep: If the politician should be tormented with insomnia, he should read one of his own speeches or listen to the speech of one of his fellow politicians; then a drowsiness will soon come upon him that could not be produced by all the soothing sirups in the world. After he falls into slumber there should be no anxiety as to the place where he is to sleep, as they all like the same "bunk."

As to exercise: "Fence building" is recommended, but if the lateral muscles of the body require development the politician should take up the practice of dodging. The muscles of his neck may be much strengthened if the politician will become a confirmed head nodder and nod his head in approval of all statements, plans, laws, appropriations, suggestions, resolutions, and reforms brought to his notice.

One of the defects of the American politician is that he is not a graceful auditor. No asset is more valuable to the politician than the art of audition, and he should train his ears by constant usage until they are capable of listening many hours at a stretch.

It will be remembered that the Earl of Beaconsfield, twice Prime Minister of Great Britain, in preparing young gentlemen for the diplomatic service, instructed them that to control their temper was important but that to control their features was more important. Therefore the politician should so control the muscles of his face that he will apparently be listening with rapt attention at all times. No matter how silly, foggy, or befuddling may be the conversation addressed to him the politician should guard against exhibiting inattention or exhaustion.

Neither scantiness of argument, barrenness of fact, nor absurdity nor ribaldry of the speech inflicted upon him should cause the politician to betray impatience. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the politician must control the muscles of his face to conceal his boredom and disgust no matter how addlepated the bore may be.

It is impossible to teach the politician to save up anything for a rainy day, although during prohibition times politicians were able to save up something for a dry day.

If the politician, during a political campaign, should resort to such an outlandish performance as to indulge in flattery, he should spread it on, not in thin layers but he should rather spread it on with a trowel or, better still, with a shovel.

There has long existed a myth to the effect that politicians should radiate creature comfort, suavity, affability, and sugared cajoleries.

This myth should be exploded; the politician who expects to survive every storm that blows, should simulate a flurried, harried demeanor, and a nervous—yes, I shall say irritable—nature, as such persons are generally regarded as sincere.

It should be remembered that the electorate suspects and distrusts men of superb intellect, calmness, and serenity.

Of course, there are some laws that mankind can never repeal, such as the law of reactions, the law of supply and demand, the law of the survival of the fittest, and the law of gravitation, but in a hard-pressed campaign, the politican will become the incarnate symbol of romantic liberalism and will gather many votes if he crusades demanding the repeal of these laws. Above all things, he should not forget that voters never grow weary of illusory promises.

The politician must tell the people what they want to hear; this, of course, never adds to the strength, firmness, or efficiency of the Government, but it does nourish the politician.

Even if the politician be a fluent speaker, silence is recommended, as silence is the best substitute for brains ever invented.

It is possible that the politician may be afflicted with that devastating malady known as "presidentitis", which is a burning, itching desire to become President. This is not a common disease; it usually assails Senators, Governors, Representatives, and Cabinet members, but it has been known to attack now and then even a university president.

When attacked by this ailment, the politician's usefulness to the country, to himself, and to his party is seriously impaired and frequently is destroyed.

The symptoms of presidentitis are pronounced and unmistakable and are as follows: The patient's vocabulary is reduced to the personal pronoun "I." There is an acute sensitiveness to newspaper criticism, then come irritability, thirst, unhappiness, loss of sleep, and extreme suspicion of all other statesmen. The earliest symptom, however, is the metamorphosing of the politician's backbone into India rubber.

SENATOR ASHURST AND COMMUNISM

The charge made by the notorious William Shearer that Arizona's senior Senator, HENRY F. ASHURST, is a Communist will come as a surprise to those in Arizona who know the Senator intimately. The charge will cause many a smile or laugh, and instead of being taken seriously it will be the cause of some fun-making at HENRY'S expense.

HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST, the cowboy and former jail turnkey who became Senator, is not a Communist. Even though he did believe in the Marxian economic principles, he is of the kind that simply could not swallow Marxian governmental principles. In the first place, our beloved HENRY loves to talk, and he likes to talk as he pleases. For that reason, if for no other, he would be about the last person from Arizona to become a Communist. If a padlock were put on his tongue, or if he were told that he had to think along just certain lines, he would be like a caged lion, and soon languish and pass away.

Nor could HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST tolerate the ruthless course that even Marx admitted that communism must take to succeed. There is no man more kindlier; no man more generous. If he ever carries a hammer it will be clothed with velvet and used only for a soft and friendly touch. As for the sickle, his would be as dull as a butter knife. He would use it only to gather votes. Violence is foreign to his nature. Even when he speaks, although he has a command of words and metaphors that can hypnotize his listeners, he cannot find words to say a real mean thing about anybody.

HENRY FOUNTAIN ASHURST can never be a Communist. It is not his nature. And besides, he knows his history too well. Above all things, he knows his politics too well. He is as full of politics as a dog is of fleas. He is, above everything else, a politician, a delightful politician who conquers his enemies by disarming them with charming manners, his never-ending interesting stories of the great and near-great, and by his frank confessions that he is just a politician out looking for votes.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2367) to create the Farmers' Home Corporation, to promote more secure occupancy of farms and farm homes, to correct the economic instability resulting from some present forms of farm tenancy, to engage in rural rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina

[Mr. BAILEY], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. ADAMS.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, is it too late to ask that the amendment be stated? I understand there has been no response to the roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no response to the roll call. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

Mr. ROBINSON. I merely desire to state that I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], who is necessarily detained from the Senate. Understanding that if present he would vote as I intend to vote, I am at liberty to cast my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ROBINSON. I again announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent because of illness, and that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I desire also to announce a special pair between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. If present, the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea", and the Senator from Kentucky would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I again announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. On this vote they are paired. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea", and the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

I also announce the general pair of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] is detained on official business. He has requested me to announce that if present, on this question he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—34

Adams	Couzens	Keyes	Radcliffe
Austin	Dickinson	King	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Burke	Gerry	Long	Stelwer
Byrd	Gibson	McCarran	Townsend
Capper	Gore	McNary	Vandenberg
Carey	Hale	Metcalf	White
Clark	Hastings	Moore
Coolidge	Johnson	Pittman

NAYS—39

Ashurst	Costigan	McGill	Russell
Bachman	Dieterich	McKellar	Schall
Bankhead	Donahey	Murphy	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Frazier	Murray	Sheppard
Black	Guffey	Neely	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Harrison	Norris	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hatch	Nye	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Pope	Van Nuys
Caraway	La Follette	Reynolds	Wagner
Connally	Logan	Robinson

NOT VOTING—22

Barbour	Bone	Bulkley	Cutting
Barkley	Borah	Copeland	Davis
Fletcher	McAdoo	O'Mahoney	Tydings
George	Maloney	Overton	Walsh
Glass	Minton	Trammell	Wheeler
Lewis	Norbeck

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have several amendments which I desire to present. I send forward the first one and ask for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 7, after the word "funds" at the end of first paragraph (e), it is proposed to add a colon and the following: "Provided, That every appointment the annual compensation thereof is $4,000 or more shall be subject to the confirmation of the Senate of the United States as provided by article II, section 2, of the Constitution."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have had some conferences this morning with certain members of the Department of Agriculture. I should like to have the attention of all Senators who are interested in sensible legislation.

For 2 years we have been curtailing production. We went to the extent of destroying several million hogs. We have reduced the acreage in cotton. We reduced the acreage in wheat. Nature came along and assisted in the wheat reduction. The surpluses which were piled up were, in the opinion of the Department, destroying the profits to the farmer, and therefore, in order to relieve the farmer, the Department resorted to the reduction of production in order that there might be a reasonable price received for what was produced. The Government went so far, in order to induce the farmers to reduce their acreage, as to give them a benefit payment of rental for the land which they promised not to plant.

I have here today a bill embodying amendments to the A. A. A., and attempting to carry on the reduction and restriction program for 2 years more, namely, 1936 and 1937. Now, let this be thoroughly understood by the greatest deliberative body in the world—God save the mark! We have already passed and are operating under a law curtailing acreage, reducing production, for the benefit of those on the farm. We established the Federal Land Bank in order to aid the desperate farmers to hold on to their land. I have these amendments here now. Listen to what it is proposed to do.

I was informed this morning from the Agricultural Department that the cry went up that tenancy had so greatly increased that provision must be made to take care of the situation. I said, "What is the reason tenancy has increased?" They said, "The reduction of acreage." Now, listen! The farmers reduced their acreage in cotton, in wheat, and in other grain, and the Government paid them to reduce it. It gave the farmers benefit payments for the idle acres; and the Department said that had the effect of increasing tenancy, because laborers and tenants were thrown out of employment. The Government had rented the land on the agreement that it would not be planted. The acreage was decreased and tenancy was increased, because the Government was paying the farmers to reduce their planted acreage. Now they come along with this bill and say in the next voice, "We now want you to appropriate a billion dollars so as to put every idle laborer and share-cropper and tenant back on the land, and furnish him and equip him and implement him to undo what the Government has spent more than $100,000,000 to do."

I do want to have some logic and some common sense about our legislation here.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I know one instance in my State where a landlord who had two tenants let his two tenants go and took the cash payments he received from the Government for withholding acreage from cultivation and hired farm hands to cultivate the rest of the land.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator mention the fact that the Agricultural Department paid the farmers to take the land out of cultivation, and now is giving them money to put the land back in cultivation?

Mr. SMITH. That is the point I am making.

Mr. LONG. I should like to tell the Senator of another little item which I saw. The Agricultural Department issued a bulletin showing how much stuff the people needed to eat, and it showed the need for more stuff than they had ever produced, and the same year they required the people to burn it up.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. President, let us go a little further into this logic.

The reason why acreage and production were reduced was to provide a reasonable return to those who agreed to and acquiesced in the program of reduction. Therefore, the Government admitted, and all of us knew, that the farmers were not making a penny. They were being foreclosed. Now it is proposed to reinstate hundreds of thousands of farmers back in a business which we declared was not making any money. So we are going to increase the profitableness of farming, which is notoriously unprofitable, by increasing by hundreds of thousands the number on the farm! The greatest deliberative body in the world My God. Yes; it is.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I am not so sure that we are going to increase the number on the farm. I think I know about how this bill is going to work. A landlord will want to sell some land to the Government, and he will use the name of some poor white man or colored man, and move off, and the Government will own some land.

This bill is not going to help the tenants. It ought to be called a bankrupt landlords' bill. It ought not to be called a tenants' bill.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I call attention to the illogical, absurd, ridiculous position in which the Senate is today. Here is the Bankhead cotton bill, restricting to a certain number of bales the amount of cotton that may be sold, because if the production should be increased the price would go down to a point where there would be no profit. That industry is regimented to a certain extent. Under the terms of the law anybody who makes any more cotton than the prescribed amount and attempts to sell it, has to pay 50 percent of the price then current by way of penalty. Along comes the same gentleman and introduces a bill which tends to increase by hundreds of thousands the number of farmers. What are those farmers going to make? If they do not make some cash crop—and in the South cotton is the only cash crop—what are they going to make? What are they going to live on?

This bill is like the doctrine of predestination, as some fellow described it: "I can and I can't; I will and I won't; I'm damned if I do, and damned if I don't." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am in deadly earnest about this matter. Every one of my colleagues will testify to the fact that, with my limited intellect, I have striven here for 25 years, a quarter of a century, to bring about some sort of living conditions for the farmer; but I never expected to be put in a position where the logic of one bill is absolutely destructive of the logic of what we have already done, and I shall not be a party to any such ridiculous performance.

Now, listen: Mr. Wallace himself issued a statement that millions of acres of land had to be taken out of cultivation. The President went into Georgia prior to his election, and I sat on the platform with him when he declared that the marginal lands of this country, the unprofitable ones, should be reforested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from South Carolina on the amendment has expired.

Mr. SMITH. How much time have I on the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill if he has not already spoken on it.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Chair. This is my swan song.

I have indicted the intelligence of this body. There is not a reasonable, logical man who can vote for this bill and maintain the A. A. A. amendments; and I am reporting today the bill embodying them. On the one hand, we are restricting, curtailing, licensing, regimenting, and, on the other hand, we are throwing the door wide open with a billion dollars to increase the number of farmers.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. As I read the amendments to the A. A. A. legislation, they give the Secretary of Agriculture power to require a license from every farmer who prepares for market, or who processes, or who in any way changes the form of the product which he produces on his farm. I wish to ask the Senator if that is correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is correct as the bill is to be reported. I propose to offer on the floor an amendment to the effect that where a farmer processes and distributes his own product, no license shall be required; but I do not wish to be diverted to the A. A. A. amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. LONG. It is now provided in the bill that a farmer has to get a license to sell his own stuff?

Mr. SMITH. That is, if he is a processor and distributor; in other words, if he has sufficient volume to be his own merchant, to merchandise his own stuff.

Mr. LONG. A farmer does not have to have a very big volume to do that. Can he sell his own sweetpotatoes?

Mr. SMITH. I think so.

Mr. LONG. Can he sell his own molasses?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina will permit me, a processor under the present law is defined as anyone who handles his product for sale. Therefore, a man who produces a bushel of strawberries on his own farm and sells them will be subject to a license under these amendments.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the bill embodying the amendment goes to that extent. I wish to take this occasion to say that with the substantive law as it is, these amendments were claimed to be simply clarifying amendments; and I sent down to the Department and asked the proponents of the law to write the report. Now we have not only the amendments proposed by those who really drafted the act, but we have their report on what the amendments mean.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. Having reference to the agricultural amendments——

Mr. SMITH. I do not like to deflect the attention of the Senate from the beautiful performance in which they are engaged to the A. A. A. amendments. Let us wait until that matter comes up.

Mr. MURPHY. There is just one observation I should like to make in connection with the Senate committee's report, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. MURPHY. In the case of a processor who is also a producer, his protection is in the provision that 85 percent of the producers must request a license.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; that provision has reference to another section. I shall discuss it fully when I report the amendments.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the pending amendment is to cut down the authorized bond issue from a billion dollars to $100,000,000.

Mr. SMITH. No; we lost that amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the authorized bond issue still stands at a billion dollars?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Inasmuch as most of the objections to the bill seem to be predicated upon the fact that the money will be used more to relieve landlords than to relieve tenants, if the sum were cut down so that it could be more carefully administered and so that it could be experimented with for a period of time, might not many of the objections be eliminated? Then, if it should prove to be a good thing, we could go further into it at the next session of Congress.

What earthly use is there in appropriating at one fell swoop a billion dollars for a project which, to say the least, is questionable in its entirety? If we are to embark on this program, may I not ask the Senator if we should not enter upon it very slowly and, if it bears fruit, we can enlarge the policy at the next session of Congress? Would not that be better rather than commit the Government to the issuance of a billion dollars' worth of bonds for a project about which there has been no adequate hearing, and when no testimony has been offered in support of the bill?

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, in reply I may say that I took the floor the other day, when the motion was made to recommit the bill, and said I thought we might do something along the lines suggested by the Senator from Maryland; and I think I had a pretty good reaction this morning in telephone conversation with the Department. But with the President himself insisting that we should restrict acreage and not cultivate land that was doubtful in its return, for some reason we are reducing acreage with every conceivable device, reducing output, in order to bring about better prices, and in the very next breath here on the floor of the Senate we are asked to appropriate a billion dollars in order to open wide the doors to all tenants, sharecroppers, and contract hands who are not now landowners.

I will ask Senators to listen to the inducement offered them to come in under the law. I wish to read the inducement. In the face of the request that acreage be reduced—and they did induce the farmers to reduce it, because they made benefit payments for land they promised not to cultivate——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming the proposed policy shall be carried out and the entire billion dollars shall be used, it will be used for the purpose of buying up land and redistributing it among the farmers, and then will not the land which the Government buys be a charge on the Government, insofar as that land is not cultivated? Will not the Government be obliged to pay to the owners of that land the money for not raising crops upon the land which it bought and gave to the tenant until such time as he pays for it? Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH. That is logical; that is exactly correct.

Now I turn to page 8 of the copy of the bill which I hold in my hand, and I ask those who are going to vote so wisely and patriotically and sympathetically for the farmers to listen to a quotation from it. We are making benefit payments to farmers who agree not to cultivate, and we are reducing acreage.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Before the Senator reads the extract, I should like to inquire whether he noticed in the press dispatches a few days ago that the Department of Agriculture, which had contracted with certain wheat farmers in the West to pay them, I believe, some $25,000,000 not to cultivate their land, was proposing to pay them the $25,000,000 not to cultivate the land, and at the same time to give them permits to cultivate the very land which they were paying the farmers not to cultivate?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMITH. My time is limited.

Mr. GORE. Comptroller General McCarl happened to rule against that anomalous proposition.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, this thing is ridiculous—it is absurd. Keep in mind that we are paying millions to keep farmers from planting, and listen to the paradox. This is what this board may do. This is the power of the board:

> To establish, make loans for, and to assist in the establishment of small individual farms and farm homes, together with the necessary buildings and other structures, livestock, equipment, implements and machinery, furnishings, supplies, and facilities.

They are going further in inducing them to come back than they went in seeking to induce them to get off. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, have we lost all sense of logic, all sense of our duty as Senators, and are we to sit here and vote this absurd paradox? Every farmer will resent it. Those who have borne the burden and heat of the day, and are standing to lose their property on account of the unfavorable market, will be resentful, that, after they have agreed to curtail their production and restrict their output, this flood is to be turned loose on them.

I wish to read one other paragraph. Listen to this. This is under the power of the board, and I read from subdivision (c):

> The Corporation may provide for such amortization periods for the repayment of indebtedness owed to it, and may postpone the date when the initial installment shall be due, as it may deem advisable.

But in no event shall the amortization be less than 60 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no!

Mr. SMITH. Shall not exceed 60 years. It is the same thing, tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it is not the same thing, as the Senator must know.

Mr. SMITH. It gives them 60 years.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; it does not. It fixes a maximum of 60 years.

Mr. SMITH. Who would not take the maximum? Who would not take 60 years?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is in the discretion of the board, except that the board cannot fix an amortization period exceeding 60 years.

Mr. SMITH. The board, which wrote the bill, will give them sixty and come here for sixty more.

Mr. President, in the name of the farmers who have responded to the curtailment appeal and are doing all they can to meet it, I ask, when they are met with this, is it not enough to make them quit the whole program?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a very few minutes. I have not participated in the debate during the discussion of the pending bill.

Some aspersions have been cast upon Secretary Wallace in the Senate during the last few weeks, and, while he is able to take care of himself, and his record speaks for itself, I will say that, in my judgment, Secretary Wallace is one of the greatest leaders developed during the terrible turmoil which has been going on in the United States for the last 5 or 6 years. His plans and policies, if he shall be allowed to carry them out, will solve the farm question; and if one believes that he has not succeeded, let him go out among the farmers of the United States and see the difference between their present attitude and their attitude when Secretary Wallace started his plan. Indeed, they were "the man with the hoe" before he took charge. Now they are men who can stand up and look the world in the face.

Contemplating the economic record which has been made, and the changed conditions, I believe that everyone, when he attacks the plan, will recognize that perhaps he has not given due consideration to what has already been accomplished.

> Where there is no vision the people perish.

That sentiment was voiced a long time ago, and it is as true today as it was when it was uttered.

There is no inconsistency between the pending bill and the plans which have been put into effect by previous legislation. The distinguished Senator from South Carolina is mistaken in the statements which he makes. We have had restrictions in production.

The farming engaged in as a business has been necessary under the plan of economic self-sufficiency which has been adopted. The plan is wrong and I am against the doctrine of economic self-sufficiency. But America has adopted that plan, and it has become necessary for us so to arrange the business affairs of the country, both agriculturally and industrially, that we can exist under such a plan.

I shall endeavor to state what, as I understand, the bill seeks to accomplish. There is in this country an ever-increasing number of tenant farmers. They are here 1 year, or for a few months, and are gone elsewhere. They have large families. They have no opportunity to educate or care for their families. They are not in one place long enough to send their children to school. Their boys and girls grow up without proper training. They go out in the world and fall into bad environment, with the result that they have no chance in this life.

The tenant who is poor and downtrodden is not responsible for the conditions which surround him at this time. If there is any class entitled to our help, our sensible, intelligent help, it is that class of people. Perhaps we have more things to eat than we can consume. Perhaps more is produced than is necessary, but the tenant cannot require these things. He has no money. He is a serf. He is almost a slave. He has no opportunity to obtain the good things of life.

This bill, as I understand from reading it and from what I have heard said about it, simply proposes that there be authorized the use of a certain sum. It does not have to be expended this year or next. It perhaps does not have to be expended during the next 20 years. The program looks ahead, it looks to the future, and is not one that need be carried out in its entirety this year or next year.

The purpose is that individuals who know nothing except how to farm a little shall be given an easy opportunity to acquire a home, so that they may remain in one locality, where they can bring up their families, give them proper healthful surroundings and conditions, afford them proper medical attention, send their children to school, and make them a permanent and helpful part of society.

The bill simply proposes that there shall be a corporation created which will acquire lands and sell them on long, easy-term payments to those who are willing to work and acquire a home. It is not supposed that they will go into commercial farming. The purpose of the bill is to give them an opportunity to earn a living so they will be sufficiently fed, so they will be sufficiently clothed, and may have an opportunity to work out their own salvation. That is the purpose of the bill, and I believe every Member of the Senate is of the opinion that something should be done for that class of people, whose numbers are increasing rapidly year by year. In my own State they now constitute a third of the farming population, and the proportion is increasing all the time.

If we can do something along this line it seems to me we should do it. The proposed plan is not justly subject to criticism. I am willing to admit that it may be wrecked by bad management. If those who are placed in charge of it shall fail to administer it in accordance with the intention of the proposed act, it will fail. But, on the other hand, there are men, such as Secretary Wallace, who are sufficiently interested in all the people of this Nation to endeavor to administer the act in such a way as to bring blessings and happiness and prosperity to that class of people which needs help more than any class of which I know in this great Nation of ours.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, I will speak on the amendment. I was interested in listening to the Senator who last spoke [Mr. LOGAN]. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the great work which the Secretary of Agriculture is doing in my State. I have here petitions signed by some 1,200 employees and ex-employees of cotton-textile mills. Here is one from the little village of Hope in Rhode Island. The cotton-textile mill in that town is shut down. There is no hope for it starting again so long as the Secretary of Agriculture has his way. Let me read this petition:

Whereas most cotton-textile mills in Rhode Island have already been forced to close, thereby causing unemployment and misery to thousands of workers and others in this State; and

Whereas this permanent loss of employment is on such a large scale that our chances of being able to find other work seem almost impossible, thereby leaving us no choice except either to starve or go on the relief rolls indefinitely; and

Whereas many of us own our own homes acquired from our industry and savings, which homes we shall have to part with at great financial loss; and

Whereas this condition has in a large part been caused by large importations of cheap cotton cloth and the cotton-processing tax,

We, the employees and former employees of Hope Mill, of Hope, R. I., petition the President and Congress to take immediate steps to save what is left of the cotton-textile industry by protecting us against the low wages in foreign countries, and by repealing the cotton-processing tax.

Mills are forced to close. That is what is being done in Rhode Island.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, in voting on the pending bill, the Bankhead farm-tenancy bill, we should consider the general condition of agriculture which has arisen because of the greatest period of deflation in our history and the worst dust storms which have ever afflicted the country, both of which factors have contributed to dispossessing thousands of farmers, through no fault of their own—farmers now in the gypsy class. The fact that some real-estate people may profit by this measure is no answer to their plight.

On the other hand, we have the bankrupt real-estate market, with every country newspaper filled with mortgage-sale advertisements, and with my State alone holding title to thousands of acres of land which it is willing to dispose of at sacrifice prices. The legislature there has been busily engaged in devising ways and means of disposing of this land with profit both to the State and to the farmer.

There was never a time in our history when a man could start farming with as small capital as now. Times were never more propitious for a man with a family to establish himself on a self-sustaining basis on a farm away from the unemployed of the city. We cannot suppose that agriculture will always continue in the slough of despond it now is. During the boom times leading up to 1929 our agricultural acreage was 250,000,000; now it is 180,000,000. Experts estimate that our Nation can consume the products from 330,000,000 acres with normal prosperity. Furthermore, science is helping find new uses for agricultural products, uses the results of which no one can now foretell. It is most timely that a helping hand should be lent the farmer, who through no fault of his own has lost his farm. Who are we to say that he will be shiftless and unwilling to try to repay the Government loan? He will do as well as many large corporations to which money has freely been loaned.

The farmer living on his own farm is the greatest bulwark of individualism in the world. He is an insurance against communism and fascism. Russia is finding that she must yield her communistic adventures when she approaches the farmer, who refuses to share his products with the State inspectors, who come to take and leave only what they deem enough for him and his family on which to survive for another year. With the threat of radicalism and foreign "isms" hanging like the sword of Damocles over our head, we should help restore the farmer to his plot of land, with sufficient equipment to make it worth his while to live on it. In this way individualism gains a bulwark and communism a foe.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the statement just made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] was a clear, concise, and well-reasoned argument in favor of the passage of this bill. I do not intend the speech of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to be diverted into any protracted discussion in reference to A. A. A. amendments which he says he is sponsoring, but in the same breath announces he has amended, nor with reference to the policy of the reduction program. However, I do desire to answer his efforts to convince Members of the Senate that there is an inconsistency in this program and the proper reduction program of the A. A. A., or under the so-called "Bankhead Act."

Mr. President, it should not be accepted that the reduction program is for a general reduction of acreage in cultivation. Instead of it being, so far as it applies to my section of the country, a general acreage-reduction program, it is a cotton-acreage-reduction program, and, generally speaking, there is and has been no reduction in the number of acres heretofore cultivated upon the farms. In short, while the acreage planted to cotton has been reduced, the acreage planted to food and feed crops and hay and commodities of that sort has been increased, so that as much acreage has been planted, as much labor as heretofore has been required, and the same number of people working upon farms heretofore are still working upon farms.

This bill, Mr. President, does not contemplate in any way a conflict with that program, as the senior Senator from South Carolina seems so clearly to discern. Permit me to call attention to subsection (e), on page 10:

(e) The board and the corporation shall give due consideration to the desirability of avoiding the expansion of production for the market of crops for which the price is lower than the parity price as defined in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended; and shall, so far as practicable, assist beneficiaries of the program to become established upon lands now in cultivation.

In short, Mr. President, and without protracting the discussion, this program contemplates putting the tenants upon farms now in cultivation and enabling them to produce for themselves instead of producing for the absentee landlord so eloquently represented here by the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. It contemplates no increase in production but merely a change in the ownership of the commodities produced; that is all.

Let it not be forgotten also, Mr. President, that the crop-reduction program is designed to meet a temporary emergency; it is intended to reduce to some fair proportion and relation the quantity of supply to the market demand. We all contemplate that within a reasonable time that necessity will pass away. The pending bill proposes a program, Mr. President, not of an emergency temporary character but one intended for the benefit of the underprivileged class in agriculture. So I am sure that no thoughtful mind in the Senate will be disturbed or diverted by the type of argument made here by the senior Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] based his arguments against the pending bill on premises which I think are unsound. The purpose of the brief remarks which I shall now make is to give emphasis to that conclusion.

The Senator's first statement was that the production-control program, particularly as applied to cotton, is responsible for an increase in tenancy. I assert that that premise is incorrect and that the conclusion based upon it is not accurate. Every cotton farmer who signed a production-control contract expressly agreed in his contract to continue in service without diminution the same number of tenants who had been theretofore employed. I read from the contract which is signed in every instance where a cotton producer in the United States derives benefit under the agricultural-adjustment program:

Insofar as possible, maintain on this farm the normal number of tenants and other employees.

So that cotton-production control is not responsible for increase in tenancy unless there shall have been general violation of the contract. The contract made in every instance obligated the producer to retain the normal number of tenants.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator from Arkansas that, instead of there having been a reduction by reason of the cotton-control program, there has been an increase; for a great many people not heretofore engaged in cotton production, but temporarily out of it, have gone back to cotton farms somewhere in order to produce cotton.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the increase in tenancy has been in progress for many years, and is continuing. It has gathered momentum because of the fact that during recent years farming, in general, has been unprofitable, and many persons who formerly engaged in farming are now on the relief rolls, but it is not accurate to state that the production-control program is responsible for the increase in tenancy.

What the pending bill proposes to do is to change the status of many citizens from that of tenants to that of home owners; instead of requiring them to work someone else's land they are to be permitted to buy, own, and cultivate their own land. That is the fundamental principle of this proposed legislation. Is it the position of those who oppose it that the unfortunate citizen who is compelled by reason of conditions that surround him to move from place to place, to have a mere temporary residence and home, is to be denied any assistance, any assurance of aid in this time when we are doing so many things intended to promote the welfare of those in distress? What is to become of the hundreds of thousands of good-faith farmers who are in the class of tenants and share-croppers and many of whom are now dependent upon Federal relief? Is it not better to give them the chance to have some independence, to move, if they wish to do so, from the large plantation, where they are dependent and are mere tenants, and to establish themselves on small tracts of land which they may cultivate and which will constitute their own homes, thus giving them permanent places of residence, and, instead of continuing them dependent upon the generosity and the assistance of the owners of large tracts of land, give them the hope and the inspiration that they may build walls around them and roofs above them which will shelter them from the blasts of adversity?

I know that the plan may not be perfect; I know that it has been said that the bill if enacted into law may not be honestly administered; but, Mr. President, whatever defects there may be in administration are incident to any progress that may be attempted. This bill will be honestly and fairly administered, and, if it shall be so administered, it will constitute a material assistance and encouragement to that class of American men and women who most need the aid of their Government in this time of distress.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have taken no part in this debate and unfortunately have heard little of it. It so happens that I have been engaged in committee hearings and they were of such urgent nature that I felt compelled to absent myself from the floor.

I wish to ask the sponsor of the bill one or two questions, if I may, but, before doing so, will make one or two brief comments.

I was not here this morning when the vote was taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. If I had been present, I would have voted for it.

In the early history of our country our population was largely rural. As I look back to my own ancestors, who lived on little farms in New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Maine, I realize that they gained from the cultivation of the patches of land they owned a certain stability of character, for which I am extremely grateful and thankful. I know that there is nothing better for any family than to live in a home that is owned by the family. It makes for decency; it makes for self-respect; it makes for confidence in and support of government.

I have seen much of tenement living in my own city, and in certain other sections of the country have seen much of the tenant farmer and realized his hardships. I have witnessed the same evils in Europe; consequently I am not amazed that such living conditions have had such damaging effect upon the persons involved. In too many instances they are conditions which impair health, which impair morals, which impair respect for government.

There is no question at all that if we tie a family to the soil, to a home, immediately that family has an interest in government. Whether it is a city home or a country home, the members of that family will be good citizens and will be interested in good government. So all the purposes which are involved in the bill appeal strongly to me.

Having said that much I wish to inquire why we need, as provided in subsection (d) on page 4, such an enormous sum, the authorization of $1,000,000,000? Why do we need so large a sum? I am convinced that a very much smaller sum would be ample. It is because of this feeling that I should have voted for the Bailey amendment if I had been here. Why could not that amount be reduced from $1,000,000,000 to some reasonable and understandable sum?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask that the Senator from New York take also into consideration the fact that in the public-works relief bill recently passed there was written in the law, under what we called the Russell amendment, a provision that $500,000,000 of that appropriation shall be available for precisely these purposes?

Mr. COPELAND. I remember that is true.

Mr. BAILEY. This provides $1,000,000,000 more. I wish to get those facts clearly before the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. I would not be honest with the taxpayers of my constituency if I did not say there is great distress over the appropriations we are making. These are staggering in amount.

I hope the Senator from Alabama will answer my question, which is, could we not reduce the amount of the bonds to be issued to a much smaller sum? The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] just refreshed my memory as regards the big work-relief bill. I heard the Senator from Alabama say a moment ago it is not likely there shall be need for all this money. If that is true, why do we think of doing something that would still further frighten the country?

I am sure it would bring criticism upon the bill, unthoughtful criticism based on unthought-out conclusions which will be reached. It will be said that we appropriated $50,000,000, a huge amount, and in addition to that actually appropriated another $1,000,000,000.

It is said there will be no demand for that $1,000,000,000, perhaps for years to come. In the relief bill half of that amount is already provided. Because of these facts why should we not reduce the amount in subsection (d) to a much smaller sum? Then those of us who desire to support the legislation would be subjected to far less criticism than if we vote for the $50,000,000 and then, in addition to that, for the authorization of fully endorsed and underwritten bonds in the amount of $1,000,000,000. Would it not answer the purpose of those who sponsor the bill to have that sum reduced?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this plan was worked out with a view of being put into operation over a number of years and with a view to the probable requirements in order to get a very substantial number of tenants upon farms of their own. The Senator will observe from the language in the bill that the bonds can only be issued with the approval of the President, as provided in one amendment which was adopted yesterday, and also with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. If there should be any alarm about the issuance of the bonds, of course, the President and the Secretary of the Treasury would not have them issued. The bonds are authorized so the program can go along and be set up with a view of working it out on the basis of a long-range program, with absolute control in the hands of the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, who would not issue a single bond unless the situation justified it.

Mr. COPELAND. I recognize that is a safeguard, but nevertheless everything we do in the Congress is being criticized in certain sections. I do not know that we can answer every critic. But it will be pretty hard for me to answer the criticism that this corporation will issue in bonds $1,000,000,000 in addition to the $50,000,000 in cash which it is to be given at once. Why embarrass those of us who desire to support the legislation? Why leave us open to the criticism, and a very just one, that we are going on and on and on in the authorization of the expenditure of billions and billions of dollars?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. GORE. Would not the answer and the argument of the Senator from Alabama lie equally well against any limitation at all?

Mr. COPELAND. I think it would.

Mr. GORE. If the discretion of officers can be trusted, it is no reflection on an officer to put a limitation on his power. If there is an argument against reducing the $1,000,000,000, at least the argument of the Senator from Alabama would apply equally well if it were $5,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 or $100,000,000,000, or no limitation at all.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think it changes the situation. It does not change the attitude of those who are finding fault with us regarding these large appropriations just because the expenditures are safeguarded. I would trust the President of the United States and I would trust the Secretary of the Treasury. No matter who the President might be or who the Secretary of the Treasury might be, I know he will act in the public interest. But the point I make is, why burden the bill, why put a millstone around its neck, by making provision for such an enormous amount of unnecessary and immediately unneeded money? Why not reduce it?

I understand in my absence from the Senate this morning an amendment to reduce the amount to $100,000,000 was rejected. That would be the amount I had in mind, but why not reduce it to $200,000,000 or to some lesser amount than $1,000,000,000?

Senators, we cannot shut our eyes and ears to the criticisms which are being passed upon the Congress. I finally voted for the $4,880,000,000 joint resolution, having first tried by such weak methods as I could command to support the amendments to reduce the amount to $1,000,000,000 or to $2,000,000,000. Those efforts failed and I saw no other means of relieving these distressed people except by submission to the staggering appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. COPELAND. I have not yet spoken on the bill. I shall take some of my time on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Why not now give us a smaller sum? Why not reduce the amount by a very considerable figure? Why not reduce it, say, to $200,000,000? That is a lot of money.

I repeat, we are bringing unnecessary criticism upon our heads by voting $1,000,000,000. It is unnecessary to do it. We do not know what demand there may be for these funds. The $50,000,000 alone may be in excess of the actual need, but certainly if provision were made for a reasonable sum beyond that, all the purposes of the bill would be met.

I appeal to the able Senator from Alabama, whose heart has been in this legislation, I know. He has shown an interest in the subsistence homestead plan from the very origin of it in this generation. I plead with him and I appeal to him to give us a reduction in the amount from $1,000,000,000 to some more reasonable and understandable figure. Then we may carry out all he has in his heart and all the bill provides for and seeks to do, purposes which are noble and inspiring, and which do credit to our Americanism. I believe our country would be better off if we could put every man who is now a tenant upon a little farm of his own which had in it at least the means of support for his family. I believe it would be a splendid thing if we could put every family in America in a home, but there is a financial limit to what we can do.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. LONG. I understood my friend from New York to say he thought it would add to comfort and do good to put every man on a farm, and then he would be all right. I wonder if the Senator from New York has ever tried farming.

Mr. COPELAND. It so happens that I was born on a farm.

Mr. LONG. The Senator was smart enough to get away from it early, was he not?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I live on a farm now.

Mr. LONG. I got off it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that the farmers he has in mind will all have hovering over them a mortgage for the full amount of the purchase price.

Mr. COPELAND. That is not a good argument. There never was a farmer in the world who at some time in his career did not have a mortgage; and I know I am a good farmer, because every 3 months I have gone down to the bank to pay the interest on my farm mortgage. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Where does the Senator get the money? Not off the farm? [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I desire to place in the RECORD at this point the fact that according to the last regular census of the United States, 58 percent of the farms in the United States were not mortgaged; 42 percent of the farms were mortgaged; and the farms representing two-thirds of that 42 percent were in 11 Midwestern States. I do not mean that at no time in the history of the farms included in the 58 percent were they mortgaged; but that is the present status, and I think it is to the credit of the farmers, or of their enterprise.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, just one more word.

I beg the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] not to resist an amendment which I shall soon offer to reduce the amount under subsection (d) of section 3, the $1,000,000,000 bond issue, to $200,000,000. If more money is needed later we are going to have Congresses to vote it; at least, I hope we are. I hope our form of government will be maintained so that the Congress can meet again.

I beg the Senator to carry out all the noble thoughts and purposes he has with reference to the bill and yet protect some of us who are already under bitter criticism for our congressional acts. I beg of him to permit a smaller amount than a billion dollars as the amount of bonds which can be issued.

In a few moments, if I am permitted, I shall offer such an amendment. In the meantime, with every desire in my heart to support the bill and to do what I can to put it into successful operation, I beg the Senator from Alabama to let us reduce the amount of the bond issue to some understandable sum.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before the Senator from New York takes his seat, I desire to say that his argument is one which must necessarily appeal to anyone who thinks over the present situation as to the credit of the Government and what we are doing. But there is no need of reducing the billion-dollar bond-issue authorization if we are to enact a bill at all. Ten billion dollars will not do this job. This bill undertakes to deal with the most difficult problem which confronts agriculture at this time, and that is to arrest and stay the tendency toward tenancy. So long as interest charges are what they are, and constantly increasing, and so long as taxes are constantly increasing, we may open the Treasury of the United States on the subject of ending tenancy and, in my judgment, it will be a failure.

It must be borne in mind that since 1913 taxes on farms have increased over 320 percent. A farmer cannot pay the taxes which he must now pay and the interest rate which he must now pay, because the money necessary to enable him to pay is not in the business. Therefore, when we start upon the project with $200,000,000, we shall not be able even to complete the organization. If we start with a billion dollars we shall cover only a very small portion of the United States so far as tenancy is concerned. And if we do not change our tax system, our credit system, destroy monopoly, and restore the purchasing power of the people generally so the farmer may find a market, we can never end tenancy—indeed, we cannot avoid peonage.

This is a Herculean task. The great objection I have to his bill is that we are starting upon this stupendous enterprise, which is almost rebuilding the agricultural system of the United States, without placing any sufficient safeguards around the money which we are proposing to appropriate, and which in the future we shall have to appropriate. Unless better safeguards are put in the bill, we shall have the old tragedy of the Freedmen's Bureau reenacted upon the American scene.

I know Senators do not want to have this bill go back to the committee. They think that will kill it for the present session. It may be that it will. I do not know. I do not think there is any reason why it should; but I make the prophecy upon the floor of the Senate, and record it here, that if the bill shall be enacted with no other safeguards than it contains at this time as to the expenditure of the money, and against preferences which might be made for the utilization of land schemes, we shall have a national disgrace at the end of the expenditure of the billion dollars.

There are two individuals who are chiefly concerned in the bill. One is the taxpayer, who still ought to have a voice in this matter. The other is the tenant whom we would like to help; but unless we safeguard the bill in the matter of expenditure and its administration, we shall injure the taxpayer without serving the tenant.

I do not believe I am unfriendly to the principle involved in the bill. I know that I am not unfriendly to the proposition of ending the landlord-and-tenant system in the United States as applied to farm lands if it can be done. It is a great national problem, the solution of which is indispensable to a sound, healthy condition in the United States, and I know it is a problem with which we ought to deal. Therefore, let us start upon the theory that we have a task which will engage the very best ability and the very best thought of those who are interested in it; and those who propose to expend money ought to safeguard it so that it cannot possibly be wasted.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. No Senator has given more serious thought to the question of taxation than has the Senator from Idaho. From the time I came into the Senate I have been impressed by his various speeches here, so what he says on this subject appeals strongly to me. I wish to ask the Senator what, then, should we do about this matter? What should be our action now about it?

The Senator says this bill is not well thought out. Are amendments ready? Has the Senator amendments, or what action should we take to make this the sort of bill that will accomplish the desired purpose?

Mr. BORAH. I voted twice to send the bill back to the committee. You cannot re-form this bill now. You must have the aid of experts, men who have had experience in such matters.

Mr. COPELAND. I did, too.

Mr. BORAH. I did so because I feel that only there can it be properly worked out. It is thought that sending the bill back to the committee will put it in the hands of the enemy, and thereby kill it. I do not desire to kill a proper bill, but it is almost impossible to work out the question upon the floor of the Senate. We ought to call before the committee men who have had experience in just this kind of thing. For instance, I had a long telegram from a man in California who has had a great deal of experience in just this kind of an enterprise. He has suggestions to make. I do not know whether or not the committee would regard them as sound; but there are a number of persons who ought to be consulted upon a subject of this kind.

Mr. COPELAND. Now may I ask the Senator a further question? If the bill should be recommitted, is there not enough power in the Senate to do it in such a way that it would be reported here in order that it might not die?

Mr. BORAH. Of course. It can be sent back with instructions.

Mr. COPELAND. I think it would be a calamity to have the bill die. I desire to have action upon the bill; but I venture to say, from what the Senator from Idaho has said, that he sees many dangers in it. I see the one I have mentioned—that somehow or other there must be ample justification for voting an authorization of a billion-dollar bond issue. We have taxpayers besides those upon the farm who will have to pay these bills, who must pay these taxes. I assume that at some time we are going to pay these bills. Is there not some way in which this measure can be dealt with by its friends, and brought back here in form for final action before we adjourn?

Mr. BORAH. As I look at it, Mr. President, if this bill were being enacted to cover a period of 5 or 6 or 10 years, or something of that kind, the terms required might be different; but we must bear in mind that we are enacting a bill which will cover a period of a century. The life of some of the acts provided for in this bill is 60 years.

We are building an institution upon a perfectly humane foundation, a most desirable thing, but a stupendous thing to undertake; and we are really setting up a Corporation which will be engaged in this enterprise for at least half a century, if it does not collapse and is not a failure.

There are a number of people who have had experience in this kind of enterprise who have not been heard by the committee, who have not been called. The men who have organized this movement had the humanitarian viewpoint, and properly so. They knew that here was a task to be done which ought to be done; and I entirely agree with them.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The Senator a moment ago alluded to a similar experiment in California. My understanding is that the scheme in California finally failed. I do not know; I should like to know the facts, and if their experience would forewarn us against similar mistakes and help to guarantee the success of this plan, I think we ought to know what the truth is.

Mr. BORAH. The scheme in California did fail, but, as I understand, there are those who believe that it failed by reason of some of the defects in the scheme which could be avoided.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, nobody who ever ventured upon an economic impossibility was ever willing to admit that the scheme was an inherent failure and that the thing could not be done. They always say that if they had had more money or more power they could have made it stand up. Of course, if they had had enough power they could achieve an impossibility. Unluckily, there is not that much power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not willing to surrender to the view that we cannot do anything to arrest the spread of tenancy. I do not think we can do it all by the pending bill. If the present tax system obtains with reference to the American farmer, if we are to continue to tax physical property as we are taxing it now, and put the farmer in a position where he pays much more than his proportion of the taxes in comparison with the property which he owns, if we do not apply the income-tax system so that the farmer will get the benefit of it as well as the business man, we will not succeed. But those things will have to be worked out, of course, as separate measures and in separate ways, and largely by the States themselves. However, the task here, aided even by those things, is still a stupendous task, one that will last over at least half a century.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, I should like to make one suggestion. The Senator has expressed himself as being in favor of the principle involved—the desire to do this fine, humanitarian, and ultimately economically valuable thing. I know that is my feeling. I do not want to be in the position of killing the bill. I do not want it to be killed. I believe in the principle involved in the measure. I think it would be a wonderful thing for our country. It would have much to do with the perpetuity of our institutions.

The Senator has been a Member of the Senate longer than the rest of us, and he can surely suggest a way by which we could have the bill dealt with without killing it, to make certain that it would come back to us within a reasonable time so that it could be dealt with here. These matters, as the Senator from Idaho has said, are so important because they will extend over 60 or 70 years' time, and it is vital that the foundation should be strongly laid. I hope that there can be found a way to accomplish what the splendid, outstanding citizen, the author of the bill, has in mind and, at the same time, that the welfare of our country may be best served.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have expressed my view by voting to recommit the bill. If the authors of the bill think that is unwise, so far as I am concerned, I am through. It is impossible to perfect the bill on the floor. You must have assistance which you can only secure in committee. But I venture the opinion that the authors of the bill will in the future feel that greater care should have been taken with reference to safeguarding the funds authorized to be appropriated by the measure. The billion dollars will be just the beginning.

AN EXAMPLE OF SUCCESSFUL FARMING (?)

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have no hesitancy in voting against the pending bill, and against every one of these agricultural schemes. One of them proposes that land be bought and taken out of cultivation. I am against that. Another proposal is to buy the land back and restore it to cultivation. I am against that. Another thing—and this is not a matter of jest; it is accepted law and policy in the administration of affairs today—one of the Government agencies publishes a bulletin telling what every human being ought to be allowed to have to eat, and it states there is not enough food in the land to bring about that desirable condition; and then they burn up and plow under some of that which is in existence, which is said not to be sufficient for the needs of the people.

Another bulletin shows that the American people owe $262,000,000,000, and that they never can pay their debts, or the interest on their debts, or the taxes on the land. Then there is another proposal to increase the indebtedness some billions of dollars more, and to give them 60 years more of interest charges on the increase. Those things are inconsistent one way or the other.

We are told that there is not a living to be had on the farm, and there is not. There is no such thing today as making a living on a farm. Yet there is a suggestion that the farmers put some more mortgages on some more land, in a business in which the people now engaged are not making a living, and to put more people on farms, when it is known that more of them cannot make a living under present conditions, at a time when the country is already overwhelmed with debts and with taxes. It is proposed to put more people back on the farms, with a farm mortgage for the full amount of the purchase price, and it is expected that they will be able to weather existence under the present circumstances and to retire the mortgage, when even an unmortgaged farmer is unable to weather the cost of operations.

I was raised on a farm, Mr. President. I am one of the world's most successful farmers. [Laughter.] I left the farm as early as I could possibly get away, and I have never gone back since, demonstrating long in advance a keen knowledge of farming. [Laughter.]

Not only that, I bought a farm. I won half of it in a lawsuit, and I bought out my co-owner. I had 65 acres of switch cane on the place, which, he said, would take care of two cattle to the acre during the wintertime. He sold me 3 head of cattle, 1 yearling, a heifer, and calf. Then he convinced me that I ought to construct a wire fence around that 65 acres of cane. So I bought the wire fencing and enough barbed wire to put two strands of barbed wire on top of the fence. That man loaded up a wagon and started out with my wire to fence my 65 acres of cane, with my three head of cattle to start with. He never stopped. He reached the place where the cattle were, put them in front of the wagon, and drove them on to Jena, where he sold my cattle and sold my barbed wire and my fencing. I have not seen him since, and I have never lost a dime on a farm from that day to this. [Laughter.]

Mr. GORE. The Senator owes that man something.

Mr. LONG. That is my experience with farming. The best friend I ever had was the man who took my wire and cows and left the country with them. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, no one is going to make any mortgage money on these farms. I have three little farms on which I cannot pay the taxes. In 15 years, with 3 little farms, I have paid $1,300 in taxes, and I cannot sell the 3 farms today for $500 and get the money. It is impossible.

I know what the pending bill is going to mean. I have been in this business before, that is, on the losing end of it. There are some plantations down in my section of the country where live some poor colored fellows who cannot be used any more, and a few of the "poor white trash", as they are called. This is what the owners of those plantations are going to do: They want to sell out to the Government, and those who stand in and know how to manipulate, who always have and who always will manipulate, will take a poor colored man and a poor white man, and sell to him part of the plantation on which he is working. In fact, the bill is designedly drawn to accomplish that purpose. It says that if possible they will sell them lands now in cultivation. So they will call in poor old colored "Mose", or an old white man, "Jim" Smith, who is worn out and broken down, and has about 3 more years to live, and he will sign a 60-year mortgage and move on the farm, and that will be the last to be heard of him. The landowners will sell the land to the Government, the present tenants will be relieved of the pillage of landlordism, but their condition will be worse instead of better.

Gentlemen of the Senate, do you not know who will laugh you out of existence when you go back to the country? The farmers will do it. Many proceed on the theory that the farmer has very little sense. He has a great deal more sense than the composite intellect of the United States Senate when it comes to this kind of thing. [Laughter.] He has a great deal more knowledge of what this means.

If it were thought this was to do any good, would we be asked to appropriate a billion dollars? It is admitted that there are several millions of the kind of people who need to be taken care of, some four or five million, I believe it is said, or at least three million.

What do you mean when your tears are streaming because of the pity you have for the farmer? And I notice now some eyes wet with tears, the tears of those who voted against reducing the farm interest rate a few days ago. It is odd how those things work in reverse order, but they do. I can almost see the tears of the landlords down on Red River who fought my undertaking to educate their tenants how to read and write so that they could check them up at the plantation store at the end of the year. I can see tears in their eyes now as they weep over the condition of the tenants, and about their going to make a sale of some of their mortgaged lands, upon which they cannot make any profit in this day and time.

So we are going back to them with this balm. There is enough money, if the thesis of the proponents of this measure is correct, to take care of about 5 or 10 percent of the people affected, and they are going back to these men whom they have run off the farms, whom they have hired to discontinue planting, and are going to allow them to pay the landowner some Government money in order that the small men can begin a business that we hired them last year to stop.

The great mass of contradictory legislation of this kind which we are enacting is laughable, Mr. President. Day after day we are enacting legislation of this kind, which is not to be complimented by being termed "patchwork legislation", because it is not patchwork legislation. It is a system by which in one way we provide a means to destroy, and then turn another way and destroy what we have set up as a destroyer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it has been rather interesting to hear the diversity of views presented on this question by the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG]. The last speaker has asserted, as a ground of his opposition, that the landlord wants this bill in order to sell land to the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the clerk that the Senator from Alabama has consumed his time in speaking on the pending amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. As I understand the amendment, it requires that all officials employed under this organization who draw as much as $4,000 shall be confirmed by the Senate. Is that the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Alabama consents to the amendment, I shall not address myself to it. Do I understand that the Senator from Alabama consents that that amendment be inserted in the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am consenting, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have a vote upon the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the question of agreeing to the pending amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that order be revoked.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask to withdraw the request for the yeas and nays on the ground that the amendment has been accepted by the sponsor of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent is asked that the ordering of the yeas and nays on this question be revoked. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] on page 7, line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to call up the amendment which I presented several days ago, which is now lying on the table, and I ask that the clerk may state the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of subsection (3), page 8, it is proposed to add the following:

Provided further, That the Corporation shall have power under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the Corporation and the Secretary of the Interior to finance in the same manner the establishment of individual farms and homes upon the public domain or upon lands within any reclamation project.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I move a reconsideration of the vote had upon yesterday by which the Senate amended subsection (b) of section 7, on page 12, by striking out certain words in line 2, and in other respects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment in question was agreed to?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the purpose, may I ask the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STEIWER. Merely to gain from the Senate an expression on the question whether the lands held by the Corporation shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood that was voted on yesterday.

Mr. STEIWER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] was adopted without roll call.

Mr. STEIWER. On page 6 there was a provision in the bill which expressly exempted the lands from taxation. That language was stricken upon the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. As the bill now stands, the land which is sold under executory contract of sale is subject to taxation, but the land held by the Corporation is still exempt from taxation even though the express exemption has been removed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator desires that language to conform to the other amendment?

Mr. STEIWER. No, Mr. President; it is my desire to obtain, if possible, a reconsideration of the vote which has already been had, so the Senate may consider whether the land held by the Corporation shall be subject to taxation or be tax-exempt.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand, the Senator's purpose is to make this section conform with the Byrd amendment to the other section?

Mr. STEIWER. My purpose would be, if the Senate determines upon reconsideration, to leave subsection (b) just as it is, because as it is now written all land would be subject to taxation, whether it be held by the Corporation, whether it be under executory contract, or whether the title be vested in the purchaser from the Corporation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that, in view of the other amendment, I have no objection to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I wonder if I have a correct understanding of what the Senator undertakes to do. He wants to make the land which is purchased by this Corporation for the Government subject to taxation?

Mr. STEIWER. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator why any land purchased and owned by the Government, not sold, should be different from any other land owned by the United States?

Mr. STEIWER. The answer, Mr. President, is that there are no restrictions in this measure upon the holding of title to land by the Corporation. It was suggested yesterday by the Senator from Alabama, and with that suggestion I am in accord, that the Corporation might hold bodies of land for a considerable period of time. The holding of that land off the tax roll under those circumstances may do irreparable damage to small taxing units. I do not know that it would hurt the States particularly, because in each of the several States the amount of land acquired and held by the Corporation probably would be relatively small; but when the question is regarded with respect to conditions in counties it may be easily seen that one-third, or even one-half, of a county might be taken and thus held. And when it is regarded in connection with school districts and other local districts it may be seen that the Government might acquire two-thirds of the area of a local district, or possibly more than that, and by making that land tax-exempt completely destroy the subordinate taxing agency.

We have had in my own State a recent example. The Biological Survey acquired land for a bird refuge, a project in which I am much interested, which I think in the long run will be very advantageous. For that purpose they acquired some 64,000 acres. In some school districts they acquired only 10 percent of the area; in others 20 percent. In one school district they acquired 50 percent, and as I remember the figures, in one school district 80 percent of the entire taxable area was acquired by the Government and removed from the tax roll.

These subordinate taxing agencies have bonds outstanding and have certain commitments and debts to meet, and unless the Government puts itself in the place of the taxpayer from whom it acquired the land and continues its obligation of paying taxes upon the land, these districts are utterly destroyed. I can conceive that an agency implemented with a billion dollars, without any limitation concerning the amount to be spent in each of the several States of the country, may elect in its wisdom to set up a great homestead area here, and over there another area, and because it prefers one location to another, may not have one little tract of land in a certain township and another in the next township, but will have consolidated tracts in various parts of the country. It seems to me if we permit the Corporation without constraint to perform an operation of that kind and remove the land from the tax roll we will do more to destroy the subordinate taxing agencies and bring more ill to the people than can possibly be offset by the good done even under the exalted, high purposes of this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The situation which the Senator is picturing came to pass in my own county of Harford, in Maryland. There the Federal Government came in and took one-fifth of the entire county in order to establish a proving ground. The people who lived in the area taken by the proving ground were indigenous to that county, and they moved into other sections of the county; so, while our revenues were cut one-fifth, we still had the same population. The result was that we had to go out in the open market and borrow money, hundreds of thousands of dollars, in order to provide extra school facilities so as to take care of the children who had formerly gone to school on what is now the Aberdeen Proving Ground, and for about 6 or 8 years our tax rate had to be high because of this situation. I think the point made by the Senator is a timely one, because the case cited by me is an actual illustration of the application of the principle he has been elucidating.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator. This much might be said in addition: It is not in its sovereign capacity that the Government is to take this land, as is the case in acquiring land for a military reservation or a post-office building or a building for the accommodation of the courts; it is in a sort of proprietary capacity that the Government, through its corporation, is to enter into this landlord business; and I think that the payment of taxes will afford an inducement to the corporation to make haste in disposing of the land and in placing it into the hands of those for whom it is ultimately intended.

The Senator from Alabama has very generously said that he has no objection to a reconsideration of the amendment. I hope the Senate may reconsider it, so that the Senate may consider the amendment upon its merits and determine whether land held by the Corporation shall be exempt from taxation by the States and the local taxing agencies.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, regardless of what the Senator from Alabama has said, I want to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Nebraska that I objected to the amendment which was adopted and did not agree to it. I was outvoted, that is all; I never consented to it.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Alabama, I think, is talking about one amendment and the Senator from Oregon is talking about a different one.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have the same effect.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in accord with the proposition that when the lands to be acquired by the Corporation are sold they ought to be taxable and that the purchasers of the land ought to pay taxes, just as the owners of any other land ought to pay taxes, but why do the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Maryland get excited about the Government taking over some land for a bird refuge and yet make no attempt to change the conditions there?

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. I have pending in the Senate a bill by which the Department of Agriculture will be authorized to pay to the counties in Oregon which are involved a sum in lieu of taxation.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. So, have I, may I say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. STEIWER. May I make one further statement?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] have pending a general bill which, I believe, would have application to the entire United States, but which would not apply to lands heretofore acquired; it would apply only to lands hereafter acquired. However, I do not know whether that bill will be enacted, and it occurred to me, therefore, that we ought to protect ourselves in this bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator that the injustices——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, we are laboring under a 10-minute limitation, are we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator asked me a question and I want to say that proposed legislation was introduced in the Congress and was passed by the other House to cure, at least in some degree, the injustices of the situation to which I have referred.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us cure such injustices as may exist, but why do Senators call to the attention of the Senate that where we have taken land for a bird refuge the land becomes nontaxable and then say that the sportsmen who use the bird refuge for hunting grounds and for recreation purposes should not be required to pay something for it and let it escape taxation; but when it comes to buying land which is going to be sold to the tenant farmer in order that he may make a home, it ought to be taxed while the Government owns it? We do not do that in the case of public lands. If we are going to tax the lands to be purchased by the Corporation before the lands are sold to the farmer, then we are going to put upon the farmer who buys the land the burden of every cent of that taxation. The result will be that the lands will have to be sold to the farmers for that much more money, and our object to provide homes and put farmers on the land is, to a great extent, going to be nullified.

I do not believe that the proposed Corporation will buy land which will take in whole counties, as is the case, perhaps, in connection with bird refuges; there is not going to be a case that will be parallel to the one the Senator from Oregon has mentioned if this bill shall pass.

If there should arise cases of injustice, then, instead of compelling the burden to be borne by the farmer to whom the land is sold or is going to be sold in the effort to relieve tenancy and increase individually owned farms, let us meet the situation in some other way, as the Senator has attempted to do in the case where sportsmen and those seeking recreation are relieved of taxation because the Government, forsooth, has bought the land and used it for a bird refuge.

It seems to me that when the Government buys land for the purpose contemplated by this bill such land is in a parallel situation with other Government-owned land. The Government will own it, although it will be in the name of the Corporation, and unless they sell it immediately—and they cannot always do that; there will be instances where they cannot do so—they will simply add to the price the farmer has to pay for it.

I think there is a vast difference between taxing the land proposed to be bought when the Government owns it and taxing it after the Government has sold it, in which case I think the purchaser of the land ought to pay taxes just as every other citizen must pay taxes on his land.

The same situation arises in connection with Indian land. In my State, where Indian land is not taxed, in some cases hardship has resulted to school districts and counties because of such lands being relieved of taxation, and there ought to be some way to assist them in securing revenue which they have lost by reason of a large part of the land in a given community being owned by the Indians. But no one has suggested as yet, so far as I know, during all the time we have had a controversy over this subject that the Indians should pay taxes, and there is not any law which compels them to do so.

It seems to me we are proposing to treat differently than we treat others the farmers whom we are going to put on farms and enable to own their own homes; we are proposing to burden them with a responsibility for taxation which we do not impose in any other case. It does not seem to me to be just. It seems to me if there should occur hardships some other means should be resorted to than taxing the land while the Government owns it.

The Senator from Oregon does not attempt to tax the land in a bird refuge owned by the Government; he is going to relieve the situation in a different way. If he were attempting to do in that case what he is attempting to do in this, he ought to say to the Government of the United States, "You must pay taxes on all these bird refuges." The result would be that we would have none; and I predict that if we take such a step as is proposed in this attempt to relieve farm tenancy we are to a great extent going to nullify the beneficial effects that otherwise might result from this proposed law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am in very full accord with what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said. With the small attendance present yesterday, without a roll call, an amendment was adopted which struck out the provision exempting from taxation "the Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves and surplus, its loans and income." I do not recall who offered that amendment, but it was adopted. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that the provision providing the exemption, which has been entirely eliminated, is found at the top of page 6. That is the reason I asked the Senator from Oregon if he was intending by his motion to reconcile his amendment with that action.

I am sure the Senator from Oregon misinterpreted what I said about the amount of land to be held by the Corporation or else I certainly did not clearly express myself. I think if he will examine the RECORD, he will find that he has misinterpreted me. I have never thought the Corporation would hold much land, though I have indicated that at times it will have some farms as a result of foreclosures.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. To be consistent, if we are going to tax land which the Government owns, why not tax also the mortgages the purchasers give to the Government when they buy the land?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what may be done under the bill as it now stands, against my objection, of course. However, I know the Senator from Oregon is fair-minded and has no thought of misinterpreting what I said. I never have believed, and I am sure I have never expressed the thought at any time, that the Corporation would hold any large bodies of land. I have thought that they would not buy land until a purchaser was ready to take the land.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to make an inquiry. Under the bill, lands may be sold under contract as well as by deed, and the indebtedness may be secured by a mortgage. Therefore, it will be possible for the Corporation to sell land under a contract so that the title will not leave the Corporation for 60 years. The title would be in the Corporation during the period of 60 years, although the farmer would be on the land enjoying the product thereof. What would be the situation under this bill in that condition?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I know he has asked the question in good faith, but that is the very point the Senator from Oregon was trying to reopen. An amendment was adopted yesterday making the land in the hands of the purchaser subject to taxation whether or not the title had left the Corporation. That is the status of the bill as it now stands.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator think, if the purchaser of the land is using and enjoying it, that he ought to pay taxes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my opinion. I do not think he ought to have a special privilege as against other farmers, and under the bill, as it now stands, whenever a farmer has the land under a contract or deed or any other way, whether the title is in the Government or not, it is subject to taxation, just as any other farm land is taxed in the particular State and county.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask the Senator if the land owned by the Corporation in any one county were removed from taxation, would not that throw a larger burden of taxation upon the remaining farmers who owned land privately?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator recognizes that his question answers itself.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wanted to bring out that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have never had any thought that the Corporation would buy or hold any large tracts of land. It is very different from a forestry project and different from a reserve or park of any sort. My view is that where the Corporation and a farmer agree upon a project, the Corporation will buy the farm for the farmer and he will move onto it. Otherwise, the Corporation will not be engaged promiscuously in the purchase of tracts of land.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, if the Corporation did not hold much land, the amount might be infinitesimal, but I was assuming a situation whereby the Corporation might acquire a considerable portion of the land in any one county. We cannot deny the conclusion that to that extent the taxes formerly paid by that part of the land would be automatically redistributed on the remaining farmers in the county and would be a means of increasing their burden while we were helping other farmers as proposed by the measure.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The tax-exempt privilege is like the old-fashioned free pass on a railroad. In this world it is not possible to obtain something for nothing. Whenever a community or an individual receives something for nothing, another community or some other person pays twice. That is a law of physics. It is not a law of morals.

I wish to help to popularize the pending bill. I think it is admirable in its conception, but I hope the friends of the bill will not make it so insipid as to make it difficult for some of us to vote for it. I am opposed to any kind of tax exemption. Be it a small area or a large area, I think the land held by the Corporation should certainly be subject to taxation. Whether or not it would popularize the bill, it is right, fair, and just that the lands held by the Corporation should be taxed.

My able friend from Alabama is to be congratulated upon the good temper, logic, and ability with which he has conducted the course of the bill. He has a resource of intellect which makes him too wise a man, in dealing with human nature, to fail to realize that, just the hour the bill shall become a law, landholders all over the country, holding vast tracts of unprofitable land, will put intense pressure upon the Corporation to buy their land. "Take my land." Political pressure, legal pressure, economic and other pressure will be employed to induce the Corporation to buy such lands. The lands will be bought, and thereby exempted from taxation.

I do not speak for other States, but let me speak a moment for Arizona. Thirty thousand square miles of our area are embraced in Indian reservations; some other large areas, probably 15,000 square miles, are included in forest reservations, military reservations, and other reservations withdrawn from the people. A State cannot be sustained without land, water, and air. Take any one of the three away, and the State ceases to exist. A Senator this morning stated it might be that 50 percent of the land in a given locality might be withdrawn from the people. In one county in the State of Arizona 80 percent of the land area has been withdrawn from taxation, which, of course, quintuples the taxes on acreage held in private ownership.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought I was speaking in my own time. If I have the power or the right, I wish to yield to the Senator from Alabama such time as I have consumed of his. May I have that permission?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am so delighted always to hear my talented and able friend speak that I very cheerfully yielded my time to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement under which the Senate is working, the Senator from Arizona can only yield his time in that way by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona to be permitted to yield his time to the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not regret having yielded my time to the Senator from Arizona.

I do not apprehend that any large tracts of land will be acquired by the Corporation anywhere not consistent with the general program. I think an undue burden should not be placed upon the poor people who are buying the properties. If I thought there would be any considerable acreage taken in any county in the Union, I should cheerfully favor the right of taxation. This proposal, being confined to small areas here and there, is so essentially different from a park project or forestry project or other similar projects, that I think the two ideas should not be associated at all.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I inquire how much time have I?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 15 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. I shall take first my 10 minutes on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, reference has been made to land-settlement enterprises in the State of California. There seems to be an insinuation that those of us who are opposed to the bill are not friendly to the idea of the tenant farmer becoming the owner of a farm. Such is not the case. It is my judgment that the final report which I hold in my hand dated June 30, 1931, from the Division of Land Settlements of the Department of Agriculture of the State of California, is conclusive proof that those of us who oppose the bill are better friends of the man who hopes to own a farm in his own right than are those who are supporting the bill.

Land socialization of this kind simply does not work. It has not worked in other instances which are matters of history. It did not work in California. I am going to read to the Senate some extracts from the last report explaining why the State of California has gone out of the land-settlement business. The report was submitted by a committee of the legislature appointed for the purpose. The State had established two such colonies and had financed them, doing practically the same thing that is being contemplated by the legislation now before us which has a national viewpoint. I said the other day that if a State wanted to attempt such an enterprise I thought it was its privilege to do so; but I do not believe the Federal Government ought to embark upon such a project. As a taxpayer of the State of Iowa, I am glad that the people of that State were not guaranteeing the bonds which were issued by the State of California to carry on these enterprises. Therefore,

I do not believe the taxpayers of the State of Iowa ought to be required to endorse and guarantee the principal and the interest on bonds to be issued for enterprises carried on under the Federal Government.

The report is dated June 30, 1931. When I spoke the other day I did not have these data at hand. In fact, the report just came to my office this morning. It is signed by Charles W. Cleary, chief:

It is appropriate that the final report of State proprietorship in land settlement shall contain a brief history of the experiment from its inception, as well as a record of the means by which the State has extricated itself from the entanglements developed during the 13 years of operation and of how the State's obligations to those invited to invest as settlers have been met in response to the mandate of the legislature of 1929 to withdraw the State from land-settlement activity.

By act of the legislature of 1917 appropriating $260,000 for the purpose, the State embarked upon a demonstration in State land settlement or colonization. This act was sponsored by the Commonwealth Club of San Francisco; it was the result of extended consideration and had been the subject of investigation by a commission on land settlement and rural credits authorized by the legislature of 1915. The report of this commission was published in 1916 and was the basis for the legislative act of 1917, under which State land settlement has been administered.

Dr. Elwood Mead, now Commissioner, Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., chairman of this commission, widely known as "the father of land settlement in California", led all the activity in favor of the State engaging in such a demonstration project from the inception of consideration of the subject.

The first colony or settlement was established at Durham, Butte County, in 1918, and consisted of 6,239 acres of generally very good land under a gravity system of irrigation from Butte Creek, a stream which flowed through the tract. The State paid cash for about 2,400 acres of this land and purchased the remainder on contract with payments amortized over a period of 20 years in semiannual installments at 5-percent interest. A detailed soil survey was made by University of California experts. The tract was divided into approximately 110 farms varying in size from 8 to 300 acres and 30 lots of approximately 2 acres each, known as "farm laborer allotments."

The property cost the State an average of $80 per acre. General improvements by way of irrigation system, roads, etc., were made by the State—and certain lands were reserved for office and administration purposes and a tract of 22 acres, heavily wooded with oak trees, was set aside for a public park. The remainder was offered for sale to settlers on purchase contracts at prices ranging from $48 to $300 per acre, averaging $150, including water rights. Lands were priced according to values indicated by the soil survey and other apparent factors.

That is what is proposed by this bill—

Settlers were selected subjected to such requirements as to necessary financial resources, etc., as would be calculated to insure the success of the project. In fact, in the opinion of those in charge, every precaution was taken to guard against failure of individual settlers as well as of the project as a whole.

Right here I think it might be well to suggest that in the old homestead days, in some States, less than 3 percent of the settlers ever weathered the storm to a point where they got title to their land. In many other States only 10 percent did so. I know but very few States where more than 12 percent of the original settlers ever stayed on the land long enough to secure title and become permanent citizens.

Continuing to quote:

Loans were also made by the State on livestock and implements, payable in installments running over a period of 3 years at 5 percent.

This is a plan which is very similar to the one we have under consideration at this time.

Continuing to quote:

Some 1,500 acres of the land originally sold to settlers reverted to the State and were classified as unsuitable for intensive development, being heavy adobe soil. A portion of this was resold at a reduced price without water right for rice and grain culture.

So successful was the initial period of development of this colony and so eager were farmers and prospective farmers to avail themselves of the opportunity to obtain a farm or farm home on the liberal terms offered that available allotments soon were exhausted.

In 1919 the legislature appropriated $1,000,000 for a further extension of the land-settlement program and as a result of this act 8,400 acres were purchased at Delhi, Merced County, for which the State paid cash. An extensive irrigation system of underground concrete pipe was installed, taking water from the canals of the Turlock irrigation district, in which the colony lands were included, by means of pumps. An extensive road system was laid out and improved; and in progressive units, following a detailed soil survey by the University of California, experts similar to that made at Durham, the land was subdivided in acreages suitable for farming or farm homes and sold on the same terms as were Durham colony allotments, except the land payments were amortized over 36½ years instead of 20 years.

* * * * * * *

This 8,400-acre tract largely was very sandy soil of undulating topography and low agricultural value, requiring much leveling in preparation for cultivation, planting, and irrigation. The State paid an average of $96 per acre and after developing the irrigation system, the system of roads, making certain general improvements and reserving for administration and town-site purposes certain portions of the tract, the remainder was offered for settlement and a large portion of it sold to settlers at an average price of $229 per acre.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The time of the Senator from Iowa on the motion has expired.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will now take 15 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized on the bill.

Mr. DICKINSON (continuing to quote):

Settlers in Delhi, as in Durham, were asked to borrow from the Federal Land Bank, and $315,000 were obtained in this way. Through lack of funds and failure of the land to produce as expected—

Which is always one of the contingencies—coupled with the general agricultural depression, the situation at Delhi became critical by 1923 and the legislature of 1925, following a report and recommendations by a legislative committee composed of three senators and three assemblymen, passed legislation by virtue of which the selling price of the land to the settler at Delhi was reduced an average of $68 an acre, one-half by direct reduction in the price of the land and one-half in remission of interest.

* * * * * * *

The Delhi project, or colony, had a stormy history from its inception except during the very early period of development, when credit to the settlers was easy and plenty of money was available from a source other than the production of the land.

The legislative committee, above referred to, after an investigation of the history and condition of the colony, in their report to the legislature of 1925, said (Assembly Journal, 1925, p. 937):

"* * * The project as a whole has been, and now is, a financial failure. The settlers were led to expect too much; in several instances they were granted greater loans than the Land Settlement Act permitted.

"In a number of instances chattel mortgages were made by settlers to the board securing loans made by the board. Later the mortgaged chattels were sold by the mortgagors and the loans were not repaid to the board.

"Furthermore, in addition to the general expectation that more help would be given than is economically sound, or larger loans made than were financially or legally proper, many of the settlers came to the colony with the distinct belief that the State would act as a sort of guardian angel or Santa Claus and 'see them through', as they expressed it.

"The final consideration of this problem has led your committee to recommend that the State of California should never enter into another land-settlement scheme. * * *"

The land-settlement work of the State originally was administered by a land-settlement board of five members.

* * * * * * *

From the creation of the first land-settlement board in 1917, throughout the establishment of the colonies at Durham and Delhi and until March 1923, the entire project of land settlement was under the general supervision of Dr. Elwood Mead as the administrative head.

* * * * * * *

When taken over on July 29, 1927, by the Department of Agriculture, the responsibility amounted to a virtual receivership, involving 14,600 acres of land, 380 settlers and their families, and an investment of some $2,700,000 on the part of the State. The Delhi settlement was operating under an increasing deficit, even under the revised program instituted in 1925, when a large amount was written off by the State as a loss to give the settlers and the settlement a new start. The Durham settlement, while in much better shape, was faced with a rapidly diminishing book reserve, and assets at both colonies were carried at excessive valuations.

The condition of the Delhi Settlement seemed little, if any, more hopeful in August 1927, under the adjustment of 1925, than it was reported to have been in July 1923, in the following language taken from a report of Chairman C. M. Wooster to Governor Friend W. Richardson under date of December 31, 1925:

"In July 1923 the Delhi Settlement reached a state of desperation. Income from the farms would not supply the necessities of life, and besides there were taxes, water charges, and interest on Federal bank loans. Resources of the settlers were exhausted. No installment payments had been made on 95 percent of the purchase agreements and they had been forfeitable for more than 3 years. The settlement, being remote from industrial activities, no outside work was obtainable, and, with buildings, had cost the settlers $400 an acre. Necessary improvement in the way of fruit, vines, dairy and poultry equipment has increased and will continue to increase the price beyond the probability of adequate return. Such consideration, coupled with the past 3 years of pioneering work devoted to the conversion of the undulating sand plane into plantations of alfalfa, fruit, and vine farms, had exhausted both the physical and financial resources of the settlers.

"The Cooperative Association had ceased to function. Loans had been promised to many settlers after available funds had been exhausted. Loans aggregating a large sum had been made whereof there was no hope of repayment. Established rules governing security had been ignored, and overcredit had met with the natural result. The colony had drifted into a state of moroseness and despair. Forty-nine allotments had been abandoned. The homes of 700 citizens, built under the auspices of the State, were threatened. A proposition which involved the State in a humane problem, demanding prompt and effective action, was thus presented."

* * * * * * *

Investigation indicated the imperative necessity for the State to retire from land-settlement activity as proprietor, in the interest both of the settlers and the State, at the earliest possible time consistent with the obligations incurred by the State in the promotion of the colonies and with the conditions obtaining.

Demands by settlers, under the leadership of a settlers' committee in each colony, and by individual settlers for a readjustment of their obligations to the State were insistent and charges of fraud and misrepresentation in the promotion of the colonies were being frequently made.

Various plans of readjustment at Durham were proposed, and for a while litigation was held in abeyance pending the working out of a plan tentatively approved by the settlers' committee and by State officials in June 1928. Insurmountable difficulties developed, however, and the plan had to be abandoned. It became evident that legislation would be necessary before any general adjustment could be made.

The suits of the three settlers previously referred to were brought to trial early in 1929 and two of them obtained judgments totaling $17,000 against the State through jury trials in the Butte County Superior Court. The third, who charged failure to make proper credits on contract, lost his case, which was not tried before a jury. Cases in which judgments were obtained against the State were appealed to the third district court of appeal.

Legislation was drafted under the direction of the chief of the division of land settlement for presentation to the 1929 legislature to provide the legal foundation for the State's retirement as a colonization agent from land-settlement activity. This legislation, upon enactment, became chapter 352, Statutes 1929, and encompassed sections 361e to 361i of the Political Code. By this act the director of public works was substituted for the State engineer as a member of the board, and the director of finance instead of the director of agriculture was designated chairman. By the provisions of this act the director of agriculture was directed to prepare plans for readjustment of land-settlement affairs on a basis providing for withdrawal of the State as proprietor on or before 4 months after adjournment of the legislature of 1931 and to present such plans to the State land settlement board for approval on or before January 1, 1930.

Before this legislation could become effective complications, already very serious, had developed and increased. Many months were consumed in an earnest endeavor to develop satisfactory plans of adjustment. Settlers largely assumed the attitude that in everything the State did it was trying to defraud them, thus making progress toward a definite plan of adjustment very difficult.

Early in 1929 an appraisal of all properties was made in both colonies by qualified disinterested appraisers. At Delhi this appraisal showed a total valuation of $788,000 on the sold properties, having a book value of approximately $1,800,000, and on which settlers were owing the State $1,307,000. Representatives of the department of finance, the department of public works, and the department of agriculture worked continually with a Delhi settlers' committee of three and, prior to adjournment of the 1929 legislature, an agreement was reached by which a total valuation of $750,000 was assumed on the sold property, to be divided equally between the 232 settlers as a group and the State—a settlers' organization to take over the irrigation system in its existing condition, which was recognized to be not up to par. This meant a reduction in settlers' secured obligations from $1,307,000 to $375,000.

Turning to the conclusion, I find in it this language:

The purpose of this report is to furnish without too much detail an accurate and unbiased record of the California experience in State-controlled land colonization.

It seems clear that the purpose involved in the inception of State land settlement was at least fourfold: (1) To prevent the exploitation of prospective colonists by private colonization agencies; (2) to more quickly colonize the available lands of the State with a select class of settlers and thus to materially aid newly organized irrigation projects as well as to add to the prosperity of the State as a whole; (3) to demonstrate the effectiveness and desirability of State-controlled, planned-in-advance settlements with trained experts to advise and direct the developments and operations of settlers; with best community cooperative practices insured, and with the services of the State university easily and especially available as opposed to the customary hit-and-miss methods of private colonization agencies; (4) to demonstrate the importance of very long-term loans at low interest rate, with small initial outlay, to the ultimate success of colonization.

No question is raised as to the sincerity of purpose and honesty of action of any individual involved in advocacy or administration of State land settlement in California. It is conceded that could the theories of its leading advocates have been proven correct and satisfactory in practice, an unusually important public purpose would have been served. After some 13 years of costly demonstration, we are forced to conclude, however, that the theory of State-controlled land colonization will not work out well in practice. There seems sufficient basis for the conclusion that it was given a fair trial.

Mr. President, how much time have I remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). The Senator has 6 minutes more.

Mr. DICKINSON. In answer to some of the contentions made, I shall quote further from the conclusion:

The Durham colony particularly has afforded a fair demonstration in attempted socialization of agricultural activity and the results have been anything but satisfactory. As a prerequisite to success individual effort and initiative seem to be indispensable. The land-settlement venture has apparently well demonstrated that anything that offers a substitute for or that tends to weaken individual effort and initiative to that extent promotes failure in individual enterprise and dissatisfaction in community activity. The conclusion is unavoidable that few human beings are fashioned from sufficiently rugged fiber to withstand the weakening influences of paternalism; that few can resist the temptation to lean too heavily on a paternal government where the opportunity offers.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senator found anything in this impartial report which tends to show that there was some defect in some particular characteristic of the plan which caused its failure, or that there was any other cause for its failure than the essential defect to which the Senator has just referred?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is simply the human equation, that under this type of a program men cannot be made to work out their salvation. In other words, the land produced about what they expected it would, the cost was what they knew it would be, the State extended the time of their payments, yet they were unable to make the required payments, and, therefore, the project failed simply because of the human equation and the inability to work out the program.

Let me make a suggestion. Suppose in the case of a tract of land we lend a man $5,000, which is the full value of the farm, and expect him to pay interest on it. He is not in a position to own a piece of land, because in order to own a piece of land, there must not be any debt for the full amount of the purchase price. That is true practically of any business in which a man may engage. Anyone who expects to go into business and borrow the full amount of his capital investment usually fails before he even gets a good start.

I continue to quote:

Strong personalities were manifestly weakened by the years under State land-settlement operation. Each colony presented a fair cross section of humanity as you would find it in most rural communities except that the method of selection, with the particular provisions that citizens only were eligible did produce a community of more than average high type, but this was somewhat offset by the special appeal of easy terms and paternalism to the ne'er-do-well type. The percentage of that type accepted, however, was slight.

Mr. President, I ask leave to insert here an editorial by Senator C. H. Deuel, editor of the Chico Record, who was a member of one of these committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ideal in theory, the plan failed in California, and probably elsewhere, just because it was ideal and not practical. It took no account of the paternalistic influences naturally following assumption by the State of direction of personal and financial affairs of family groups. It was conceived in the fat times of agriculture and made no provision for the lean years following the war. It assumed that the State as an impersonal agent could not err in values, in rules and regulations, nor that the "experts" of the State could prove fallible. It attempted to order the lives of a large group of families under a set of blanket rules. It set up a fiscal plan of redemption and interest charges which proved crushing and unsound. And finally it accepted in a number of instances excellent families of the highest reputation and with the most laudable ambitions, yet who were unused and unadapted to the soil and who could not succeed there.

It is better, in fact it was necessary, that the State and the settlers be separated. The losses suffered are unfortunate but mutual. It is comparatively easy to figure the loss to the State in dollars and cents; it is impossible to figure the losses that most of the settlers suffered directly in money and indirectly in years of toil and defeated hopes.

But out of it all is a lesson learned for the State; and at Durham establishment of a neighborhood of families on good land, in pleasant surroundings, wholly upon their own, their complex relations wiped out, the future ahead of them, with a certainty of success based upon a type of manhood and womanhood that does not fail when given an even and an independent chance.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I quote further from the report:

It cannot be gainsaid that there was a serious land colonization problem facing the State at the time the State land settlements were started, and that there is still a definite service to be performed by the State government along colonization lines, but that service apparently can best be carried out through rigid State regulation of those private agencies seeking to colonize the lands of the State for profit, as the demand for settlement develops and conditions affecting agricultural activity warrant.

If because of the lessons learned in State land settlement the citizens of California are led to scrutinize more carefully in the future idealistic theories proposed before adopting them as functions of government, the expense involved in the land settlement venture will have proven a good investment.

Mr. President, I think this is probably the best evidence that can be produced that those who are opposing the pending bill are the real friends of the tenant farmer. As a matter of fact, it is my understanding that the State of North Carolina, through legislative action, sent a committee to California to investigate the operations to which I have referred; that the committee visited California, and, after a very thorough investigation of the entire project, made a report advising the State of North Carolina not to undertake a similar enterprise.

Land ownership is something which should only be acquired and can only be acquired after careful, detailed planning. I think I know something about how men acquire title to farms in the Mississippi Valley. Usually they are tenants for a number of years. After they have saved up some money, acquired some livestock and machinery, they are usually able to make a down payment on a piece of land, and buy it on terms acceptable to them, and, therefore, are able to work out the final purchase of the land.

The greatest difficulty we meet is that too many tenants have been permitted to buy land and pay down their cash, and have borrowed too much against the land and are not able to meet the payments of interest and taxes, and are compelled to forfeit. I am fearful that that is the very thing that will happen under the proposed legislation.

I do not believe that the Federal Government ought to go into this endeavor. I believe it is an effort on the part of those who want to buy land and enter into projects of this kind to have the taxpayers in every State of the Union endorse their promissory notes in their effort to work out a program of this kind.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will fail.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, it seems to me that the illustration of which the Senator from Iowa has spoken, of land purchased in California by the State, is rather an unfair example, as will be recognized by anyone who knows the conditions of agriculture beginning in 1921, when deflation was brought on by the Federal Reserve Board, which might be termed a quasi-governmental board. The land was purchased, as I understand the report, between 1918 and 1920.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. This land was purchased in 1917, one of the most prosperous years we experienced.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; it was purchased in the prosperous years, when times were good, when prices of land were high, but beginning in 1921, when deflation started, the prices of land went down, the prices of farm products went down, and no one could sell products at the low prices brought on after 1921, and pay off on the high-priced farms.

In the great State of Iowa, of which the Senator boasts as being the best agricultural State in the Union, where they diversify more than do the farmers in any other State, there were literally hundreds of thousands of farmers who went broke because of the high prices of land during the period of which the Senator speaks, when the California land was bought, and then, because the prices of farm products went down so low, the farmers could not pay the interest on the loans.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. The distress among the owners of farm lands in Iowa was later than the period to which the Senator has reference. In fact, even according to the Democratic philosophy, 1926 is presumed to be what is called the "parity" year, and Democrats are all trying to get back to the standards of 1926. The foreclosures in Iowa did not start until a date later than that. There were some bank failures in 1924.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; and there were many farm failures before 1924.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish further to suggest that it is true that there was overspeculation in land. Men bought land at too high a price, and again I assert that anyone who tries to borrow all the money he wishes to put into a piece of land and pay interest on it, or all the money he wishes to put into any business enterprise and pay interest on it, is not, as a general rule, going to succeed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Not only were the prices of land too high, perhaps, but the prices of farm products were too low, after deflation started in 1921. The situation was the same in every agricultural State of the Union, whether California or Iowa or any other State.

When the era of low prices began, when the prices of farm products went down after deflation started, the farmers began to go broke all over the Nation; it did not make any difference whether the State was back of them or the Government was back of them, or who was back of them. The United States Congress sat here and let deflation, brought on by the Federal Reserve Board, go into effect, and did nothing to raise or maintain the prices of farm products and give the farmers a chance to pay out.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the farm credit organization of the State of South Dakota, in its loan endeavor, loaned money on land, and that State, according to the latest figures I have seen, had something like 22,500,000 acres of land, and I believe the same condition existed in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the same thing applies there exactly. They started the agricultural credit organization in good times, and when deflation was brought on, again by the governmental organization, and was allowed to proceed without any protest apparently, or any effective protest, by the United States Congress, the rural credit association of South Dakota lost much money. We lost a small amount in North Dakota, but not so much. The deflation was brought on; prices went down; and no farmer could make any money selling farm products during those years. That was the situation.

If we are to continue to compel the farmers to sell their products at prices below the cost of production for all time to come, there is no use in their trying to buy land. I will agree that the tenants are much better off than they would be as owners of land if present prices are to continue. If any Senator wants the present situation to continue, to have the land owned by big landlords, and have a feudal system, then, of course, it is all right to vote against a bill of this kind; but if they want the people who actually work the farms to own their lands, then some measure of this kind should be adopted.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. DICKINSON. Does the Senator desire to write into this bill any guaranty that farm prices shall be continued or raised to a higher level?

Mr. FRAZIER. There are bills pending in both the House and the Senate to regulate the prices of farm products on the basis of cost of production and a reasonable profit; and there is no reason on earth why a measure of that kind should not be passed by the Senate. If those who legislate would think as much of the people of this country who work to feed the Nation as they do of the bankers and the railroads, they would provide that the men who raises the food to feed the Nation should receive for his labor the cost of production and a fair profit. That is the only way in which the American farmer will ever succeed. So long as he is forced to sell his products below cost of production, as he has been doing, there is no chance for him to pay for his land, regardless of what the cost may be. Even if the Government gives him the land under the old homestead act, he cannot pay for it unless he gets cost of production, and everyone knows it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for a statement of the question pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is agreed to. The question now before the Senate is on the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the question before the Senate, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there was a motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. That has not been voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion was put.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the motion be again put. The Senate did not understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	King	Robinson
Ashurst	Costigan	La Follette	Russell
Austin	Couzens	Lewis	Schall
Bachman	Cutting	Logan	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Dickinson	Lonergan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dieterich	Long	Shipstead
Barkley	Donahey	McGill	Smith
Bilbo	Duffy	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Fletcher	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Frazier	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gerry	Moore	Trammell
Burke	Gibson	Murphy	Truman
Byrd	Glass	Murray	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Capper	Guffey	Norris	Wagner
Caraway	Hale	Nye	Walsh
Carey	Hastings	O'Mahoney	Wheeler
Clark	Hayden	Pittman	White
Connally	Johnson	Pope
Coolidge	Keyes	Radcliffe

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], caused by illness.

I also announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are necessarily detained from the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment on page 12.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which it is proposed shall be reconsidered be stated by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 12, it is proposed to reconsider the amendment in line 2 which struck out the words "acquired and held by the Corporation, or", and inserted in line 3, after the word "Corporation", the words "notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senate understands the effect of this amendment. It is not readily comprehended by a mere statement of the amendment. I wish to examine the amendment.

As I understand, the amendment which was incorporated in line 3 would make paragraph (b) read as follows:

> Nothing in this act shall be construed to exempt any real property held by any purchasers from the Corporation, notwithstanding the legal title remains in the Corporation, from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed.

I ask the Senator from Oregon if that is a correct statement of the language.

Mr. STEIWER. That is correct, Mr. President. I may say further, since the Senator has inquired, that on page 6207 of the RECORD of yesterday the amendment which I seek to reconsider is set forth in the RECORD. It is also there stated that the Senator from Alabama offered it as a clarifying amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I confess I do not yet understand the effect of the amendment. As the matter now stands, so long as the title to the land is in the Corporation, it is exempt from taxation?

Mr. STEIWER. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. And if this amendment is reconsidered, and the language then goes back as it was before the amendment was adopted, the land would be taxed while the title was in the Corporation?

Mr. STEIWER. If the amendment should be reconsidered, I suppose it would be offered over again. The question could then be determined by the Senate on its merits.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to ascertain if I understand accurately the effect of this amendment.

As I understand the bill as it is now before us which provides, of course, for the purchase of large areas, it exempts the land so purchased, though it may be acquired by individuals under the terms of the bill, from municipal, State, or county taxation, or, for that matter, taxation by any political subdivision. The Senator stated this morning as I recall, that large areas of land were being acquired by the Federal Government—indeed, in some counties the greater part of the area has been acquired by the United States—and the title is in the United States, and, of course, it is free from taxation.

Take the case of many of the Indian lands: They are free from taxation, though such lands are occupied in many instances by white tenants, and constitute the larger percentage of the value of the real estate within the county. The motion to reconsider would give us the chance to determine whether or not we wish the lands purchased by individuals out of the $1,000,000,000 fund to be free from taxation, thus increasing the burden of taxation upon the owners of lands who may not acquire their lands under the provisions of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. STEIWER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORE. On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. If he were present, he would vote "nay", and if permitted to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. Knowing that he would vote as I intend to vote, I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (after having voted in the affirmative). I note the absence of my pair, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] are necessarily detained from the Senate on official business.

I also announce a special pair between the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. If the Senator from Maryland were present, he would vote "yea", and the Senator from North Carolina, if present, would vote "nay."

I further announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—44

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is there a motion pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending. The amendment, the vote on agreeing to which was just reconsidered, is pending before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion which will enable those of us who desire to help work out some features of the pending bill which seem to us now to be inadequate, and which at the same time will not jeopardize the life of the measure. I, therefore, move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with instructions that it be reported back to the Senate not later than the 12th day of May. On that motion, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that a motion to recommit has heretofore been made and passed upon by the Senate; in fact, a motion to recommit without instructions was first made, which motion was rejected by the Senate, and subsequently a motion to recommit with instructions to report before the end of the present session was made, and that motion also was rejected by the Senate.

Now the Senator from Idaho moves to recommit the bill with other instructions. I do not think it is competent under the rules and practice of the Senate to consider an indefinite number of motions to recommit with instructions.

I am well aware as to what happened yesterday having relationship to this subject, but I do not think that the Senate should commit itself to the doctrine that, under the rules of the Senate, practically an unlimited number of motions to recommit may be made on the same bill. I will not repeat the argument which I made yesterday on the subject.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I discussed somewhat at length yesterday a parliamentary question similar to that which is now presented. I specified the reasons for my position at that time, and the then occupant of the chair, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], sustained the view taken by me and others.

A motion had been made a few days ago to recommit this proposal to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which failed. Yesterday another motion to recommit was made. I presented the argument, Mr. President, that it is a fundamental of parliamentary law, if a change has been made in the subject matter in any way by the adoption of amendments, the measure itself presents a different aspect, and a motion to recommit will lie, or, if in any way the motion to recommit involves different specifications, such as that the bill affected shall be reported back to the Senate on a date certain, that in itself is such an alteration that the motion may be made at any time and from time to time. The occupant of the chair yesterday decided that the motion to recommit was in order.

Today the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] submits a motion to recommit different in substance and different in fact from that proposed yesterday by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. The time set within which to report the bill back is different; a specific date is provided, which changes the nature and somewhat modifies the motion previously made.

In any event, Mr. President, I recall a precedent which I found later in the day. In 1930, when the immigration bill was under consideration, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] moved to recommit it on one day; the following day the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] made a similar motion, which was adopted. At that time the question now before us was not raised as to the propriety of a motion made under these circumstances; but at this particular time three motions to recommit have been made, and each having varied from the other in general garb, nature, and appearance. I submit that the motion now made is in order.

With that simple statement, Mr. President, I am satisfied, in view of the general rule of parliamentary law and the practice of the Senate, and the decision of the occupant of the chair yesterday, that the Vice President will be justified in sustaining the contention that the motion of the Senator from Idaho is in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I say just a word in reply to what the Senator from Oregon has said? The Senator stated that if the Senate should make any change in a bill after a motion to recommit has been considered, another motion to recommit may properly be made notwithstanding the point of order is urged against it. That means that if 100 amendments or 500 amendments, as is the case with some bills which are considered by the Senate, should be offered and adopted, after each amendment had been disposed of, if it changed the bill, a motion to recommit could be made.

It is my theory that a motion to recommit, either with or without instructions, may be made at any time, but one motion having been made and having been disposed of, Senators are precluded from making additional motions to recommit. Otherwise there would never be an end to the procedure on the subject.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the argument of the able Senator from Arkansas is sound, it seems to me it would preclude, by the same logic, the offering of a multitude of amendments, and yet one would be a bold man to say that we are to interdict amendments, though there may be thousands which may be submitted to measures under consideration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot understand, if the Senator will permit me in his time, why the Senator should say that the rule which I invoked would limit the number of amendments which might be offered. My position has nothing whatever to do with the subject of amendments, except that I do not think the mere adoption of an amendment to a bill warrants a motion to recommit after the Senate has already voted on a motion to recommit. I am sure the Senate, if it sustains such a practice, would find itself in the position that it would never be possible to bring a bill to a vote without cloture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator obviously did not understand the implications logically to be derived from the statement which I made. I stated that, according to my conception of logic, if the rule which the Senator invokes is to obtain, namely, that a multitude of motions to recommit ought to be prevented, then, by the same rule, by the same process of reasoning, and by the same logic, we ought to prevent a multitude of amendments being offered, particularly if they are somewhat similar in character.

The rule which prevails in the House of Representatives does not prevail here. Under the rule which was cited by the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who occupied the chair yesterday at the time the question was before the Senate, it is obvious that at any time before the final vote upon the bill a motion to recommit may be made.

Suppose, as an illustration, after a number of motions to recommit have been submitted, additional information comes to the Senate or some very important amendments have been adopted which change very much the quality of the bill, the spirit of the bill, the purpose of the bill; shall it be said that a motion to recommit may not be made because, forsooth, prior to that time one or two or a number of motions to recommit had been submitted?

If the rule which obtains in the Senate needs rectification, let us rectify it; but under the rule of the Senate and under the practice of the Senate, I respectfully submit the motion to recommit is entirely proper.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, as I said yesterday when I was temporarily in the chair and the same question was presented, I entirely agree with the position of the able and distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as to what the rule ought to be with regard to motions to recommit. But I submit there is not to be found, either in the rules or the precedents and practices of the Senate, or in general parliamentary law, anything to sustain the position now taken by the Senator from Arkansas.

As a matter of fact, in the illustration used by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday—namely, the rule of the House of Representatives, which is a specific rule—there is nothing whatever to sustain the position which he now takes. Under the rule of the House of Representatives there is nothing whatever to prevent an indefinite number of motions to recommit before the previous question is ordered, which is a practice permitted by the rules of the House and authorized by the rules of the House, but not by the rules of this body. The purpose of the insertion in the rules of the House of the provision that there shall be but one motion to recommit after the previous question is ordered is to prevent a majority, by the adoption of the previous question rule, from shutting off amendments and preventing a record vote if desired by the minority.

That situation does not exist under the rules of the Senate. Rule XV specifically provides that a motion to recommit shall be in order at any time before the final passage of the bill.

It is objected by the Senator from Arkansas that to permit an indefinite number of motions to recommit opens the door to filibuster. That is quite true. But the rules of the Senate as they exist at the present time are particularly designed to facilitate filibuster. There can be no question about that.

As to the objection of the Senator from Arkansas, made yesterday, that a motion to recommit with instructions might be voted down, another motion varying the instructions in a very minor degree might be offered and voted down, and still another motion to recommit varying the instructions further in a small degree might be voted down, and so on ad infinitum, the exact situation under the present rules of the Senate exists as to amendments. It would be possible to move to strike out the sum of $1,000,000,000, as was done, and insert $9,995,000,000. If that should be voted down, it could then be moved to strike out $1,000,000,000 and insert $994,000,000, or even changing the amount in some smaller degree.

I submit the remedy of the Senate is not to construe the rules of the Senate as they ought to be, but to change the rule of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair agrees fully with the last statement of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that there is nothing in the rules of the Senate, which the Chair has been able to find, which tends to restrict the freedom of the Senate, regardless of what it may be desired to do.

Rule XV of the Senate rules reads as follows:

> When a bill or resolution shall have been ordered to be read a third time, it shall not be in order to propose amendments, unless by unanimous consent, but it shall be in order at any time before the passage of any bill or resolution to move its commitment.

That does not say one motion to recommit, as is provided by the House of Representatives in its rule.

The Chair thinks the reasoning of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] yesterday, as the Chair has examined the matter within the last hour, was sound reasoning. The Senator from Missouri, as we all know, is one of the best parliamentarians not only in the Senate but, as the Chair believes, in the country, having had 6 years' experience in the House of Representatives as its Parliamentarian.

The remedy is for the Senate Committee on Rules to take cognizance of some of the situations which have developed on the floor of the Senate and undertake to remedy them. A change of one word in rule XV would remedy the situation; that is, by having it provide that there shall be but one motion to recommit. Would the Senate adopt such a change in its rule? The Chair is not certain that it would, because it might want to provide for two such motions.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to recommit, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with the purpose of this bill. Twice already on this floor I have voted against motions to recommit. Since that time, however, the bill has been amended on the floor in so many respects that I doubt if its author would recognize it.

I do not believe any Member of the Senate really knows what is in the bill on which we are asked to vote at the present time. The committee, and the committee alone, in my judgment, could straighten out that situation. Therefore, I intend to vote for the motion to recommit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to recommit the bill, with instructions. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOGAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], and will vote. I vote "nay." I am not advised how either of these Senators would vote if present.

Mr. MCNARY (when his name was called). Again referring to my pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea", and if the Senator from Mississippi were present, and voting, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORE. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I repeat the announcement of the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who have a pair on this question. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea", and the Senator from Georgia would vote "nay."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce a special pair on this question between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. If present, the Senator from Ohio would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Mexico would vote "nay."

I regret to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are detained from the Senate by illness.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. BORAH'S motion to recommit the bill, with instructions, was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF LYNCHING

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, pursuant to notices given last week, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 24, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. President, if a yea-and-nay vote can be taken upon this question at once, without debate, I am willing to yield for that purpose. If not, I wish to be heard upon the motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that cannot occur.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado demand the yeas and nays?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to discuss the matter somewhat before the vote is taken.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MCNARY. Has the Senator from Colorado filed his motion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado has filed a motion, as the Chair understands, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 24.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, my statement about a yea-and-nay vote was based on the assumption that such a vote might be taken at once. If not, I have expressed a wish to address the Senate upon my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had recognized the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]; but he assumes that the Senator from Florida will yield the floor for the purpose of permitting the Senator from Colorado to explain the bill.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, that is quite agreeable to me. I desire to put the Senator on notice, however, that I wish to oppose the motion to take up the measure; and I yield to him to proceed with his explanation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I understand, the motion is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is debatable.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Did I not understand the Senator from Colorado to ask unanimous consent for an immediate call of the roll to determine whether or not the bill should be taken up?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Answering the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, I have stated that if such a vote can be taken at once, without debate, I shall be glad to have that course pursued.

Mr. WALSH. How does the Senator know whether or not that can be done unless he asks unanimous consent for an immediate vote?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Objection has been made upon the floor by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]; and the suggestion has been made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], who has courteously yielded, that he desires to be heard upon the motion.

Mr. WALSH. I did not hear the statements of those Senators. I thank the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, high on the flawless marble which bounds the future home of the Supreme Court of the United States these words are carved:

Equal justice—under law.

They impress me as adequate to begin and end the argument on the pending measure. It will help me to know what impression they make on others, especially the distinguished lawyers who are Members of this body, and who at various times have taken official oaths to uphold the laws and Constitution of the United States. As I view that declaration, it is rooted in centuries of struggle for orderly, civilized government, and for human rights and liberties.

It was, I believe, the year 1215—so dimly remote a day that few can picture the historic scene—when the barons of England forced from King John, with the enlisted skill of what may without lightness be termed the "brain trust" of the time, the Great Charter, which has ever since been considered the corner or key stone of the liberties of English-speaking countries.

In that charter was contained, as a concession from the English Sovereign to English barons, language reading substantially as follows:

No freeman—

And, thank God, there are only freemen, at last, under the American flag!—

No freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseized, or outlawed, or banished, or anyways injured unless by the legal judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

In one form or another that noble and fundamental declaration will be found in those pronouncements through subsequent ages which have brought us to our present heritage of civil rights and liberties. In essence it inheres in the Petition of Right, the Habeas Corpus Act, the British Bill of Rights, the common law, the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the American Bill of Rights attached to that Constitution. It likewise inspires the constitutions of substantially all States of the Union.

In other words, our rights and liberties rest in part upon the ancient covenant that all citizens are entitled, when suspected or accused of crime, to safeguards against arbitrary seizure and fair trial before an impartial tribunal, and shall not otherwise be subjected to personal indignity or execution.

Nowhere in any of these declarations of freemen will be found authority lodged in purely private citizens or aliens to act as arresting officers, prosecutors, judges, and executioners of other men or women. Yet, within the lifetime of many Members of the Senate before me, no less than 5,071 men and women in our country have been summarily seized and unlawfully, privately, arbitrarily, and brutally put to death without the judgment of their peers or due process of law. Of this number about 1,400 have been white men and women; the remainder have been Negroes.

Such lawless lynching through the years has been resorted to in substantially every part of the United States, and I repeat what I asserted here some days ago, that the evil with which the Senate is now asked to deal is in no final sense sectional or local; it is national and, I submit, imperatively requires a national remedy.

Mr. President, it may be of interest to some who have not given recent attention to the subject to recall some old manifestations of this evil practice in our country. I do not take the oldest; it will suffice to turn to the early days of Abraham Lincoln.

Ninety-eight years ago Lincoln, a young lawyer in Illinois, made some comments on lynching which are doubly of historic value. Speaking in 1837 on the Perpetuation of Our Political Institutions, Lincoln, referring to mob atrocities then known to him, said, in part:

> It would be tedious as well as useless to recount the horrors of all of them. Those happening in the State of Mississippi and at St. Louis are perhaps the most dangerous in example and revolting to humanity. In the Mississippi case they first commenced by hanging the regular gamblers—a set of men certainly not following for a livelihood a very useful or very honest occupation, but one which, so far from being forbidden by the laws, was actually licensed by an act of the legislature passed but a single year before.
> Next, Negroes suspected of conspiring to raise an insurrection were caught and hanged in all parts of the State. Then white men supposed to be leagued with the Negroes and finally strangers from neighboring States going thither on business were in many cases subjected to the same fate. Thus went on the process of hanging, from gamblers to Negroes, from Negroes to white citizens, and from these to strangers.

Mr. President, since Abraham Lincoln's public career ended, various Presidents of the United States have had occasion to direct public attention to the menace involved in the flaming blood lust of lynching.

On July 26, 1918, during the World War, President Wilson in a public address to his fellow countrymen said, in part:

> There have been many lynchings, and every one of them has been a blow at the heart of ordered law and humane justice.
>
> No man who loves America, no man who really cares for her fame and honor and character, or who is truly loyal to her institutions, can justify mob action while the courts of justice are open and the Governments of the States and the Nation are ready and able to do their duty. * * *
>
> We proudly claim to be the champions of democracy. If we really are in deed and in truth let us see to it that we do not discredit our own. I say, plainly, that every American who takes part in the action of a mob or gives any sort of countenance is no true son of this great democracy, but its betrayer, and does more to discredit her by that single disloyalty to her standards of law and right than the words of her statesmen or the sacrifices of her heroic boys in the trenches can do to make suffering peoples believe her to be their savior.
>
> How shall we commend democracy to the acceptance of other peoples if we disgrace our own by proving that it is, after all, no protection to the weak? * * *
>
> I, therefore, very earnestly and solemnly beg that the Governors of all the States, the law officers of every community, and, above all, the men and women of every community in the United States, all who revere America and wish to keep her name without stain or reproach, will cooperate—not passively merely but actively and watchfully—to make an end of this disgraceful evil. It cannot live where the community does not countenance it.
> I have called upon the Nation to put its great energy into this war, and it has responded—responded with a spirit and a genius for action that has thrilled the world. I now call upon it, upon its men and women everywhere, to see to it that its laws are kept inviolate, its fame untarnished.

Similarly, following a lynching in the State of California, about a year and a half ago, during which two white youths were summarily seized and executed by an irresponsible mob near San Jose, our present honored President, Franklin Roosevelt, publicly denounced lynch law as "that vile form of collective murder." In the same impressive statement, which was made after an attempted defense of the San Jose anarchy by the then Governor of California, President Roosevelt further declared, "We do not excuse those in high places nor in low who condone lynch law." What occurred in California promptly resulted in the present, latest, Nation-wide movement in support of the pending bill.

In confirmation of my insistence that the issue is national, and not, as was contended here the other day, sectional, last Friday I caused to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD telegrams and editorials of recent dates, relevant to that discussion, all indicting lynching; many of them specifically urging the adoption of the proposed legislation, and most of them coming from leaders of public opinion in the more important Southern States of this country.

Those messages are merely supplemental. Already the Senate is aware that endorsements, practically without number, and from every corner of America, of the pending proposed legislation are in evidence here. Membership of the organizations which have unequivocally endorsed has literally mounted to many millions of our citizens, both men and women. Among them the women of the South by hundreds of thousands have been repudiating the suggestion that lynch law can be viewed as protecting them or their families or as otherwise justified in a Christian and civilized country.

Mr. President, summarizing for the purpose of more complete discussion, permit me to say that, tested by the rule that national wrongs demand national remedies, it is evident that lynchings cannot be held in check without a Federal law. They are often interstate and always have a Federal character. Although about 11 of 48 States—North and South Carolina among them—have applied the restraints of reasonable State statutes with results considered excellent, the evil continues to break out with every practice of brutality and lunacy. The past 2 years, from California to Florida, have again shown these fundamental facts.

Among the main reasons for Federal legislation are these:

First. The proposed law is reasonable in plan and extremely moderate in terms.

Second. The Federal Government will not act until State officials have failed or refuse to protect persons in their custody or charged with, suspected, or convicted of crime.

Third. Financial damages, as provided in the proposed Federal law, are now allowed against cities or counties, or both, for mob injuries or death under State laws of 11 States of the Union.

Fourth. The proposed law would bring the pressure of taxpaying public opinion, as well as the support of peace officers, to guard counties against mob violence, well illustrated in the case of South Carolina where further lynchings have not occurred in certain counties of that State after the financial penalties were imposed.

Fifth. The proposed law rests on authority vested in Congress under the Constitution, by appropriate legislation, to safeguard the equal protection of the laws for persons within the protection of States; and the constitutionality of the proposal is supported by successive interpretations of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Sixth. Lawyers of high standing, such as the late Moorfield Storey, of Boston, former president of the Massachusetts and American Bar Associations, have carefully analyzed and fully endorsed this type of legislation, and Chief Justice Hughes, of the Supreme Court, some years ago was a member of a national conference which unanimously adopted a resolution recommending such Federal legislation.

Seventh. The San Jose lynching in California in the late fall of 1933, which started a new national demand for such a law, is one proof that lynchings are not due to legal delays. Dean McMurray, of the University of California Law School, at Berkeley, has declared that California's recent record for criminal convictions is better than England's. Moreover, the criminal courts where the San Jose lynchings occurred were not congested with cases at the time, and the two white youths there lynched might have been promptly and impartially tried by jury.

Eighth. Charges of crimes against women, even without opportunity to prove their truth or falsity, are statistically shown to be among the less frequent causes of lynchings; and many of the alleged offenses, which have led to lynchings, have been shockingly trivial.

Ninth. Medical opinion more and more leans to the view that the limitless barbarities of lynchings spring from a sadistic type of madness, which can be repressed by community influence, and which, if not repressed, is only satisfied by unspeakable acts of savagery.

Tenth. Mob law endangers, as does nothing else, the safety of all life and property, and the continuance of free government.

Eleventh. The progress of civilization is measured by the successive triumphs of law over lawlessness.

Twelfth. The proposed law is already strongly endorsed by highly representative organizations in every part of the United States, having a total estimated membership of 53,570,000 men and women.

Mr. President, from such a background I turn to a brief enumeration of the provisions of the bill introduced in the Senate by my able colleague the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and myself.

The enacting clause declares that the act is designed to secure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws and to punish the crime of lynching.

Section 1 defines a mob or riotous assemblage as an assemblage of three or more persons, acting in concert, without authority of law, for the purpose of killing or injuring any person in the custody of any peace officer, or charged with, suspected, or convicted of crime.

Section 2 declares that if any State or governmental subdivision fails, neglects, or refuses to provide and maintain protection to the life or person of any individual within its jurisdiction against a mob or riotous assemblage, it will be deemed to have denied such person due process of law and the equal protection of the laws. The provisions of the law are enacted to the end that the protection guaranteed to persons in the several States and to citizens of the United States may be secured.

Section 3 (a) provides that where an officer or employee of any State or governmental subdivision charged with the duty of protecting life or person, who has an individual in his custody, fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to give such protection, or any officer or employee responsible for apprehending, keeping in custody, or prosecuting any person participating in such a mob or riotous assemblage who fails, neglects, or refuses to make all diligent efforts to perform such duties shall be guilty of a felony, and on conviction punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding 5 years, or both such fine or imprisonment.

Section 3 (b) declares that if any officer or employee having in his custody or control a prisoner conspires with any person to put such prisoner to death without authority of law, or to suffer such prisoner to be taken from his custody or control to be so injured or put to death by a mob or riotous assemblage, shall be guilty of a felony, and those who so conspire with such officer or employee shall likewise be guilty of a felony, the participating parties on conviction to be punished by imprisonment of not less than 5 years nor more than 25 years.

Section 4 extends jurisdiction to Federal district courts to try and to punish, in accordance with the laws of the State where the offense is committed, all participants, provided it is shown that the State officials have failed, neglected, or refused to act or the jurors in the State courts are so strongly opposed to such punishment that there is probability that those guilty will not be punished. Failure for more than 30 days after the offense is committed to apprehend or indict persons who have participated in such mob or unlawful assemblage or failure diligently to prosecute such persons, shall constitute prima facie evidence of such failure, neglect, or refusal.

Section 5 provides for not less than $2,000 nor more than $10,000 liability of any county in which injury or death occurred to the injured person or the estate of the person killed. Action is to be brought in such cases and prosecuted by the United States district attorney in the United States District Court for such district, and, if the forfeiture is not paid on recovery of judgment, the court is to have jurisdiction to enforce payment by a levy of execution upon any property of the county or may otherwise compel payment by appropriate process; and any officer or other person of such county who fails to comply with any lawful order of the court shall be liable to punishment as for contempt and to any other penalty provided by law.

Section 6 provides that where a person put to death has been transported by the mob from one county to another between his seizure and death, the county in which he is seized and the county in which he is put to death shall be jointly and severally liable to pay the forfeiture provided.

Section 7 is the customary legislative declaration that if any provision of the law is held invalid, the application of the remainder of the act shall not be affected.

Mr. President, it should be fairly obvious from this summary that nothing really unusual is being attempted in the proposed legislation. It must rather be a source of surprise, I think, that our country should have awaited so long some such action by Congress. I referred a few moments ago to the fact that in some States the subject has already been dealt with in not dissimilar fashion. In a volume published in 1933 by Dr. J. H. Chadbourn, assistant professor of law of the University of North Carolina, under the title "Lynching and the Law", will be found authority supporting these statements.

There are today some 11 States of the Union which provide for recovery against cities and counties in which a lynching or mob death occurs. As listed by Professor Chadbourn, those States are Connecticut, Kansas, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, New Jersey, North Carolina, and West Virginia.

The amounts of penalties provided by law in those States imposed in behalf of the injured or slain victims of mob law range from $1,000 in Nebraska to $10,000 in Pennsylvania. In addition to Dr. Chadbourn's compilation, detailed information on these particular statutes may be found in the thirteenth volume of American Law Reports.

In some six of these States provision has been made for recovery in cases of mob injury as well as death. Those States are listed by Chadbourn as Illinois, Kansas, Connecticut, Ohio, Wisconsin, and New Jersey; and the amounts of damage allowed for mob injury range from $500 in Ohio to $5,000 in Illinois.

Professor Chadbourn also interestingly directs attention to the fact that ancient English law provides precedents for this type of legislation. He says:

> This device of fining a governmental unit which is the scene of mob violence seems to have a well-recognized parallel in English jurisprudence.

In this connection he cites an opinion in 1870 by Judge Jeters, in an Alabama case—Gunter v. Dale County (44 Ala. 639)—in which the court declared:

> The law involved in this litigation is not a novelty, nor is it founded upon principles which have been tried and have failed, or which have been condemned by statesmen and legislators of the highest quality.

Recently, my attention was drawn to a volume by Dean C. Worcester which deals with somewhat parallel methods adopted in the Philippine Islands, which finally proved effective in controlling tribal head-hunters. The old practice of head-hunting in the Philippine Islands apparently was not halted there by merely punishing individual offenders. Not until the community was aroused by the burning of villages in which head-hunters resided, thereby inflicting community loss, did that savage practice disappear. The lesson is not without significance even for America.

The same economic principle is indeed invoked in the State laws to which I have referred, and properly, in the proposed Federal legislation. It is one definite purpose of the legislation, as submitted to the Senate, that economic pressure on taxpayers shall be brought to bear by legislation to prevent practices which have disgraced our Nation at home and dishonored it abroad.

It is fully recognized, I think, by students of this subject that mobs rarely form without local sanction; that they are almost never organized without knowledge of the peace officers of a community; and that if, at the inception of this lawless practice, the community frowns upon it, the mob can ordinarily be dissipated with little difficulty, and the violation of law averted.

If, under the proposed legislation, the taxpayers of a given community believe they will be subjected to taxes to pay damages to the injured person seized by the mob, or to his family if he is slain, it must be obvious to any one who knows human nature that mobs will usually be halted in the beginning.

Nor am I indulging in theory when I say this. Professor Chadbourn, in the volume to which I have referred, gives a table in which, after calling attention to the fact that in South Carolina the provisions of a similar State statute have been applied and damages have been collected from South Carolina counties in which lynchings have occurred, he shows that in no instance where such damages were collected in a given county did a lynching subsequently occur in that county.

We have, therefore, highly respectable authority on practice, as well as sound theory, to support what may at first blush impress as novel some not familiar with this legislative proposal. It is not novel. It has been tried. It has succeeded.

It may suffice, broadly speaking, to make one or two further general references to the problem, the proposed remedy, the reasonableness and moderateness of the separate provisions, and the general plan. Lynching is not declared to be murder under the pending bill. That is unnecessary. We already have statutes dealing with murder. It will be noted that a peace officer is held accountable under the measure only in two instances:

In the first place, if he fails to use all diligent effort to avert a lynching in his community, thus without effort permitting a mob to take a prisoner to slay him, a penalty attaches which is much more moderate than the one which attaches, for example, under a statute in my State for the less important offense of permitting a prisoner to escape from custody.

The other offense—a graver one—is that where a sheriff, in violation of his oath of office and all law-abiding standards, conspires with members of a mob to bring about injury to a citizen who has been seized without lawful process, or to turn the prisoner over to those who intend to put him to death. In that case, likewise, the gravity of which will be recognized by all who believe in orderly government and realize that civilization, after all, has only been attained through successive triumphs of law over lawlessness, a peace officer is subject to imprisonment limited to 5 to 25 years. Certainly no one familiar with our criminal laws will regard such a penalty, to be applied by courts, as in any respect excessive.

Mr. President, further analysis of the bill does not appear to be required at this hour. Nor am I disposed at the moment to indulge in any typical discussion of the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. More and more and in some respects for the better, in the travail of our great crisis the stereotyped discussion of the constitutionality of proposed Federal legislation has been silenced in this historic forum. I shall, therefore, merely review briefly the basis of the constitutional argument in support of the measure, so that no one may contend that this aspect of our problem has been ignored.

It should first be said that the Committee on the Judiciary has twice pronounced in favor of the proposed legislation, once a year ago, and again this spring. That committee's membership of eminent lawyers gives us no little initial assurance in approaching the subject.

I call attention first to section 4 of article IV of the Federal Constitution, which reads:

> The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government.

It is hardly necessary to say that when mobs take over control of government and lawlessness is rampant, a republican form of government is denied, and Congress, if the emergency is deemed sufficient, is justified in making provision for a republican form of government, even as the President may use the Army and the Navy for the same purpose on due provocation.

Even more important than that provision of the Constitution, however, is section 1 of article XIV of the Constitution, which reads in part as follows:

> All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside.

Omitting, in part, the amendment continues:

> Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Section 5 of article 14 of the amendments provides:

> The Congress shall have the power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article.

Looking to this language we recognize a broad grant of authority to the Congress to legislate for the protection of the men and women of this country who are affirmatively declared by the Constitution to be alike citizens of the United States and citizens of the respective States in which they dwell.

It should also be borne in mind that the denial of the rights thus assured by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution need not be by legislation. This has been affirmatively made clear by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In a noted case, ex parte Virginia, decided in 1878 and reported in One Hundredth United States Reports, at page 339—I read from page 347—the Supreme Court of the United States said:

> A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition; and as he acts in the name and for the State and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so, or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it.

On page 397, in the same decision, the Supreme Court used the following further language:

> The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are executed, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever, by virtue of public position under a State government, deprives another of property, life, or liberty without the due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition.

Going a step further we come to a statement made in 1874 by Judge Krekel, of the district court of Missouri, in the case of the United States against Blackburn, reported in Federal Case No. 14603 at page 1159. The court was there dealing with what was regarded as a conspiracy to deprive colored citizens of school privileges equal to those accorded white citizens, and held, in effect, that the denial of the due process or the equal protection of the law may result from the negative as well as from the affirmative action of such State agents. Judge Krekel, charging the jury, said:

> By the equal protection of the laws, spoken of in the indictment, is meant that the ordinary means and appliances which the law has provided shall be used and put in operation alike in all cases of violation of law. Hence, if the outrages and crimes shown to have been committed in the case before you were well known to the community at large, and that community and the officers of the law willfully failed to employ the means provided by law to ferret out and bring to trial the offenders, because of the victims being colored, it is depriving them of the equal protection of the law.

Similarly another United States district judge in Kentucky, Judge Cochran, said in 1913:

> What is it, then, to deny the equal protection of those laws? It is to refuse to grant or to withhold—

Observe the word "withhold"— > equal treatment in conferring or securing rights or in imposing or exacting performance of duties.

The case from which I am now reading is Louisville, &c., Railroad Co. v. Bosworth (230 Federal 191), at page 207.

That the Supreme Court of the United States itself has recognized the force and inevitability of this position is well illustrated in decisions in cases where it held a denial of due process and equal protection of the laws occurred when mob lawlessness dominated court trials. For example, that Court in an important case in which the decision was rendered by the lamented Mr. Justice Holmes, and in which I may add Mr. Moorfield Story, of Boston, to whom I referred some moments ago, acted as one of counsel, made the following declaration:

> If the State, supplying no corrective process, carries into execution a judgment of death or imprisonment based upon a verdict thus produced by mob domination, the State deprives the accused of his life or liberty without due process of law. * * * If the case is that the whole proceeding is a mask—that counsel, jury, and judge were swept to the fatal end by an irrestible wave of public passion, and that the State courts failed to correct the wrong, neither perfection in the machinery for correction nor the possibility that the trial court and counsel saw no other way of avoiding an immediate outbreak of the mob can prevent this Court from securing to the petitioners their constitutional rights.

Moore v. Dempsey (261 U. S. 86, at p. 91).

In other words, the court there invokes our constitutional safeguards and pronounces them applicable for the protection of the rights of men and women even in court, when conditions are unfavorable to fair trial. How much more strongly does such language sanction the application of the safeguards proposed in the pending legislation in cases where there are no safeguards available, either of courts or juries for the protection of those who, whether innocent or guilty, are denied any right of trial whatsoever?

It should be added that strong confirmation of these views may be found, though not specifically expressed, in the decision of Mr. Chief Justice Hughes in the case of Norris against Alabama, decided by the Supreme Court on April 1, 1935. This is one of the Scottsboro cases, and the opinion was handed down on April 1 of this year. The Court there concluded by inference from testimony superficially contrary to the conclusion reached by the Court, that the State of Alabama in these proceedings had denied equal treatment with regard to jury service to Negroes in that State.

In other words, in the face of a record of apparent fairness, the Supreme Court of the United States, taking in effect judicial notice of well-known facts, held that there had not been equal protection accorded, and remanded the case for further trial below.

Mr. President, assuming that unequal treatment shall have been reasonably established, as the pending bill attempts to have done before Federal jurisdiction will attach, the next constitutional question naturally raised is whether Congress may enforce the rights declared by articles IV and XIV, above cited. Mr. Justice Story, a famous constitutional expounder, long ago declared the Supreme Court's opinion upon that subject, as follows:

> That a clause in the Constitution conferring a right should not be so construed as to make it shadowy, or unsubstantial, or leave the citizen without a remedial power adequate for its protection, when another construction equally accordant with the words and the sense in which they were used would enforce and protect the right granted.
> That Congress is not restricted to legislation for the execution of its expressly granted powers; but, for the protection of rights guaranteed by the Constitution, may employ such means, not prohibited, as are necessary and proper or such as are appropriate to attain the ends proposed.

I read from Prigg v. Commonwealth (16 Peters, U. S. 539), a decision handed down in 1842.

Similarly, in a well-known case, U. S. v. Reese (92 U. S. 214, 217), Chief Justice White, speaking for the Supreme Court of the United States, declared:

> Rights and immunities created by or dependent upon the Constitution of the United States can be protected by Congress. The form and the manner of the protection may be such as Congress in the legitimate exercise of its legislative discretion shall provide. These may be varied to meet the necessities of the particular right to be protected.

The force of these general declarations is better realized when we revert to the declaration in Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. 339, 397) above cited; also the following declaration of the same court, reporting in the same volume in another case, in which the Court said—and I quote from Virginia v. Rives (100 U. S. 313, 318):

> Congress by virtue of the fifth section of the fourteenth amendment, may enforce the prohibitions whenever they are disregarded by either the legislative, the executive, or the judicial department of the State. The mode of enforcement is left to its discretion. It may secure the right—that is, enforce its recognition—by removing the case from a State court in which it is denied into a Federal court where it will be acknowledged.

A more recent and strong declaration of adequate congressional authority was that given by Mr. Chief Justice White for the Court in the case of Home Telephone & Telegraph Co. against City of Los Angeles, reported in Two Hundred and Twenty-seventh United States Supreme Court Reports at page 278, in which this language is found at page 286:

> The provisions of the amendment as conclusively fixed by previous decisions are generic in their terms, are addressed, of course, to the States, but also to every person, whether natural or judicial, who is the repository of State power. By this construction the reach of the amendment is shown to be coextensive with any exercise by a State of power, in whatever form exerted.

Illustrative also of the far-reaching extent of authority under the fourteenth amendment was a case of discrimination by the city of San Francisco against Chinese laundries under a municipal ordinance. The Supreme Court there held that the protection of the fourteenth amendment reached quasi-legislative acts even of municipal bodies. This was decided in Yick Ho v. Hopkins (118 U. S. 356, 371).

It is unnecessary to elaborate. I assume that the language employed is both persuasive and conclusive, and that the conclusion reached by the Committee on the Judiciary and by the cosponsors of the proposed legislation is under the circumstances altogether reasonable.

For those who desire to inquire further into the constitutional question, permit me to make one or two additional references.

I have before me a copy of a letter written by the distinguished dean of the Harvard Law School, Roscoe Pound, written on the 27th of November of last year, in which one sentence reads:

> I do not feel at all troubled about the matter of constitutionality—

Referring broadly to the measure now before the Senate.

There will be found also in the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, in support of the pending bill, a brief dealing definitely with the particular measure now before us, prepared by Mr. Charles H. Tuttle, of New York, former United States attorney for New York, upholding the constitutionality of the measure.

Some years ago a similar measure came under the review of the Congress. At that time various briefs in support of it were brought to the attention of the Congress. Among those may be mentioned one by Hon. Guy D. Goff, at that time Assistant Attorney General of the United States, later a Member of the Senate from the State of West Virginia. The then Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Daugherty, also gave an informal opinion to the same effect.

Mr. Moorfield Storey, to whom I have already referred, presented an elaborate brief in which he supported the constitutionality of this type of legislation from several different viewpoints. One, not heretofore referred to, may be mentioned in passing. He urged among other contentions that Congress had ample authority under the Constitution to maintain the peace of the United States by appropriate legislation, and concluded that this type of legislation comes within that authority.

Mr. Herbert K. Stockton, of New York, another prominent attorney, prepared and submitted a brief some years ago in support of the same sort of legislation, and a year ago he submitted additional like statements for the Judiciary Committee, and testified in support of the constitutionality of the legislation. Other attorneys of prominence appeared as witnesses in the hearings, particularly a year ago, and their opinions are also available.

Mr. President, law is always a measuring rod of civilization. The Great Charter of King John tested the boldly asserted progress of British freedom in the thirteenth century. Our Bill of Rights proves the dignity and achievements of our own age as it gaged the age of Washington. Yet certain it is, and it should be added, that our present drive on interstate crime and in behalf of reasonably secure American citizenship will never consolidate its forces until lynching is specifically added to federally barred offenses. Public opinion at last demands such action as an indispensable safeguard of our Nation. The Attorney General of the United States cannot fully and effectively arm against the scattered but powerful criminal elements of our country without this specific authority. We must aid him and our Nation by completing the mobilization of our effective forces without further delay.

Certain living American principles which in the long run affect our conduct and determine history should be called into action. One is that ours is a government of laws and not of men; another, that justice to human beings and the equal protection of our laws are foremost concerns of the State. The manner in which we practice those principles fixes our choice between Hitler and Mussolini on the one side, and Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln, Henry Grady, Woodrow Wilson, and Franklin D. Roosevelt on the other.

If one can mention, much less picture, such appalling facts as I have recited without being revolted, he is indeed hardened out of all semblance to humanity. They destroy our claim to civilized life. They must not be permitted to multiply. Every repetition of mob brutality denies its victims the right of speedy and impartial trial and the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Constitution. No man can be permitted to usurp the combined functions of judge, jury, and executioner of his fellow men; and whenever any State fails to protect such equal rights, I submit that the Federal Government must do its utmost to repair the damage which is then chargeable to all of us.

On these and other unanswerable grounds the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and I look to the American people and our National Congress to endorse, with the overwhelming weight of public opinion, the enactment of such legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 24, to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws by discouraging, preventing, and punishing the crime of lynching.

Mr. ROBINSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Texas desire the floor?

Mr. CONNALLY. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think that is necessary. I am going to move an executive session.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado one question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Under this bill, as I understand, if three or more persons act in concert for the purpose of killing or injuring any person who is suspected, and several other things, of a crime, as I understand, it is not necessary to constitute the offense that the person be in the custody of an officer. Is that correct?

Mr. COSTIGAN. An unlawful mob or assemblage is defined in substance in the language used by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. A short time ago, in the county in which I live, several hundred miners, members of the United Mine Workers of America, met and went down into a mining camp, and accused the people in that mining camp of violating the Federal law with reference to various labor provisions of the code. They accused them of violating the Federal law with reference to collective bargaining. A very serious tragedy occurred down there. The sheriff went there, and his deputies went there, but in spite of all that could be done there was a very serious tragedy. Would not they come within the provisions of this law?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Was there a purpose seriously to injure or to kill?

Mr. BLACK. They did kill. Whether or not there was a purpose would have been a question for the jury to determine.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Were there officers present who had cognizance of the facts to which the Senator refers?

Mr. BLACK. The officers were present, and the miners have accused the officers of being too diligent in trying to prevent the alleged crime. On the other hand, the operators have accused the officers of being too lenient. As a result, however, of this gathering—and there have frequently been such gatherings and strifes, and there frequently will be hereafter—as a result, as I read the bill which is the subject of the Senator's motion, the case could be taken to the Federal court.

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I ask the able Senator from Alabama whether any indictments for murder have been returned in the cases?

Mr. BLACK. Efforts were made to obtain indictments. I have not followed the history of the case.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Ordinarily there would have been indictments for murder.

Mr. BLACK. Efforts have been made to obtain indictments for murder, the striking miners claiming that they fired in this camp in self-defense, and those on the other side, the nonunion miners and certain witnesses, claiming that it was ruthless murder.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is perfectly evident, I think—and if I am unfair in my construction, of course, I desire to be corrected—that the able Senator from Alabama is concerned lest the proposed legislation be converted into something in the nature of antistrike legislation. Am I correct in that inference?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct to the extent that it is my belief that it is absolutely impossible for this proposed law not to include just such things; and I am frankly of the opinion that if there were an effort to eliminate certain kinds of alleged crime, it would certainly seriously affect the entire intent and purpose of the measure. That is the reason why I ask whether there is any way in which anyone could reach the conclusion that that particular offense would not be within this measure.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Naturally I share the Senator's concern about anything in the nature of antistrike legislation under the guise of the suppression of mob violence; and in saying that I am sure I speak for the able Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is here, and who can also speak for himself. My judgment is, however——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. COSTIGAN. May I be permitted to answer this question? Then I will subside.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I ought to conclude the statement by saying this, and I should like to hear from the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] on the same subject: It is quite possible, under the criminal laws which now exist, to invent cases for the prosecution of members of organized labor in industrial difficulties.

I see nothing added by this particular draft which need alarm any member of organized labor. In my judgment, the Federal courts would hold that the situation, if I understand it correctly, as explained by the Senator from Alabama, was not one coming within the purview of an act designed to prevent lynching, and would read into the construction of such a measure an interpretation which would add nothing to the present obligations resting on the members of organized labor.

Mr. BLACK. It would certainly give to the peace officers a wonderful excuse for stating that they were afraid they would be tried and indicted in a Federal court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that Senators may resume their colloquy tomorrow.

PRODUCTION OF CHROMIUM IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, recently I called attention to the Philippine Islands as a production center of gold. I now call attention to chromium. The most extensive deposits of this war material in the world are found in the Philippine Islands, some of the deposits containing approximately 40 percent of chromium oxide. Since the world's supply is limited, the great importance of this source cannot be overestimated.

A survey of one deposit shows a surface area of not less than 1,000,000 square feet, with a depth of at least 500 feet, and the deposit constant.

The fact of the existence of this rich deposit has come to the attention of the Japanese. The officers of the company owning the deposit have been approached by representatives of Japanese firms with the surprising proposal that they handle the entire chromite output of the Philippine Islands. This came immediately after the report of conservative geologists that the deposits now being developed will run into many millions of tons. This situation presents a problem of the first order to our State Department; a representative of the producing company is on his way to the mainland to present the situation.

In that connection I ask unanimous consent that an article recently appearing in the New York Times be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times]

MANILA, March 23.—Japan is showing an increasing interest in the possibilities of purchase of Philippine chromite.

Coincident with the announcement that Judge John W. Haussermann, president of Benguet Consolidated, is to leave for the United States for a survey of the chromite market, came word from several Japanese firms that a suitable outlet for the Philippine metal could be found in Japan.

An initial Japanese order of 100 tons was placed with the Benguet company, which is operating several chromium properties, and that has already been delivered from one of the smaller mines which has just begun production.

At the same time officers of the company were approached by representatives of Japanese firms with the surprising proposal that they handle the entire chromite output of the Philippine Islands. This came immediately after reports of conservative geologists that the chromite deposits in Masinloc, Zamboles, which are now being developed by Benguet, will run into many millions of tons.

HUGE AREA IS REVEALED

A report of development work was made to stockholders of the Benguet company at their annual meeting on March 13. At that time it was said that the surface survey on this chromite outcrop showed an area of not less than 1,000,000 square feet. Tunnels were driven at the 500-foot level and these also went through chromite ore indicating that the depth was at least 500 feet and the deposit constant.

Diamond drilling is going on now at the 500-foot level to determine how much deeper the deposit goes. Judge Haussermann stated as early as last December that there was reason to believe that this chromite deposit, which is owned by Consolidated Mines and is being operated on a profit-sharing basis by Benguet, was one of the largest in the world and probably would soon be the largest source of metallic war materials under the American flag.

Exploration and development have not moved rapidly since that time, and it appears now to be only a matter of months until the property comes into production. A. F. Duggleby, consulting engineer and geologist, stated to the Benguet stockholders that production was waiting only for completion of development operations that would indicate the size of the ore body.

"It is obvious", he declared, "that if we are dealing in terms of millions of tons of ore we will undertake production operations on a far larger scale than would be utilized for smaller deposits."

JUDGE TO SURVEY MARKET

With this prospect in view, Judge Haussermann is undertaking a survey of the American chromite market. Inquiries have been received in the Benguet office from various offices in the United States and also from European capitals as to how soon the ore would be available and to what extent.

Marketing will not be hampered greatly by the element of accessibility in production. The deposit is only 20 miles from what can be made an excellent deep-water harbor, and a road has already been built from the coast up to the mine. From the present indications as to the size and importance of the deposit it appears certain to Philippine mining men that a railroad will be put in to carry the ore to the coast.

Moreover, the nature of the ore suggests other marketing angles. Specimens have been taken at various points and at various levels, and thus far they have shown not only a gratifyingly high content of chromic oxide but a low iron content. In those specimens wherein the chromic oxide content drops below the theoretically profitable commercial level, the remainder of the ore body is taken up not by an increase in ferric oxide or magnetites but by simple native rock. This will make concentration operations simple and inexpensive. It has been suggested also that if it is desirable the pulverized concentrate can be bricquetted for marketing.

SALE IN UNITED STATES IS PREFERRED

What effect the Japanese interest in this deposit will have in ultimately putting it on the market is not yet determined. The operators of the mine are Americans and would prefer to sell their product to the American market, if it is available. Nevertheless, the fact that the United States is selling scrap iron and even iron ore to Japan has been frequently pointed out in discussing the marketing of metals. It seems unlikely, therefore, that local operators could refuse sale to Japan in the open market without a serious misunderstanding.

On the other hand, mining engineers in the Philippines believe that the comparative scarcity of chromium, its high cost of production and its high market value have somewhat retarded its extension into wider fields. They point out, for example, that the use of a chrome steel in ordinary structural steel operations would, because of its rust-resistant properties, greatly simplify maintenance. This has not taken place in the past, they believe, simply because of the high cost of chromium. With a tremendous supply such as that available in the Philippines there is a definite possibility of reduced cost of operations and therefore of the adaptation of the product to commercial uses for which it has hitherto been considered too expensive.

CONSTITUTION A HANDICAP

Those problems will be discussed by Judge Haussermann with business men in the United States. It is inevitable also that Judge Haussermann will be asked his opinion in both political and business circles in respect to the relationship of the Philippine mining industry to recent political developments.

The constitution of the Philippines, which is now under examination in the United States, places very sharp strictures on the mining industry. It stipulates that any corporation organized to deal with natural resources in the Philippines must have 60 percent of its capital stock owned by Filipinos. The provisions for landholding in the constitution are equally restrictive, and the combination of these factors, Judge Haussermann and other mining men in the Philippines believe, will unduly restrict what should be a direct influx of capital for developing these mining projects.

A degree of elasticity is provided in the temporary provision that in the Commonwealth period, Americans will receive the same civil rights as Filipinos, but there is some apprehension that this will later be modified to a more restricted basis. If that happens, Americans foresee the eventual stultification of the entire mining industry.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Frank E. Flynn, of Arizona, to be United States attorney, district of Arizona, to succeed Clifton Mathews, appointed United States circuit judge, ninth circuit.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the nomination of Francis H. Inge, of Alabama, to be United States attorney, southern district of Alabama, vice Alexander C. Birch, term expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Marriner S. Eccles, of Utah, to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation of Marriner S. Eccles. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 25, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 24 (legislative day of Apr. 15), 1935

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Marriner S. Eccles to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

POSTMASTERS

ILLINOIS

O. Rice Jones, Paris.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of our Heavenly Father for His wonderful sympathy with penitents, for His gentleness with the weary, and for the harmony that runs through the discords of frail humanity. Thou ever-merciful God, inspire us with the dignity of our station, with our fellowship, and with that music that today fills the heavens and the universe. O hasten the time when Thy holy name shall be sweet to everyone and Thy spirit shall be breathed into the hearts of all men. Keep us free from all irregularities and indulgences which cut the strength of life's fabric. Clothe us with that courage and fortitude of soul with which brave men face the future. Enable us to be bearers of good tidings, good news, and good cheer, and lift us up in the sun-bright smile of Thy presence and let our deliberations bear witness to Thy guidance. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2035) entitled "An act to amend an act approved June 25, 1934, authorizing loans from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, for the construction of certain municipal buildings in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. CAPPER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. CUTTING members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the War Department.

SALE OF PROPERTY UNDER ORDERS AND DECREES OF UNITED STATES COURTS

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill (H. R. 5455) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which property shall be sold under orders and decrees of any United States courts", approved March 3, 1893, as amended, will be laid on the table, a similar Senate bill (S. 1572) having been passed yesterday.

There was no objection.

JAMES A. MOFFETT

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, since the time I entered this Chamber as Congressman at Large, representing the State of Ohio, I have consistently upheld the leadership of President Roosevelt and supported the new-deal policies of this administration, but I would be untrue to the trust and confidence of the 7,000,000 fine constituents back in Ohio whom I represent here, and I would be deviating from the course of conduct that I have marked out for myself, if I hesitated for one moment to denounce neglect and failure, even in high places. I rise here today to advert to Federal Housing Administrator James A. Moffett, and the fact that the Federal Housing Administrator contemplates taking a leave of absence from his duties for a period of 2 or 3 months to make a business and pleasure trip to the Orient at a time when the efforts of the Administrator of the Federal Housing Act should be concentrated here at Washington. The Housing Act was approved June 27, 1934. Up to the present time approximately $55,000,000 has been loaned to 120,000 individuals under title I of that act. These are small loans, averaging $420 each. Approximately 1,000 of these small loans are being made each day at the present time. But contrasted with that, under title II of this act, only about two and a half million dollars in loans have been made to date. The operation of title II has been disappointing—so disappointing, in fact, that it has been termed a "total flop." The Administrator, James A. Moffett, recently returned from a pleasure trip to Palm Beach, Fla.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTE HILL. Would it not be a good idea to give Mr. Moffett a permanent leave of absence?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to suggest that. The gentleman from Washington inquires whether it would not be a good plan to give Mr. Moffett a permanent leave of absence. Either Mr. James A. Moffett should resign as Administrator of the Federal Housing Act or he should give up his contemplated trip to the Orient. Certainly it cannot be said that he is going to China and the Malay Peninsula and India to investigate housing conditions there. He has spent very little time on the job since his appointment. Much of his time has been occupied in speechmaking elsewhere and in attending social affairs. As a matter of fact, James A. Moffett has been in Washington less than 2 weeks during the past 2 months, and in his absence Mr. Stewart McDonald, formerly president of the bankrupt Moon Motor Co., and who before that had experience as a police commissioner, or something of that sort, in addition to being president of a motor company that went broke, is in charge. How can it be said that James A. Moffett is a key man in this administration in view of his continued absences from his post of duty? As Congressman at Large representing the State of Ohio, I call upon Mr. James A. Moffett to either attend to his public business or to resign and attend exclusively to his private affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire what the policy of the leaders on the majority side is in regard to Members addressing the House. We are here today for general debate on the naval-appropriation bill, when any Member can talk on any subject he wants to. Is it proposed to go along the whole afternoon on unanimous-consent requests to address the House? If so, I want to put in one for myself. I do not care how the leaders do it, but just tell us about it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I was in hopes we would not have a number of these requests before the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval-appropriation bill. It does seem to me that gentlemen ought to wait a few minutes and then get time from those in charge of the time on that bill. I do not like to object to 1- or 2-minute speeches, but when numerous gentlemen stand up and ask to speak 5 or 10 minutes on many different subjects, I feel we should not follow that custom. I shall object to any more speeches until we get into the Committee of the Whole.

I do not want to interfere with any understanding that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] may have had with anyone that he has permitted to speak, but it is not orderly procedure to allow a large number of gentlemen to speak out of order when we are ready to go into general debate now.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I assure the gentleman I have not in any wise bothered any committee during the 3 months I have been in Congress. I want to say this to the genial floor leader, that I am one, irrespective of parliamentary proceedings, who does not believe that a Member ought to obtain time to speak on an important matter when the House is in Committee of the Whole. I made this request out of deference to the committee, and its purpose in presenting its bill.

Mr. SNELL. This debate in Committee of the Whole is exactly for the purpose which the gentleman specifies. It is not for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I do not agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, that is not exactly correct. I do not see what difference it makes using the whole day in general debate in Committee of the Whole or using a part of the day for speeches in the House.

Mr. SNELL. I do not care which you do, but we would like to know what the policy is so that some of us on this side may ask unanimous consent to address the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Unless there is some big measure before the House, I cannot see any objection to using an hour or so in talking before the House.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, it seems to me that some of the members of the Democratic Party are waking up, when we get a few more speeches such as we had a few moments ago; and when the Democratic Party recognizes the fact that they have men in high places that ought to resign or be thrown out, the better for our country, I think we ought to give them an opportunity to speak before the House and condemn inefficient men in order that efficient men replace them in public office.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DUNN]?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Reserving the right to object, I will not object to this request, at the request of the chairman of the subcommittee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TUBERCULOSIS

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the fact that during the past 3 years there has been considerable phenomenal legislation passed by this body. I am further aware of the fact that this legislation has been necessitated by virtue of the very extraordinary times we have been going through. I know that the billions of dollars that have been appropriated to meet emergency measures have been more than necessary. I know further—and I am saying this with great deference to our splendid President—that there have been millions squandered because of experiment. While those measures have been enacted and while those expenditures have been made, there is one vital thing I wish to bring to your attention as a matter of observation. I do not care to overindulge your patience to hear what I have to say. I simply wish to say that there is something in this Nation of great import that ought to be brought to your attention, with reference to the very life of our citizenship, which has been long since overlooked.

There are more than 850,000 active cases of tuberculosis in the United States proper; cases that have been actually reported and are on record; not cases which are synthetic; not cases which have just been arrived at by an indefinite approximation, but cases which have actually reached the National Tuberculosis Association and its auxiliary agencies. If there are 850,000 cases of tuberculosis in this Nation you might ask me, "How many of those cases are actually receiving treatment?" I wish to say in my brief and undetailed statement that 60 percent of these 850,000 actually recorded cases are charitable cases who have no measurable means whatsoever of giving themselves treatment. There are not enough institutions in this country to care for them. You might come back and say again, "But all of the organizations say that tuberculosis is on the down grade; that they have conquered it; that the tubercle bacillus has been cornered, and that there are enough State charitable institutions and enough relief agencies to give them all that they should have." I say to you that the first tubercular sanatorium was created at Lake Saranac in New York in 1885. Since that time, because of experiments, other tubercular sanatoria have increased all over the United States, but today only 18 States have recognized charitable institutions where poor men, where poor women can receive treatment. There are only 18 of those institutions, if you please, and less than one-tenth enough bed space to actually take care of the active cases that we have in our midst.

Now, I have this in mind: In the State of Mississippi we have one of the largest tubercular sanatoria in the United States. We have approximately 1,850 beds and approximately 230 beds in the preventorium, where they treat little children, little children who have been wrested from the breasts of their mothers and brought there at the hand of charity to be taken away from the jaws of death. We had last year 1,750 deaths in excess of the actual number of beds that we had. There is a corresponding number of deaths when you seek the comparative scale with beds in the other Southern States.

I do not know how to correct this situation. I bring it to you only as an observation, only because my heart and my sympathies are with those people. I say to you now that you can appropriate your millions if you want to for the Army and the Navy, you can set up C. C. C. camps and build monuments up and down the avenues of life; but what good are those things to society, what good are those things to the multitude, if we are to sit by here and leave out of this mighty race to conquer the depression the disintegrating force of the tubercle bacillus that is destroying so many people? One hundred thousand deaths in the last 10 years, and thousands unrecorded, because of the fact that there were no medical records made of their particular cases.

There ought to be a resolution—and I intend to offer it—asking for at least $75,000,000 out of the public-works program to build at least six sanatoria in different, definite zone areas, to be chosen by the President, to give those people that attention which they must have. The depression has caused a great deal more.

Mr. MORITZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. I would like to say to the gentleman that in Pittsburgh, while I was secretary to the mayor, whenever a person afflicted by tuberculosis came into the mayor's office asking for a bed in our hospital to die in, they thought they were in the second heaven when their request was granted. The gentleman is right in what he is saying.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his contribution. There ought to be something done, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a vital thing; and I do not stand here talking idly to put something in the RECORD to go back home. I am a Democrat—a Democrat who will state the facts; and I am not afraid to state them at any time. I ask you to give this serious consideration. I believe these people ought to have help. We should get away from the material side of life for a moment and perpetuate in the hearts of the American people the one fundamental truth that this Congress believes in uplifting society and aiding future generations. [Applause.]

PLUMBING IN FEDERAL BUILDINGS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 254, providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may the joint resolution be reported? Then, under reservation of objection, I wish to make a few observations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the House joint resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution providing for an investigation by the United States Public Health Service of the plumbing and sanitary systems in Federal Government buildings

Whereas since 1933 the danger of the outbreak of epidemics such as amoebic dysentery has become a threat to public health; and

Whereas defective plumbing and cross connections between sewage and water-supply lines have been presumptive causes therefor; and

Whereas these dangers increase with the age of plumbing systems; and

Whereas the Government buildings throughout the United States have many of the oldest types of installations: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the United States Public Health Service be, and is hereby, required and directed to make a complete survey of all Government properties for the purpose of eliminating dangers of the type indicated in Government buildings and report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1936, the cost involved in making desired eliminations and improvements.

SEC. 2. The United States Public Health Service be, and is hereby, directed to make a study of the relation of amoebic dysentery to plumbing and issue a report to the Congress on or before January 3, 1937, for the benefit of the medical profession and the plumbing industry.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another resolution of the type which it has always been the practice of the House to send to a committee for consideration. I do not know that I care to take the responsibility of objecting to the consideration of this joint resolution, but I do think that these resolutions should go to committee. They can be reported out promptly if they are of an emergency nature. A great many of these resolutions, on their face, are perfectly innocent; but I know from experience that sometimes they go further than we think. It is the same way about several of these legislative matters that have been brought up lately by unanimous consent. It puts me in an embarrassing position to object to them. On the other hand, however, we should know when these matters are to be brought up. Practically every time I let some matter go through, some Member comes to me asking why I let it go through. He says: "I am not opposed to it, but I wanted to amend it."

I think we ought to have some definite policy; I think we are entitled to have one, whether it be to dispose of these matters by unanimous consent or in the regular way. If they are to be disposed of by unanimous consent late in the afternoon, then we can have a quorum here and every Member can look after himself.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree generally with what the gentleman says. He was Chairman of the Committee on Rules for 8 years, the greatest Republican Chairman of the Committee on Rules, and the last Republican chairman of this committee we shall ever have.

Mr. SNELL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. These matters should go to the Committee on Rules ordinarily. The gentleman from Michigan spoke to me, as I know he spoke to the minority leader. This was of such an emergency nature that I thought it was a proper matter to be taken up under unanimous consent. I may state further, however, that I think very few matters fall within this exception.

Mr. SNELL. Just for the sake of argument, what is the emergency requiring such prompt consideration of this resolution?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] explain it to the gentleman from New York? I may say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Michigan explained it satisfactorily to me.

Mr. DINGELL. I may say to the gentleman from New York, the minority leader, that it is a question of public health. It is unwise to go into any very lengthy discussion as to what may or may not exist, but we do know that there is a very serious situation existing right in this very building relating to the plumbing. The less we discuss this matter the better off we shall all be.

We do know that the health of the Members of the House, the Senate, and of every visitor to the Capitol is or might be at stake. The health of employees and visitors in the Government buildings in the city of Washington is impaired or threatened because of the ancient and erroneous methods employed in the installation, repair, and maintenance of the plumbing system. Only since yesterday when this resolution was mentioned a certain cross-connection between sewage and drinking water was corrected in the Capitol.

Mr. SNELL. Let me ask the gentleman this one question: Are there any organizations in this city that are authorized and have the authority to make this investigation at this time without a special resolution by Congress—the health department, for instance?

Mr. DINGELL. No; the health department has no jurisdiction in the Federal buildings. My advice is that the Public Health Service can do this work of investigation without any cost to the Government. They have the necessary sanitary engineers and experts and can make the investigation in a relatively short time and report to the Architect of the Capitol as to what corrections should be made.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. COX. If I understand the resolution, it calls for a survey of all Government property throughout the entire country.

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; that is, a survey of the Federal buildings where the Public Health Service has a branch.

Mr. COX. That means the entire country, does it not?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes; but not necessarily every public building.

Mr. COX. What is the estimated cost of making this survey?

Mr. DINGELL. The Public Health Service at the present time has the experts possibly ready and waiting to do such a piece of work as is provided for in the resolution.

Mr. COX. There will be some expense?

Mr. DINGELL. This will be done without any expense. The Public Health Service have men in the Department for just such purpose.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be put in the position of doing anything that will jeopardize the health or lives of the Members of Congress or the people who visit Capitol Hill; but I am absolutely opposed to this method of carrying on the legislative action in the House. If the gentlemen insist on doing it this way, I shall have to yield to the majority, as I always have to; but, repeating what I said a while ago, I am opposed to this method.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute for the purpose of making a unanimous consent request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow marks the thirty-seventh anniversary of the declaration of war declared by the United States against the Kingdom of Spain. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes after the reading of the Journal, and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, and the previous order heretofore made on the subject of the Spanish-American War and the Spanish-American War veteran.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I understand that I have the privilege of addressing the House the first 10 minutes after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DISABLED PROVISIONAL OFFICERS

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an analysis and explanation of a bill which I introduced relative to provisional officers, the statement appearing in the Army and Navy Register.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the analysis and explanation of a bill which I introduced relative to provisional officers. This statement was published in the Army and Navy Register, as follows:

[From the Army and Navy Register of Apr. 20, 1935]

DISABLED PROVISIONAL OFFICERS

Bills are pending before the Congress, introduced by Senator SHEPPARD in the Senate and Representative THOMASON in the House, in the interest of disabled provisional officers.

The Senate bill (S. 2265) has been favorably reported to the Senate.

There has been filed with the committees a complete history of the situation confronting the provisional officers. The following is a summary of the facts presented:

There have been certain seemingly unjust or inequitable situations regarding disabled former provisional officers which may interest you at this particular time. The provisions of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act were formerly interpreted to include emergency officers with presumptive disabilities, as well as those whose records plainly indicated the disability was incurred in World War service. It is understood these provisions are now restricted to emergency officers with service-connected disabilities or rigid requirements in proof, under section 10, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, and Regulation No. 5 of Veterans' Administration.

From this point, however, and in furtherance of the above principle of theory, it should be noted in particular that there have been certain unintentional or inadvertent discrimination against officers who held provisional commissions in the Army when disabled. These men were in reality emergency officers. Although serving with the Regular Army, they were created by congressional act "to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States", approved May 18, 1917.

And in continuance of this same principle, at the conclusion of the emergency caused by the World War, the laws providing for provisional officers repealed and abolished on June 4, 1920 (Public, No. 242, 66th Cong.).

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs acknowledges this unjust situation in its favorable report (No. 479) on S. 2265, Seventy-fourth Congress, as follows: "The World War officers who would be affected by this measure are those who because of being neither Regular nor emergency officers have been unable to secure the benefits of either service through the Veterans' Administration. As pointed out previously by your committee, this situation is due to the fact that a number of officers were appointed provisional officers in 1917. These provisional officers continued to serve during the World War under such commissions, but rendering exactly the same service as any other commissioned officer. This measure is to correct an injustice and what was evidently an oversight in the writing of the act of May 24, 1928. The act of May 24, 1928, as written and administered has left these fully deserving ex-World War officers literally as men without status.

In the House Committee on Military Affairs a favorable hearing was given on legislation of this nature during Seventy-first Congress, second session (pp. 214–215, book of relief bills). Excerpts of this hearing by Representative MCSWAIN, now chairman of this committee, are as follows:

"Mr. MCSWAIN. You see, 2 years as trial is provisional, and the truth is this: That all the provisional officers were, in substance and in merit, emergency officers because the call for them was created for them by the emergency, and there would not have been any of them called; there would not have been any of them commissioned to begin with, except for the existence of the emergency. Technically, they were in the Regular Army, it is true.

"Mr. CONNERY. But really they belong to the disabled emergency officers.

"Mr. MCSWAIN. Really, they were emergency officers, not in the strict legal sense but in moral and substantial sense, it was the emergency that brought about the law authorizing the appointment of the provisional second lieutenant, to meet the emergency. Of course, if they made good, and the country needed them they would be given permanent commissions."

The War Department also indicated that the principles and conditions covering the World War service of emergency and provisional officers were identical then, as indicated in General Order No. 73, August 7, 1918:

"1. This country has but one Army—the United States Army. It includes all the land forces in the service of the United States. Those forces lose all their identity in that of the United States Army. Distinctive appellations, such as the Regular Army, Reserve Corps, National Guard, and National Army, heretofore employed in administration and command, will be discontinued, and the single term, 'the United States Army', will be used exclusively.

"4. All effective commissions purporting to be, and described therein as, commissions in the Regular Army, National Guard, National Army, or the Reserve Corps shall hereafter be held to be, as regarded as, commissions in the United States Army—permanent, provisional, or temporary—as fixed by the conditions of their issue; and all such commissions are hereby amended accordingly. Hereafter during the period of the existing emergency all commissions of officers shall be in the United States Army and in Staff Corps, departments, and arms of the service thereof, and shall, as the law may provide, be permanent, for a term, or for the period of the existing emergency. And hereafter during the period of the existing emergency, provisional and temporary appointments in the grade of second lieutenant, and temporary promotions in the Regular Army, and appointments in the Reserve Corps will be discontinued.

"5. While the number of commissions in each grade and in each Staff Corps, departments, and arm of the service shall be kept within the limits fixed by law, officers shall be assigned without reference to the term of their commissions solely in the interest of the service, and officers and enlisted men will be transferred from one organization to another as the interest of the service may require.

"6. Except as otherwise provided by law, promotion in the United States Army shall be by selection. Permanent promotion in the Regular Army will continue to be made as prescribed by law."

It is hardly logical to use the argument, which is often cited, that provisional officers had the advantages of certain provisions of the Regular Army, including retirement therein. Because after the World War, and in accordance with the principle contained in the above-mentioned General Order of the War Department, No. 73, many emergency officers were taken into the Regular Army with the higher rank which they held at that time, and they also, became entitled to all the advantages and provisions of the Regular Army, including retirement. Yet a provisional officer who served during the emergency, was not entitled to hold his higher rank, but had to revert to his lower and provisional rank, if taken into the Army permanently. And this permanent commission, like an emergency officer, could only be obtained if he had shown himself to be efficient during his provisional or temporary period. Many provisional officers refused higher commissions as Reserve or emergency officers (during the officers training camps) solely to further their chances of being assigned to a Regular Army unit, most of which were then or soon thereafter, at the front in France. And they have been penalized for following this advice in all classification and consideration since then.

The Regular Navy has no men in the same status of provisional or emergency officers because they were taken care of by that Department under Public, No. 243, Sixty-sixth Congress, second session: "That all officers of the Naval Reserve force and temporary officers (latter being equivalent of provisional officers of the Navy) of the Navy who have heretofore incurred or may hereafter incur physical disability in line of duty shall be eligible for retirement under the same conditions as now provided by law for officers of the Regular Navy who have incurred physical disability in the line of duty.

It has been ascertained certain officials of the War Department and the Veterans' Administration have authenticated, reviewed, and acknowledged that the disabilities of some of these officers were incurred during World War service, but that they could not be considered under existing regulations of those departments. They advised: (a) That a special act of Congress would be necessary; (b) that the Veterans' Administration be applied to for compensation (under the classification of an enlisted man) until the situation could be remedied by an act of Congress.

The Veterans' Administration, under existing regulations, have shown every consideration in authenticating, adjudging, and rating the disabilities of these officers as incurred during World War service.

This unfortunate situation, in which provisional officers find themselves without any proper or definite status, was due to a rather technical decision of the Comptroller General on February 28, 1929—to the effect that provisional officers were not eligible under the requirements of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act—an interpretation not foreseen nor contemplated in the original act of May 24, 1928.

An example of the inequalities caused by this decision follows:

Case A: Captain A entered the officers training camp in 1917 and was commissioned an emergency officer therefrom. On the following day he was tendered and accepted a commission in the Regular Army, and remained a Regular officer until he left the service as a captain in the Regular Army. In 1928 he was rated 30 percent permanent disability due to service in the Regular Army, and according to decision of the Comptroller General (A24496–A25514) was granted retired pay under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act.

Case B: Captain B was commissioned provisionally in the Regular Army in 1916. In 1917 he was granted an emergency commission as captain, his regular rank and commission remaining in abeyance until his discharge from emergency commission in 1920, when he reverted to his rank in the Regular Army. He was disabled in the service and honorably discharged in 1922 as captain, while his application for the Regular Army was pending. In 1928 he was rated 34 percent permanently disabled due to service, and he was granted compensation at the rate of $34 per month. Captain B is denied retirement.

The situation still exists at present—that these officers are barred from any classification or consideration as officers under current regulations of the War Department and the Veterans' Administration. By this it is meant, they have not been considered as officers, or they would be entitled to retirement as Regular or emergency officers. And to say the least, they have not even been considered as enlisted men, or they would necessarily be entitled to adjusted-compensation certificates.

Since the above-mentioned Comptroller General's decision, various bills have been discussed in the House and Senate Committees on Military Affairs because the need of this legislation has been acknowledged. Due to the pressure of other emergency legislation during the depression, final passage of a bill to remedy this condition, has not been successful to date. Senator SHEPPARD, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, introduced a bill, S. 1595, during the Seventy-third Congress, and it passed the Senate on April 25, 1934, but failed of action in the House of Representatives before adjournment. He has again introduced an identical bill, S. 2265, in the present session of Congress, and it has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. A similar bill, H. R. 7150, has been introduced by Representative THOMASON, of Texas, in the House of Representatives.

It has been suggested by those interested in this legislation that all former provisional officers now in civil life immediately communicate with their service organizations and representatives, as well as their Congressmen, toward the end that this legislation may be advanced to final enactment.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday a man by the name of Babcock appeared before a House committee attacking a law that bears my name, the law relating to employment of husband and wife. During the course of his testimony he accused Government employees of living together, ignoring a wedding ceremony.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes to answer the statement made by this man Babcock who claims to speak for Government employees but who I know does not properly express their views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, the message sent broadcast yesterday in the form of testimony before a House committee by E. Claude Babcock, president of the American Federation of Government Employees, to the effect that due to the law affecting the employment of husband and wife, which provides that when a reduction in force is ordered, either the husband or wife must leave the service before an employee is dismissed where both husband and wife are not employed, was causing employees to lead immoral lives, was an insult to every single man and woman in the Government service and should not go unchallenged.

Babcock pictured girls coming to Washington who, without the protection of a home, soon find themselves in love, and fearing dismissal if married, agree to live together as husband and wife, simply overlooking marriage. Such a statement is, in my opinion, insidious camouflage. If couples are living together as he says, it is not because of the law Babcock would repeal, for if the inclination was there, all the laws that could be enacted would not prevent it nor would the repeal of any law be the cure. Where one such case might be found, you will find thousands of ladies, young and old, in the Government service too honorable to even think of being a party to such a condition. In their name I resent his statement.

I wonder if Mr. Babcock has given thought to the mental anguish he has caused, not only to the ladies employed by the Government but to their families back home. Can he not picture the mother back home on her knees praying to the good Lord to protect her girl and guard her against such a situation? Men have been tarred and feathered in this country for saying less about honorable women than Babcock said yesterday. Unless he cites specific instances, his is a general indictment.

I want now to send a message back home, not only to the mothers, but to the other relatives and friends of the women employed here. I say to them, that while a case might be found here and there, such a condition might be found any place in the land, the mothers and friends can rest assured that if it does exist there are only a few and that your daughter and your friend is leading a proper life. To stoop so low as Babcock did in order to secure the passage of legislation is inexcusable.

Babcock should be removed from the office he holds for slandering the good men and women employed in the Government service, and I hope the women will have the courage to resent his statements, even if the men do not.

Babcock looks at but one side of the picture. He would, if a reduction in force was necessary, be willing to see the man who has a wife and five children at home furloughed, while both a husband and wife would be retained. My viewpoint is that it is better to have earning power in two homes, even though the income be reduced in one, than to have all the earning power in one home and no earning power in the other.

There are around a million employees in the Government service, and Babcock speaks the view of but a few—those who have a selfish interest and who might, when a reduction is ordered, be furloughed.

Yes, the law does affect the merit system, but not in the way Babcock would have you believe. If one of the married persons holding key positions in the Government were furloughed, there would be a chance for advancement for the worker whose spouse is not employed by the Government.

I have plenty of information on this subject, which will be used at the proper time, if necessary. With millions of our constituents out of employment and on the relief rolls you can rest assured this law will not be repealed. On the contrary, what the Congress should do is to put teeth in it.

Babcock has in no way helped the organization he represents. [Applause.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7672) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 8 hours, the debate already had upon yesterday and the debate that is to follow to be balanced and divided equally between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] and myself.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire how much time the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] has consumed and how much time we have consumed over here?

The SPEAKER. Is the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] for 8 hours in addition to what has been heretofore used?

Mr. CARY. My request is for 8 hours in addition, but the time is to be balanced as between the two sides. We on this side have used more time than the gentleman from Michigan; therefore he will have more time out of the additional 8 hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARY] has consumed 2 hours and 29 minutes, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLEOD] has consumed 1 hour and 36 minutes.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7672, with Mr. McCORMACK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, when I arrived in the Chamber yesterday there certainly were evidences of considerable excitement. We were informed that the stage was all set and that we were to be treated to an administration speech castigating New England, to be delivered by the "lord high executioner" of the Democratic Party, the overnight great exponent of the textile industry, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

In his customary forceful manner, he read a carefully prepared and vituperative sectional address directed against my part of the country. He then flattered me with a personal reference, calling me the "Jeremiah of New England", although I am known in my district as the greatest of all optimists and I find, as I consult my scrapbook, that I am frequently referred to as even a bit of a humorist. I am extremely sorry that this has not dawned upon the conscience of some of my real Democratic friends on the other side of the aisle.

While the fact cannot be gainsaid that Jeremiah was a prophet of misfortunes, he was a true and not a false prophet. And the Lord spoke with him. On one occasion very early in his story we find these words:

> And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, "What seest thou?" And I said, "I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is toward the north."

Certainly that prophecy was fulfilled yesterday.

Well, I am willing to accept the role and will paraphrase another of Jeremiah's remarks. "Turn, O backsliding children of Israel." Turn, O backsliding children of Jefferson and the other great Democratic prophets of former days. Unless you do, there will indeed be wailing and gnashing of teeth in 1936 and great lamentations for the mistakes which have been made and the betrayal of the faith which has occurred. How long must this land mourn and the herbs of the field wither—or be plowed under—because of the wickedness of those who dwell therein? The beasts and swine are consumed, also. Behold the children of Democracy straying from the path pointed out to them by their fathers, to worship the false alphabets of the "brain trust."

Oh, how unfortunate, how disheartening to the textile industry that speech was; disheartening, surely, even to the industry in his own State. Can anyone think that he represented the real thought of the great textile industry therein? Certainly it, too, is suffering equally from the devastating effects of this processing tax.

Let it be fully understood that at no time has a Representative from New England fought against this tax with the purpose of taking away any of the advantages that might accrue to the farmer therefrom. We constantly read in the newspapers of New England that its people rejoice in any benefits that the farmer can secure and that they have even criticized but little the payment of a bonus to farmers for not raising cotton. We merely desire that this money be paid to agriculture out of something in the nature of a general tax and not a super sales tax levied upon a few selected commodities.

New England has needed the benefit of a tariff in order to compete in something like equal footing with foreign industries. The processing tax is not for this purpose primarily. It is rather a purely experimental method of endeavoring to help the farmers to realize at least the cost of production. In the scathing speech of the gentleman from North Carolina few facts were presented which were not fully understood before, but it displayed the animus which has existed so long and been so often expressed toward my own section of the country.

The housewife who buys pork at 35 cents a pound will be heard from sooner or later, and then you will understand what I mean by a super sales tax put on a few selected articles and perhaps be ready to listen to the Jeremiah, Senator GEORGE, whose voice was raised in the Senate the other day and whose amendment, which provided that this fee might be taken from the $5,000,000,000 that is to be raised by a general taxation program in the future, was adopted. We all know the answer that was made to him by the administration.

At no time have we claimed, as the gentleman tried to assert, that the processing tax is the whole cause, or even the principal cause, of the troubles now affecting the entire textile industry. The devaluation of the dollar, which sent prices of cotton from 6 cents to 11 cents, plus the N. R. A. costs, which added perhaps 5 cents more, are also contributing factors. Then the processing tax was added, providing the final straw. To raise the price of a commodity artificially more than 100 percent in so short a time was bound to create a sales resistance which has resulted in overloaded stocks on hand and a necessary curtailment in production, resulting in unemployment. This situation must be felt almost as acutely in the mills of North Carolina as in those of New England.

The gentleman tried to explain or excuse this tax by telling you yesterday how very little this added to the cost of material per yard, but he could not confuse anyone, for even his own constituents know that the price of overalls and all cotton fabrics has been nearly doubled during the past 2 years.

At no time have we claimed that this tax was even the main trouble, but we do claim that this is the one thing left to this Congress where we, as a legislative body, can effect relief and, perhaps, remove this last straw which has had the effect of creating a tremendous sales resistance to the products of this industry. So do not say that we have laid too much stress on this one thing. Far from it. At these various meetings to which the gentleman referred many other matters were freely and frankly discussed as creating serious difficulties in the carrying on of this industry.

The gentleman demanded to know why we have been unable to keep our mills in New England. He threw that ques-
